During the week 10 open air meetings were held. The most interesting meeting took place at North and California Aves. The Single Taxers were out with a banner labelled "Single Tax will raise wages," and tried to capture the crowd, but soon the Socialists were pounding questions at them and making a laughing stock out of them. Next Sunday we hope they will be out again, so we will have some more fun, as Comrade Wilshire of Los Angeles will be there to speak.

On Saturday the first successful meeting was held at Carpenter and Milwaukee Avenues. Comrade Collins and B. Williams were the speakers. Seven Call Cards were sold by Comrade W. Chocky.

The meeting at Paulina and Milwaukee and Homer and Milwaukee were well attended, showing the growing interest in socialism on the West Side.

A deeply interested audience listened to Comrade W. H. Wise last Saturday evening at the Socialist Temple.

The debate between A. M. Skanes and Mr. Clemens on the subject: "Is Single Tax the solution of the Labor Problem?" was altogether too one-sided to stir up any interest. Mr. Clemens not being able to present his own ideas in a lucid manner.

The Women's meeting brought out a good many women to listen to Miss Lindstrom and Comrade Collins. Announcements for the week: The Sunday School is adjourned for the Summer.

Sunday, 10 a. m.—Organizers meeting.
Sunday, 10 a. m.—West Side Socialist Baseball team meet for practice at 6th and Lake Avenues.

Sunday, 8 p. m.—Comrade Gaylord Wilshire of Los Angeles speaks at the Temple.

Don't forget the entertainment of the Socialist Orchestra at the Socialist Temple Saturday, June 23, 8 p. m. Tickets 25 cents.

On Sunday, July 7th, 3 p. m., there will be a parade of the German Socialist Singing Societies of the North Western States. In order to make this a socialist demonstration the party is invited to participate. The West Division will meet at the Temple at 11:30 p. m. and will form in line at 1 o'clock to meet the Main Division at Madison and Market Sts. Every Ward organization should take part in this parade.

THE WORKERS' CALL.

Owned, every Sunday, by J. M. Clark, Jr., Chicago, Ill., at 1111 North Dearborn street, at the corner of the Chicago River.

The Workers' Call is published for and under the control of the Chicago Federation of Labor, a corporation without capital stock, the whole ownership of which must be composed of workingmen.

Subscription rates: One year, $1.00; Six months, $0.60; Three months, $0.30. Single copies, 10 cents. To European countries, per annum, $2.00. Special rates if ordered by the hundred. Orders for current issues should reach the office by Tuesday evening.

Advertisements: A limited number of acceptable advertisements will be accepted. Rates will be made known upon application.

EDITORIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

To secure the return of names of contributors, please send the names of contributors to the office of the Workers' Call, 1111 North Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., by Tuesday evening, June 22, 1901. The names of contributors will be published in the Workers' Call, and will be used as evidence of good faith.

National Metal Trades association has decided to introduce piecework. The I. A. M. has consistently opposed it upon the ground that it tends to reduce the rate. On the other hand, the employers state that they are only introducing it in order to enable the "best men" to earn "more money." To restore harmony they evidently consider that "piece at any price" is essential.

A French deputy named Laur is about to inaugurate a campaign against trusts in order to prevent their growth in France. He expects to be elected on an anti-trust platform. Somebody should send this misguided individual a few copies of the Commonsense as a "horrible example" of the fate that awaits those who devote their energies to fighting the "octopus."

Sunday baseball was prohibited by the authorities at Yonkers, N. Y., and the game was accordingly stopped. An attempt to deal similarly with golf was unsuccessful. In one instance a party of golfers started operations on the ground where a baseball team had just been dispersed and two of its members arrested by the police. They were not molested. The police force is intelligent enough to understand that the class who patronize golf are not to be trifled with. Even in sport the class line is distinctly marked.

Dispatches from Japan state that Socialist agitation has reached the point where the Japanese government, which like that of every other country, is the government of the capitalist class, has taken the alarm. As usual suppression of Socialist newspapers is the first step taken by the ruling class, and two journals which published the manifesto of the Socialist party have been suspended. One of them, however, defies the government, and still publishes the prohibited document. The authorities have refused to permit the organization of a Socialist party, but such refusal as a rule don't amount to much, as the organization will take place secretly, as it has in other countries in similar cases.

The international diplomatic corps in session at Pekin, rejected the proposal of the American Government, that the indemnity claims of the allied powers against China should be reduced in amount. It is not thought likely that the authorities in Washington will regard this rejection as an unfriendly act to be repaid to by a demonstration of force. The ingratitude displayed by the Chinese and Filipinos in return for the blessings bestowed upon them by our capitalist government has learned our rulers the lesson that philanthropy doesn't always pay, especially where other powerful capitalist communities are also entitled to bestow their bounty upon the victim.

Some weeks ago we called attention to the fact that the Standard Oil Co. was apparently taking no steps to secure property in the Beaumont Texas oil fields. They were directing their attention solely to the purchase of wharfage facilities in Port Arthur, the nearest and most convenient shipping port for the transportation of the oil. Already a line of Standard Oil tank steamers is being operated for this purpose while Rockefeller's agents are busily developing the South Eastern Texas oil fields, and the business manager of Rockefeller's Pittsburgh plant has been transferred to Beaumont and Port Arthur. In about two or three weeks at most we may expect to hear that the Standard Oil Co. is in complete control, while the collective fortunes of the "small investors" will go to compose part of a "magnificent donation" to one or other of the numerous Rockefeller's pet educational institutions.

One Joseph Marobec has been recently censured in Justice Gable's court for attempting to support himself, wife and two children on a sum of three cents per day. This misfortune is due to the fact that the thrifty Marobec doesn't read the daily papers. Had he done so, he would have learned that reformer Gossard, who is an undoubted authority on thrift, has stated explicitly that the task he set himself required at the lowest possible estimate, a daily expenditure of at least four cents. It is only necessary to add that the fact that Marobec is the owner of two farms worth several thousand dollars, proves clearly that thrift, even if carried to excess, is still a virtue. Now if every workman were to follow his example (of course not so closely as to invite the intervention of the law) would it not be certain that they could eventually become property owners? What one man can do all can do if they only try. But it is necessary to take at least one capitalist daily paper as a guide to the proper degree of thrift, as by neglecting this precaution Marobec has been condemned to pay a sum of $3 weekly to his wife and children, an item which will no doubt severely handicap him in his future efforts to accumulate property. Penny wise and pound foolish is undoubtedly a losing policy, but nevertheless thrift is still a virtue.

GLAD TO KNOW IT.

The Paris Figaro has been kind enough to "warn the tyrannical French Socialists that they are becoming intolerable," a warning which will doubtless be received as an unsolicited tribute to the growth of the class conscious movement, by the so-called "tyrants." The Figaro is correct. Socialism is intolerable to capitalism, and conversely, capitalism is intolerable to Socialism. Socialist activity in breaking up "political reunions" of the exploiting class is given as the reason for this "warning" in question, and just because these "reunions" cannot be carried out, the French capitalists can no longer invest their capital with safety in France, having been compelled to "place" three billion francs abroad during the past few weeks. This is the situation that the Figaro rightly describes as "intolerable." And what is still worse the capitalists can find no spot on earth for their investments where they are not threatened with the same danger from socialism. In a very few years the leading capitalist journals of many other countries, besides France will be compelled to re-echo the complaint of the Figaro, and recognize that an ever increasing number of "tyrants" do not regard the world as being merely a happy hunting ground for the capitalist class.

GRIEVED AND ASTONISHED.

Not a week goes by, that some worthy citizens are "startled" or "shocked" or "thrilled with horror" by some individual who is indiscreet enough to tell them facts which they cannot but know, but which they don't like to hear. The delegates to the Y. M. C. A. convention in Boston have been the latest victims of this objectionable practice and have not yet recovered from the "sensation" produced by a speaker who stated that the Darwinian theory is now accepted as a working basis by every reputable biologist and sociologist throughout the world. At once a lively discussion ensued over this, to them, exceedingly novel proposition, one of these modern Hipp Van Winkles wanting to know from the speaker, how it was possible for God to make an ape with a soul or develop a man from a soulless ape. There was no reply, however, to this very lucid inquiry.

It is hardly possible to conceive the magnitude of the humbug, cant and hypocrisy with which modern religious societies such as the Y. M. C. A. are saturated. It might seem almost incredible that a body of men claiming an ordinary acquaintance with the scientific thought of the world, should be utterly ignorant of the plain and simple facts which were laid before them regarding the universally accepted hypotheses of organic evolution. Had it been one of the most recent scientific theories their surprise and indignation would have at least been natural. But that a theory which has been announced more than forty years ago, that has met and conquered all opposition, should evoke at this day exclamations of surprise and dissent leads inevitably to either of two alternative conclusions, viz: that the parties in question are either fossilized ignoramus or consummate hypocrites, with the odds in this case in favor of the latter.

The lecturer who declared that "marking had descended from apes and probably had not come very far" must have had in mind a body of individuals bearing a strong mental resemblance to the delegates of the Y. M. C. A. convention in Boston.

THE ONE THING MINDFUL.

Less than four weeks intervene before the date set for the annual Workers' Call picnic falls due, and under these circumstances we feel again obliged to call the attention of the comrades to the necessity of disposing of the largest possible amount of tickets for the occasion. The financial success of the picnic will be to a very large extent reflected in the vigor with which the summer and fall campaign will be carried on, and the disposal of the tickets is in this sense, as important a method of propaganda as any other.

While money for direct Socialist propaganda must as a rule be supplied by those interested in socialism, the sale of these tickets need not be confined to Socialists alone, and therefore there should be less difficulty in their disposal. A buyer who may be a non-Socialist will receive the full value of his money in the pleasure provided, and will also have an opportunity to observe for himself what manner of people the Socialists really are, and such observation often opens the way to securing new converts by dispelling prejudice, where perhaps direct methods of propaganda might fail.

All that can possibly be done to make the day as enjoyable as possible is being arranged for by the management committee, who may be depended upon to see that nothing is neglected in that respect. It remains therefore with the party members who have undertaken the sale of tickets to assure the complete success of the event, by sending a crowd larger than ever before through the gates of Gardner's Park picnic grounds on the 14th of July next.

CAPITALISM A BURDEN.

There is scarcely a corner of the industrial field where the solidarity of capital is not being shown. Everywhere the bosses are living up in solid phalanxes to secure the continued slavery of the workers. It is announced that the employers of the striking machinists stand ready to expend $500,000 to break up the I. A. M. All the powers of the state are being whipped into line at a rate never before attempted. As capitalist organs and employers had for years denied the existence of a black-list, the Chicago packing houses have at last not only boldly avowed its existence but have had a judge declare it legal. At the same time an Ohio judge shows whose dog he is, by giving the logical mate to this decision, by enjoining the workmen from either enforcing a boycott or in any way assisting each other while out on strike.

At first sight some silly laborers thought these decisions contradictory, but they overlooked the fact that it is one of the great and fundamental principles of the law that it is always consistent. The only trouble was they did not look in the proper direction for the consistency. The decisions were in absolute accord with each other, and the basis of all our present laws and institutions, on the point that the present relation of wage slavery and exploitation must be maintained at all hazards. In exact accord with both of these is the decision of the courts in Columbia, S. C., that the system of negro slavery in that state is perfectly legal. It will be recalled that this is the system under which the negroes are shut up in stockades, run down by bloodhounds and whipped for not obeying the master's whip. When this was first discovered there were barrets of "indignation" shed over it in the capitalist press and whole hymns of thanks rose that it had at last been "discovered" and would now be "slamped out." The judge, (who was then powerless to affect the system), indulged in some high-sounding rhetorical denunciation which sounded fine in the columns of the daily press. Now the case has been actually tried and the published reports tell us that "There were cases of fathers sending their sons and daughters to these stockades to work out their debt. There were also several instances of men being kidnapped, captured in one county and even in Georgia, and taken to the convict camps." But it was hoped that all these negroes had signed contracts giving their masters the right to look them up and fog them, and as the "incredulous of free contract" even when that contract was the only alternative to death, must not be infringed, the system was declared to be legal.

Meanwhile the great example of the "union of capital and labor," the Dayton Cash Register company, is branding every energy to insist on the complete enslavement of its men. It is willing to be a good boss and see that its slaves are well washed and fed and amused, (in consideration of millions of dollars of free advertising), but it insists that the fact of their slavery be recognized. Another straw floating in the same direction is seen in the fact that the places of striking machinists are being taken by students just from the mechanical colleges. The I. A. M. has forwarded a communication to President Angell of Ann Arbor university declaring that they "protest most strenuously that the funds of the state should be used to educate the sons of well-to-do families to take our place when we are making an effort to place labor in a position to have and use more of the leisure which the modern industrial system, if properly adjusted, provides that it should enjoy." But while all the powers of government are in the control of the bosses, and the members of the I. A. M. declare by their votes that they think these powers ought to remain there, they should not while these powers are used to educate scabs, declare injunctions, legalize blacklists, shoot strikers or re-establish chattel slavery, or do whatever will advance the cause of profits.

DON'T MISS THIS!

Comrade H. Gaylord Wilshire of Los Angeles, Cal., editor of the "Challenge" will speak at North and California, av., on Sunday June 23 at 3 p. m., and at the Socialist Temple 120 S. Western av., same evening at 8. Also at Clark st. and Walton place on the following day at 8 p. m.

From International Bureau.

The following letter is addressed to the members of the International Socialist Bureau:

Brussels, May 20, 1901.

Dear Comrade! Your friends of the executive committee have been delighted with some propositions made by some of you, among them a suggestion to hold in the near future a meeting of the International Bureau in Brussels. They suggest that this meeting be held at the end of July, and request that you inform them of your opinion on this point.

This meeting is indispensable. The question should be settled in a precise manner, as to what the secretariat is authorized to do without having recourse to a referendum or to a meeting of the members of the bureau; the question what the bureau can do on short notice.

The order of the day will be: 1. Report of the secretary. 2. The English delegation. 3. Collection of dues. 4. Creation of an International Bulletin. 5. Organization of traveling funds to Belgian Socialists. 6. International Socialist meetings for protection against militarism (France). 7. Communications.

If you think that other questions could be useful objects of consideration for your colleagues, please inform us immediately.

We beg the delegates of the different nationalities to remit by postal money order, their quota to the expenses of the bureau to Comrade H. Ansele, Rue du Jambon, Genet. Only Germany and Belgium have so far remitted their dues.

We inform you that while waiting for a possibility to publish an international bulletin, we shall publish in "Le Peuple," the organ of the PARTI OUVRIER BELGE, the most important communications received by us, the knowledge of which we shall regard as useful to the socialist world. We shall send you a copy of this bulletin.

With the expression of fraternal feelings.

EMILE VANDERVELDE.

EDOUARD ANSELE, Treas.

VICTOR SERVY, Sec'y.

Prove Their Competency.

That the "better classes" amongst the Cubans have acquired a few valuable pointers on government from their association with the U. S. is very evident from the manner in which they are discussing the question of universal suffrage. One of the delegates favors it and gives as a reason, that he knows that the local bosses will control in any case, and that "by having universal suffrage the people will be content but they will exercise no real power." Another, a so-called "Radical," gives his opinion as follows:

"Better leave that question alone, as ways can be found to prevent the negroes and other illiterate portions of the population from voting."

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

This "daily hint from Paris," on June 12th announces that the council general of the Seine for the first time, elected a socialist as president of the body. Many "hints" of a similar nature may be looked for in the "near future."

Another local record has been broken. The roll of delinquent tax payers for Cook county exceeds by 2,900 the largest previous list, but this of course by no means indicates that "prosperity" is a fiction. It is "prosperity"—in the hands of the petty capitalist—that more justly deserves that appellation.

And now it is the king of Italy who is whistling to keep his courage up. He doesn't think that the socialists would be mean enough to put him out of the royalty business in the event of their coming into control and tries to square himself by declaring that he appreciates the values of their social and economic policy. Even if this illusion must be dispelled, the socialists will in any event guarantee him a steady job and let him have all he produces by his labor. The young man should be able to see that this is considerably better than allowing him to pose as a king on the same terms. The socialists know he would starve to death in such case.

An excellent illustration of "reform" may be seen in a recent incident connected with the "leaves." Several business houses having located in an unwholesome street on the borders of that district, have been successful in having the name of the street in question changed. They did not want to print the name "Pacific Avenue" on their business stationery and in consequence it will through their efforts be known in future as La Salle Street. Commenting upon this, the celebrated local statesman Hinky Dink is quoted as asserting that "changing the name of a street is the biggest kind of a reform measure," and as it was no less a person than himself that was employed by the aforesaid "business men" to get the name of the City Council in changing the name, he may justly claim a prominent place in the ranks of the "reformers."

The papers report that wholesale frauds, whose extent will probably reach into hundreds of thousands of dollars, have been discovered in the Quartermaster's and Commissary Departments in San Francisco. Army stores intended for the extermination of the Philippine insurgents, have been looted in enormous quantities and in many cases have been advertised for sale in the daily papers of that city. Some members of the usual "investigating committee" declare that they are on the "track of a great scandal" while others assert that the entire matter is merely a series of petty thefts which have been going on for over a year. There is after all nothing strange in the fact that materials intended for purposes of plunder should be subjected to the same process before reaching their destination.

It is evident that the sale of political and economic gold bricks to the farmers of this country is becoming increasingly difficult. Last week "Corn King" Phillips, the successful Board of Trade "operator" visited Minneapolis for the purpose of impressing his views upon a national convention of farmers which was in session in that city. His idea was to propound a scheme by which the farmers themselves could manipulate a "perpetual corner" in wheat for their own interests. There "are about thirty in the audience instead of the thousands that were expected. It seems pretty safe to assert that the farmers are possessed of sufficient brains to understand that a successful speculator in corn could hardly be expected to suggest any scheme which would make fortunes for Board of Trade "operators" impossible. When the time comes that the farmer receives the full product of his toil "Corn Kings" of the Phillips type will be as scarce as hen's teeth.

Another "startling" discovery has been made by the Board of Assessors. They have unearthed an awful discrepancy in the personal property schedule of a "prominent citizen" which set forth that the figure of $11,000 covered his entire worldly possessions. It has now come to their knowledge that the said prominent citizen has nearly $100,000, deposited in a New York bank, of which no mention was made in the modest schedule, and which has escaped taxation up to the present. This instance, the assessors say, is only one of many similar cases, and they claim that it is not the poor taxpayers against whom precautions must be taken, but the men of reputed wealth who will not make a fair return on their holdings. It is worthy of notice however that the name of the delinquent has not been made public, but the assessors have long ago learned the value of discretion in dealing with men of "reputed wealth" especially those who have several millions to conceal.

West Side Socialists should not fail to attend the Grand Concert and Ball which will be given in the Socialist Temple, 120 S. Western Avenue, on Saturday evening, June 22nd, at 8 p. m. Tickets 25 cents. Refreshments served.

Subsiders for a place tract comprising twenty-eight manufacturing in New York City, One Brunenberg, a New York promoter, has arrived in Chicago to secure the co-operation of local manufacturers. He says the combination will go through all right and he doubtless knows where he speaks.

"HONORARIUM"

Two Want Ads. Illustrating the Value Placed Upon Productive and Unproductive Labor.

Press dispatches from London report the appearance of the following advertisement in the London Times of June 12th.

"An American gentleman desires the services of an English lady of title as chaperon for his daughter during a three months' visit to England. Honorarium, $25,000."

It is very probable that most of the wage slaves who supplied the wherewithal to enable this "gentleman" to make the above offer, have a hearty contempt for aristocratic titles, which is not shared by their employer. There must be something radically wrong with the idea that the members of a titled aristocracy are useless parasites, when a shrewd American capitalist values the "services" of one of them (and a woman at that) for 3 months only, at $25,000. A great deal also depends upon the wording of an advertisement. It would be rather difficult to imagine the "gentleman" in question putting an advertisement in an American newspaper, running something like this:

WANTED—300 laborers immediately to produce by their labor, wealth amounting to $25,000 so that the advertiser may secure the services of an English lady of title as chaperon for his daughter for a term of three months. Job will last at least until the above sum has been produced. No mental qualifications required from applicants, but muscle indispensable. Usual honorarium, $1.50 per diem. Come early and avoid the rush.

Apply E. T. E. Never saw an advertisement worded in this manner, did you? No. Well try a pair of socialist spectacles and you will discover not only many ads similar to the above, but also the fact that you were not able to read before procuring these valuable glasses. Make a start by subscribing for a socialist paper. You can have one delivered regularly every week for a period of one year for the small "honorarium" of 50 cents.

BOOK REVIEWS.

KARL MARX: BIOGRAPHICAL MEMOIRS, by Wilhelm Liebknecht. Translated by E. Untermyer. Cloth 125 p. 50 cents. Chas. H. Kerr & Co. Publishers, 16-5th Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

As a general rule Socialists have been and still are more concerned with the productions of those who have made lasting contributions to the literature of the movement, than with the personality of the writer, and there is little doubt but that this is as it should be. Nevertheless it cannot be denied that to those who have made themselves to some measure familiar with the political and economic views of Marx, this biographical sketch will prove highly interesting. It is impossible for the student of the "Communist Manifesto" and "Das Kapital" to avoid the conclusion that he has been brought in contact with an exceedingly powerful intellect, and further curiosity as to the manner of man the writer was, is inadequately excusable. The name of Liebknecht appearing as the author of these memoirs is to the Socialist a sufficient guarantee both of a faithful portrayal of the subject and literary excellence combined, and a perusal of the work will fully justify these expectations. Up till the present time comparatively little of Marx as an individual has been accessible to the English speaking and reading public, but Professor Untermyer's excellent translation has at length placed such information within reach of all. Curious glimpses of the mode of life pursued by the little band of German exiles in London between 46 and 50 years ago, are given. The domestic life of Marx and his family, his peculiarities, likes and dislikes, his capacity for work, his amusements, his ability as a teacher etc. are sketched with an impartial hand by his old friend and comrade Liebknecht, who spent many years of the London exile in the closest intimacy with the subject of his biography. The book itself is the first of a series issued by Kerr & Co., to be known as the Standard Socialist Series, a different number appearing quarterly. Binding and typographical work are of good quality and there is little doubt but that the series will be a valuable addition to socialist literature in the English language though it is questionable if the succeeding numbers will surpass the first as interesting and entertaining reading matter.

Women's Meetings.

The Ladies' Auxiliary of the Socialist party held a very successful meeting in Veit's Hall on last Saturday, a very large audience being present, mostly women. The speakers were Miss Ellen Lindstrom and Comrade T. J. Morgan, the former of whom took for subject, "What Unionism Has Done for Women," and handled the theme in a remarkably interesting manner. The next speaker gave a discourse on "Women's Position in Society," which was listened to with great attention by those present. A lively discussion followed the address, in which a large number of the audience participated. The question of the necessity for a union amongst domestic female servants received a good deal of attention, most of these present approving heartily of the idea.

Socialist Pointers

Less than a month is left in which to sell picnic tickets.

The times are so prosperous that the Buffalo exposition threatens not to pay expenses.

The king of Italy is the latest convert to socialism but it is probably a most harmless kind.

No matter how much Mr. Bryan might wish to reform things what could he do with such a party as the democratic?

Trade union leaders are not going to make capitalists feel bad, no matter what they may so long as they do not talk socialism.

Socialists are said to be driving capital out of France, but as brains and muscle remain, there is no danger that the people will starve.

The rich gamblers will probably notify the governor in some way that the law against pool selling is not to be enforced as to them.

Socialism believes in vested rights, but it argues that each man who is born has a vested right in the earth and the fullness thereof.

In all the list of suicides you never read of one that happened because the victim of his hands had too much money or too desirable a job.

Porto Rico has become Americanized to the extent that what the rich think constitutes public sentiment, and what the poor think doesn't count.

It is part of the program to make the college graduate think that by starting at $4 a week and working faithfully he can develop into a Rockefeller.

"Bobbie" Burke is getting ready to make the workmen of Chicago a part of the Carter Harrison presidential boom. Will they stand for it?

Scenes around Fort Sheridan on pay day show that it is not an altogether self-respecting set of men who take up the trade of war as a profession.

Just because a man does not know what class he belongs to is not proof there are no classes. Just let him try to break into another class and see.

Of course John D. Rockefeller would not meet the representatives of union labor, if he paid out all of his money for wages he could not endow colleges.

The Kansas farmers are again howling for farm hands. Why don't we all drop out that way at an expense of about $30 to get 16 hours a day work for a few days?

The manager of the telephone company has provided a lunch for the central girls. If they think he is not going to get it back out of them let them just watch him.

John D. Rockefeller did not write out a check for the Workers' Call while in Chicago and as in the past the paper must depend on those who believe in socialism.

The opposition can always be depended on to supply enough "immediate demands" to do the entire country, so we can afford to pass them up and make socialism our immediate demand.

Rockefeller has too much money to pay any attention to labor unions. When he can call on the United States troops to protect his scabs why should he bother with wailing delegates?

The theologians should not be in such haste to abolish hell. Some places should be provided for stockholders of the cotton mills in the South where little girls work 14 hours for ten cents.

It is surprising how many papers that formerly ignored socialism now take an occasional whack at it. Just how much good they are doing by advising the cases they don't know, or they would keep still.

It is too bad about the troubles of the rich which the Chicago American is picturing from day to day. Does it expect the poor man to take pity on the rich man and offer to trade places?

The capitalist press has warned the socialists of France that they have grown intolerable. This is very sad considering the fact that the only thing France can do is to tolerate them.

The inventor who assisted Elias Howe to perfect the sewing machine has just died in the poorhouse. One of the stock arguments is that socialism would not protect inventors in the fruits of their inventions.

How very immaterial the council traction committee considers the proposition which it is claimed will enable immediate municipal ownership? There would only be glory in settling the question that way.

When the servant girls' union is well organized the servant girl problem will be one for the female economist. Herebefore from the talk one would have thought there was but one side to the question.

Unity Proposals Criticized.

Comrades Harriman and Moilly Give Their Views on the Plan Advocated by Comrade Strobel of New Jersey.

Editor of the Worker.

A circular letter entitled, "Real Socialist Unity Suited to American Conditions," and signed by Comrade G. H. Strobel, was brought to my notice today. In looking over the file of The Worker I find the same propositions accompanied by more elaborate comments, with same signature attached. It is most important that this proposed plan for unity should be carefully considered, inasmuch as it may prepare the way for real division, instead of "real unity." However worthy the intentions of the author may have been, I am persuaded that his "real unity" plan, if adopted, would develop a war between the existing factions that would end only with the death of the organizations themselves.

Stripping the plan of all the good wishes, employed both to introduce and to gloss it, we will not find it difficult to discern why discord would follow its adoption. The plan is as follows:

"1. That the respective Socialist organizations elect a national committee to consist of one member from each state and territory, except as hereinafter provided."

"2. Where in any given state there shall be two or more independent Socialist parties, they shall each be entitled to one member upon said national committee."

"3. Each state shall have one vote."

"4. Where there are more than one representative from any given state, the one vote of that state shall be cast in a fractional part by each representative, based upon the number of members in the organization represented by him."

"5. Upon the election of such representative their names and addresses shall be forwarded to ———, and upon twenty or more states complying herewith a meeting of the said national committee shall be called at such time and place as the committee may determine."

"6. The said Socialist parties so represented shall cease to exist as independent national organizations, and become merged into this organization, representing the Socialist movement in the United States."

"7. Complete state autonomy is hereby guaranteed."

It will be observed that Paragraph 1 provides "that the respective Socialist organizations shall elect one national committee." Is it not clear that this committee shall be composed of members from the different Socialist organizations? This proposition merges the national committees, but it does not merge the state organizations; nor does the author intend by his "real unity" plan to merge the existing factions into one party.

This fact is made clear in Paragraph 2, by the following language: "Where in any given state there shall be TWO OR MORE INDEPENDENT SOCIALIST PARTIES they shall be ENTITLED TO ONE MEMBER EACH." etc. Here we have a plan for two or more independent Socialist political parties in each state.

Paragraph 6 provides for continuing these separate state organizations, as follows: "The said Socialist parties so represented shall cease to exist as independent NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS and become merged into one organization." The reader will perceive that the Socialist parties shall cease to exist as independent NATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS but NOT A WORD is breathed about their ceasing to exist as state organizations, but provision is actually made for the continuation of "independent" state organizations.

This fact is brought out in Paragraphs 3 and 4 as follows: "Each state shall have one vote." This looks like "real unity," but Paragraph 4 dispels the illusion: "Where there is more than one representative from any given state, the one vote of that state shall be cast in a fractional part by each representative, based upon the number of members in the organization represented by him." Thus we have as many representatives from each state as there are Socialist factions in that state, each with a different voting power. There is not one word, however, suggesting the intention, in this "real unity" plan, providing for merging the state organizations. Paragraph 1 provides that "Complete state autonomy is hereby guaranteed." Permanent state division is the foundation for discord and not unity. It is "real unity" to have one national executive committee in the nation. But it is not "real unity" to have one state committee in each state! Union nationally and factions locally—this is "Real Socialist Unity" on the American plan! There being no further doubt that the plan provides for the continuation of the several factions in the states, let us inquire into the logical and inevitable results of such a plan.

Political parties are creatures of the laws of each state. There is so much thing as a national political party in the eyes of the law. Official standing is gained in each state as a state party and never in the nation as a national party. Hence, if we maintain separate organizations in each state, we maintain the struggle in each state. Each separate organization would, in most cases, put up its own candidates, for this would be the prime reason for their separate existence. Imagine the "real Socialist unity" that would arise, inasmuch as each organization would represent its own state. They could not combine on this office, because official standing goes with the vote cast for the head of the ticket.

Instead of working harmoniously, each would fight the other. Final supremacy in most cases would be determined by prior official standing. The first to gain official standing would have every advantage both in argument and in general work. One faction would gain official standing in some states, while the other faction would dominate in other states.

The weaker faction in each state would be urged to maintain its separate existence, and thus lend its moral and financial support to the corresponding faction in such states when the fight was bitter and where they had gained official standing; or vice versa, the organization which had gained official standing, if the state fight was easy to handle, would encourage the weaker organizations in such states when the fight was close. Thus a permanent split would develop and the temper would wax hotter and the feelings more bitter, and the chasm between the two organizations would grow wider as the years passed by and their respective power increased.

Having maintained a split in the state organizations, how long would it take to develop a split in this proposed national committee? Would each state not withdraw its delegates from this merged committee and send them to a national committee of its own making. Especially when bitter feelings were aroused?

Are not all national committees merely the outgrowth of state organizations? By maintaining the present state organizations, do we not lay the foundation for a later building of a national organization or committee of the same kind? Witness the split in the French movement, arising out of the same plan. What is a united committee worth when the party is divided? Would not the same interests manifest themselves in the national committee that develop in the separate state organizations? Would not the committee voice the fight as it develops in the several states? Such a committee would be only an area for real socialist pugilism instead of real Socialist unity."

Are we to rob our propaganda fund of thousands of dollars and expend it on a convention, in order to maintain factions in the different states? Shall the delegates take the hard earned money of the members and pay their expenses to a unity convention, and return with a plan for division? Could we not remain at home and maintain division?

The author of this plan for "Real Socialist Unity Suited to American Conditions" says, in The Worker of March 21, 1901 (then The People), commenting on his plan:

"If the plan does not at once do away with the divisions in some states we may congratulate ourselves that under it two sets of national candidates are impossible, and then the tendency to unification and economy is there to work out out redemption in the years to come."

Is it possible that the author thinks we are holding the Indianapolis convention of July 29 in order to effect union "in years to come." That is not the feeling, the wish, the hope, nor the purpose of the membership. They do not want a plan that promises union "IN years to come." They want a constitution uniting them now and for years to come. UNION NOW AND FOREVER of all Socialists, against the capitalist class and for the working class is the battle cry resounding from the voice of the multitude, and ply be unto those whose ears are deaf to the calling.

JOE HARRIMAN.

G. H. Strobel, 44 Hill St., Newark, N.J.

Dear Comrade:—Some time ago you visited me and spoke of your plan to effect Socialist unity. As I had not given the subject any special attention, I could not express an opinion at that time. Since then, however, I have looked up your plan and was about to write you when I received your circular headed, "Real Socialist Unity Suited to American Conditions." This has served to strengthen the opinion I had previously formed and in view of your apparent activity in the matter and its importance to the general movement, I take the liberty to write you as clearly as I can the objection I have to your plan.

It was a surprise to me to see your plan defined as "The New Jersey Plan for National Organization." So far as I know it is nothing of the kind. I have been in an exceptional position to note actions of the various state organizations upon the matter of unity and I have no knowledge of the New Jersey state organization endorsing your plan either in convention or otherwise. The fact that you, as a delegate from Newark to the Chicago convention last March, or as a member of the New Jersey state committee, advocated the plan does not commit the state to the proposition by any means.

It is true that the present method of organization in use in New Jersey serves to unite the Social Democrats of that state, but I was present when the state convention voted to continue the method, and you know as well as I that the convention's action was based more upon a desire to effect a temporary truce, pending a national unity convention, than upon any belief that the present method could be made permanent. There were three factions

Springfield and Chicago adherents and the Independents. All were disgusted with the divisions in the national movement; yet each faction wished to retain their several positions. The vote to continue the plan of organization in use during the previous six months was a compromise measure—the hope of an early consolidation of all the factions into one national party the reason for its adoption.

In view of this your assumption that the plan you advocate is also "the New Jersey plan" is one calculated to prejudice the case, if not a direct misrepresentation which no amount of zeal or sincerity can wholly extenuate. The plan is your individual one and New Jersey is not committed to it at this writing, no matter what may occur hereafter.

Now, what is your plan? Briefly, it provides that there shall be a national committee composed of one member from each state, except where there are two or more "independent Socialist parties" in any state, when each of these parties shall be entitled to one member each upon the national committee. Each state shall have one vote, but where there are more than one representative from any state, the vote of the state shall be cast in fractional proportion to the number of members in each "independent Socialist party." Therefore you propose that there shall be one national party based upon separate or independent parties, where these should exist, in any or all states.

My opinion of your plan is that it not only provides for a continuance of our present troubles, but that it proposes to continue them indefinitely. It would cause further disruption and disorder, instead of curing present division and antagonism. It would perpetuate factional strife and multiply factional reorganizations. And it would place the Socialist movement completely at the mercy of its one great enemy—the capitalist.

In the first place, a proposition for Socialist unity that admits the possibility of existing independent parties in any or all states is an admission that party division is not only justifiable but desirable. It is an acknowledgment that it is better to remain divided than united, and that the propaganda of socialism requires a waste of effort, energy, and money, instead of economy in expenditure and direction. In one word, a national committee composed of distinct and separate factions in any or all states is a negation of all Socialist economic and social unity, built upon shifting sand.

Do you not see, Comrade Strobel, that while we have had separate national organizations, all our troubles arose from conflicts occurring within each state? Our national presidential election occurs only every four years. Our state and municipal elections mostly occur annually and biennially. With your plan in operation what is to prevent each faction in each state from putting up separate candidates for governor and state office, as well as for congressmen? Nothing at all. Great that these factions have a right to exist and your plan does this, and you grant each faction the right to do as it pleases—to run its own candidates, conduct its own campaign, yes, even to adopt a platform of its own. Is this the sort of "unity" we want?

Your statement that our American political organization is different from that of other countries is the one great reason why unity cannot be effected under your plan. There are no national parties recognized by law in America. There are national committees, but they only represent the existing state parties. In order to have official recognition as a party the political organizations have to meet the requirements of various state laws. It is just as essential therefore to have one united party within each state as it is to have one national organization representing the Socialist movement. One does not build a house by beginning with the roof. There must be a foundation, and a solid one, if any permanent kind of structure is desired, and in order to have a national Socialist movement you must lay the foundation in a united party in each state, acting harmoniously in conformity with reason and the laws.

You have also apparently overlooked the probability that the capitalist state administrations would take advantage of our divisions and pit the factions against each other, by recognizing one in one state and an opposing faction in another, a policy that would lead the Socialists to ruin and self-annihilation.

What is the most glaring and marked feature about your plan is that it does not propose to abolish the several factions in different states, but instead proposes to continue them in existence. This is the plan basis and its own condemnation. We do not want any factions at all, whether local, state or national. Neither reason, nor our political institutions, nor expediency, nor socialism can offer cause why people agreeing upon one set of principles, having one end in view, one mission to perform, should carry on their work in separate organizations, either in the nation or in different states. Such an idea is suicidal and absurd; it is the one unfortunately we have been following, and which you suggest we should continue to follow in the future.

Could anything so weaken the Socialist movement and place it completely at the mercy of the capitalist parties as a plan of organization that would guarantee Socialist division in every state, which is the real battle ground for conquest of the national administration? Why do the capitalist politicians attach so much importance to state politics? Because out of state politics grows national politics, just as municipal control must precede state control. The outstanding capitalist parties fight to "capture states," because with each state captured the surety becomes national victory. And yet you would have us maintain separate organizations in each state, fight one another as well as the capitalist parties for state control, and carry on the semblance of national unity by the maintenance of a national committee based upon a constitutionally divided among themselves. The perpetuation of such a committee would depend solely upon the length of time necessary for each faction to devour each other. The proposition would be fit only for ridicule if it were not presented in such sober earnest and apparent good faith.

There has been a great deal said and written of late about the best way in which Socialists should be united. Our experiences in the past with national executive boards and official organs have been so discouraging and disheartening that all sorts of propositions have been presented relative to the future form and details of the national organizations. Some people, with more energy than knowledge, have proposed that all national committees, all official organs, all "red tapes," etc., etc., be abolished. We are told that Germany has no national executive boards, and for that reason the movement has been very successful there. Now you come along and tell us that our form of socialist organization is copied from Germany, and we need a more Democratic form! Somebody seems to be badly mixed.

The fact is that Germany has a strong national executive board with very far reaching authority. The political conditions there demand it, and those who write otherwise are ignorant alike of the German movement and German conditions. It is true we do not need a board with such power, here, nor on the other hand do we require either separate state organizations without any national board. One proposition is as foolish and extreme as the other. In America one is absolutism, the other is anarchy. I believe a happy mean can be struck, if we only try hard and conscientiously enough to find it.

I have not attempted to figure out an exact plan upon which permanent union shall be effected. I have an idea that the coming convention composed, as it undoubtedly will be, of men and women who want a united movement, and many of these men and women new to the movement, and with little of past bitterness and with much of present ardor and devotion within them, I say I have an idea that a convention made up like this, will hit upon the right plan. I also have an idea that the right plan will be one that will ensure one committee in each state, and one national committee whose duties shall be wholly administrative and devoted chiefly to the supervision and direction of all inter-state agitation and organization work. Not a national campaign committee, but a national agitation committee, selected by the representatives of a united party in each state. This would guarantee national unity and state autonomy, I believe, but it is presented not as a definite plan, but as a crude idea that can be developed with thought and time.

I notice that you propose that a national official organ shall be maintained. The day of direct official organs representing national committees or boards is past, but even if this were not so, please explain how you will conduct the national organ so that each "independent Socialist party" in each state shall be represented. Do you intend that the different factions in each state shall have a department to themselves?

This letter is already over long, but the further I went the more I found I had to say. I have not attempted to question the sincerity of your declaration that you have heart the welfare of the movement, or that you have been deeply grieved over the divisions of the past. But what you say of yourself can also be said of all but a very few (and we can hardly judge even these) of the Socialists of America. This is the reason why I say that the Socialists of America will not, cannot, endorse now or hereafter such a plan as you propose.

No, Comrade Strobel, the terms of your proposition are not what we have worked for, longed for, these many weary months. This is not the plan that would consummate the hopes lingering in the hearts of American Socialists. This is not what the coming important convention must deliver to the membership at large as the results of the dreary negotiations and vast expense incident upon holding that convention. The patience of months deserves better reward than that. We want unity, Comrade Strobel, permanent, indissoluble unity, and your plan would not effect that kind of unity. Far from it. In my opinion it would, by recognizing division, perpetuate and maintain it to our own discouragement, disintegration and discomfort, and the hindrance of the Socialist cause.

Fraternally yours,
WILLIAM MAHLEY.

Dutch Pastor Speaks Out.

The "Nederlander," Chicago, June 7.—Rev. A. de Koe, pastor of the Herv. church in Heider (Holland), who at his request was permitted to resign, said in his parting address to his congregation: "I cannot hold my office any longer, because the church as it is organized at present, is unable to fulfill the longed-for of humanity's brother life. For it administers exclusively to the warfare of the capitalists and not of the proletarians, and the church is being hampered too much by church regulations. All this is opposed to my conception of life, and therefore I resolved to leave the church."

The valiant pastor is now a member of the socialist camp in Rotterdam.

NORTH SIDE REPORT.

Organizer Talks of Prevailing Local Activity in His District.

A 4th Organization district, comprising the 25th and 27th Wards, is now well in the bud with no prospective frosts in sight.

The 4th District held their first meeting at 265 W. Wellington Street, Friday, June 14th, and was well attended. Judging from the expressions of the comrades, the new district is fully determined to stand second to none in aggressive propaganda work.

The meeting was enthusiastic and one of the hopeful signs was, that the animated discussion was not carried on by one or two individuals, but was decidedly general throughout.

Comrade Sam. Robbins was elected Chairman, Comrade Wm. Leffingwell, Secretary, Comrade Schilcock, Treasurer and Comrade J. H. Bard District Organizer. The organization committee consisting of one member from each branch meet every Friday evening of each week at 265 West Wellington St.

The committee recommended that the branches practice some socialist songs and that as soon as possible the outdoor meetings be opened by singing socialist songs.

The following meetings were arranged: Saturday, June 23—Grace and Whipple Street. Speakers: Chas. Johnson and J. H. Bard.

Sunday, 3 p. m.—31st and Armitage Av. Speakers: Sam. Robbins and J. H. Bard.

Tuesday, 7:30 p. m.—Armitage and Tripp Av. Speakers: Wm. Leffingwell and J. H. Bard.

Wednesday, 7:30 p. m.—Belmont and Lincoln Avenue. Speakers: Sam. Robbins and J. H. Bard.

Thursday, 7:30 p. m.—Diversey and Milwaukee Avenue. Speakers: Wm. Leffingwell, Sam. Robbins and J. H. Bard.

Friday, 7:30 p. m.—Organization Committee at 305 West Wellington Street.

Saturday, June 23, 7:30 p. m.—Grace and Whipple Street. Speaker: J. H. Bard.

Law Making and Breaking.

How closely political and economic power are allied may be judged from the following story regarding Henry M. Flagler, Standard Oil magnate residing in Florida. This gentleman had the misfortune to be married to a woman who subsequently became insane. The laws of Florida do not or rather did not, allow divorce proceedings upon this plea, but the undaunted Flagler soon repaired this omission. He engineered a bill through the state legislature making insanity a legal cause for divorce, and two days afterward entered suit, going in a special train with his attorneys to file the necessary papers in the courthouses at Miami. It is said that Flagler will marry again just as soon as he is free. He is one of the heaviest stockholders in the Standard Oil company and ranks among the wealthiest of New York capitalists, which is sufficient reason for assuming that there will be no barking or yelping heard from New York clerical benches over the matter, as everything connected with the sexual relations of the capitalist class is strictly tabooed by the well-trained animals who inhabit those quarters.

By a curious coincidence a lady of the same potential name was married last week. She had distinguished herself about five years ago by shooting a little negro boy who was engaged in stealing pears from her father's garden in Washington. Although two shots were fired, both of which took effect, the coroner (who was onto his job), acquitted the lady of intentional killing and discharged her. The acquittal aroused much "popular indignation" and Miss Flagler was subsequently indicted by the grand jury and held in $10,000 bail. At the trial, (which was conducted secretly), the defendant pleaded guilty to "involuntary manslaughter," and was sentenced to pay a fine of $250 and imprisonment for THREE MONTHS, the shortest term ever known in the district. It was expected that at her marriage (which occurred in Washington), the regents of the city would attempt some hostile demonstration just to show their dissatisfaction, but they didn't. They have been educated to know better. It would seem from the above instances that any member of the Flagler family may with perfect propriety apply to himself or herself the introductory lines of the Lord Chancellor's song in the comic opera of "Iolanthe":

"The law is the true embodiment of everything that's excellent. It has no kind of fault or flaw. And I myself embody the law."

She Was Quite Upset.

"I wonder whether we rich people have a right to eat these extravagant dinners and revel in luxurious homes, when with what we waste every day a hundred miserable creatures might be prevented from suicide. The memory will haunt me forever."

The above rather commonplace remarks are recorded as the impressions of the daughter of an American millionaire, after visiting the slums of Paris. "They are not particularly original, but nevertheless were thought worthy of being incorporated in a special cable to the Chicago American, in which the important information was imparted that American women had started the newest fad in Paris, which consists in 'slumming,' as it is called. The party to which the young lady in question belonged had exhausted all the usual pleasures to be found in the French metropolis, and at last turned their attention to contemplating the abject ends of the system through which they derived their wealth. Accompanied by an armed policeman hired for the purpose, they penetrated into the under world and "investigated" the human wreckage with which it was populated, visited the den of a "notorious Anarchist" who recanted their intrusion in forcible language, and spurned the gift of money which one of the well dressed visitors proffered, and passed on to a cellar in which an old woman lay dying of consumption, while her daughter who was suffering from the same disease was occupied in ironing. Here again the party was repulsed, the heiress observing that she couldn't understand how people could live in such a place, a remark which seems rather vague when that the occupants were dying as fast as possible. The night before, amongst whom were Mrs. Orden, Mrs. Armour, Bradley Martin, Jr., then departed, and the young woman who was the "leading spirit of the party" has not yet recovered from the effects of her experience, as the cable dispatch states. Probably her appetite is somewhat affected, but it is not likely that the affliction will be permanent. If she can only devise a scheme of "social reform" by which the refuse from the tables of the wealthy may be utilized to prevent hundreds of miserable creatures from getting rid of their misery through suicide, the remembrance of the visit may perhaps become less troublesome and in time disappear altogether, even if the slums continue to exist as usual. There's nothing to equal "charity" as a salve for the capitalist conscience.

Labor unions throughout the country are about to set on foot an agitation to extend the Chinese Exclusion Act for a further period of ten years as the act in question expires in eleven months.

THE WORKERS' CALL.

THE WORKERS' CALL is published by the SOCIALIST PARTY of Chicago and has for its aim the education of the workingmen in the lines of scientific, class-conscious, revolutionary socialism. For this purpose only it appears.

"Workingmen of all countries unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains; you have a world to gain."

SOCIALISM AND REFORM.

Well known party members give their views on the Detroit Convention. Impossibility of unity on any other basis than that of Revolutionary Socialism. Lack of a common factor, fatal to "reform" measures. Socialism neither makes nor asks "concessions." The class struggle must be accepted as the sole foundation of any practical platform for social betterment.

I. The Detroit Conference is confessedly a meeting of men with various minds and with this admission it may seem presumptuous on my part to ask them to agree with my mind, that of a revolutionary socialist. However I am of a hopeful disposition, and when the argument which I bring to bear upon a man is simply one of admitted facts and inevitable conclusions drawn from such admitted facts, I really cannot understand how it is possible for sane and honest men to disagree with me.

In the first place nobody is supposed to go to that Conference unless he is convinced that existing social conditions are bad and that a change for the better should be made. Not only must he think that a change should be made but he must think that a change can be made. As a corollary it follows that whatever proposal he makes is one that he thinks probable the American voter will consider favorably, as otherwise it is useless to make the proposal. The first thing to be decided upon is the cause of our economic ills. I place at the bottom the competitive wage system which must keep wages at the subsistence point, owing to the fact that the unemployed man fixes the rate paid to the employed man.

I can see no getting around this, no matter from what standpoint one looks at the case. That there must always be a certain amount of surplus labor as long as the capitalist finds more goods on his hands than he can dispose of at a profit, would seem of necessity admitted by every investigator.

Modern labor says machinery is constantly displacing hand labor and the men so displaced compete with the men in employment. It is said by some economists that such displacement is simply a temporary matter, a necessary and that it only requires time to finally settle affairs so that the displaced workmen will not only find work again but will find work at increased wages. That the increase represents to the worker his share of the increased product the result of the improved machinery which originally effected his temporary displacement.

This is all beautiful enough in theory, but does it work out in practice? The economists who give this cheerful explanation of the working of our economic system are very careful to muddle up their theory so that nobody can follow them in the steps by which they arrive at the theory that machinery does not really displace labor, and it may be well to show how there is an apparent basis for such a theory. Shortly the explanation of the matter is simply that hitherto whenever a machine has been invented to displace labor, the capitalist has set the displaced laborer at work making a new machine. It naturally follows that as long as there was a demand for new machinery sufficient to absorb in the making thereof, all the labor displaced by the introduction of the existing machinery, there would be no unemployed problem to solve. And in fact such a condition has actually prevailed in America up to the present day but the trust is the sign that such demand for new machinery is practically satisfied and that the displacement of labor by the existing machinery can no longer be met by the construction of more machinery as of old.

The trust is admittedly the result of over-production of industrial machinery, and if it is hopeless to look for relief to the labor market by setting labor at work producing unnecessary machinery.

Hence while it was possible for the competitive wage system to endure as long as we were in an undeveloped industrial condition, as soon as the machinery of production is finished its further continuance becomes an absolute economic impossibility owing to the wage system so limiting consumption that it places an irreducible surplus of goods in the hands of the capitalists, and thus necessarily making as a corollary an irreducible unemployed problem.

If then it is admitted that the competitive wage system must go, I would like to ask what other substitute can be offered for a competitive system except a co-operative system?

With industry conducted on the existing scale of national scope it seems to me to follow that the simplest means to handle such industry is to let it fall to the national political government as already organized by the people. That is that the nation must take over the operation of our industrial functions as well as our political functions.

With such views of our economic condition it is evident that I look with impatience at any plan of reform that does not contemplate the abolition of the competitive wage-system.

As socialism is the only method of effecting such abolition I feel that not only the "reformers" but the avowed "revolutionists" are logically forced to the same conclusion, namely that the only change worth working for is that of socialism—socialism at once without any tentative steps.

It is not only the only remedy that can effect any amelioration of existing ills but it is at the same time the only measure that presents an ideal that can excite the enthusiasm of the voters to a sufficient degree that they will turn out and work for it.

From this I conclude that both from the economic as well as from the political standpoint revolutionary socialism is the only practical program of the political party of the future.

H. GAYLORD WILSHIRE.

II.

The Social and Economic Conference which is to meet in Detroit this week gives as its main reason for existence the hope that some means may be found to unite all those who are seeking for social betterment. In the abstract this is an aim which all will desire to see realized. The only question is as to the methods and means of realization. As a revolutionary socialist, I too believe in the overwhelming necessity of a union for the purpose of accomplishing this change. The battle cry of socialists for the last half century has been "Workingmen of the world, unite." But unlike the so-called reformers they have not shut their eyes to the essentials of such unity. The revolutionary socialist has put utopianism behind him in more senses than one. He does not first picture a beautiful society, then advocate its adoption, and then finally look to see whether it is possible of realization. In the same way he does not preach the necessity of unity without first carefully examining the facts of American economic and political life, to ascertain what are the fundamental requisites to render such a union possible.

He looks across the history of the last half century in all the lands that have the same form of social organization as exists in America, and he sees a mighty movement for unity of social forces taking place. He sees battalions after battalions of the army of discontented swinging into line beneath the same flag and with the same rallying cries. He sees other standards rise and little groups gather round them, varying in different lands according to the peculiarities of economic development. He sees these groups one by one disintegrate and fall in with the great international army of socialism. The conclusion is as unavoidable as that of a geometric theorem that the social unity of the future must have that army for its center.

Let us look at this point again. Unity presupposes agreement. It presupposes the existence of a common denominator. Down anyone of the thoroughfares of a great city there sweeps every day a mighty mass of men. They are pressed close together. They make up a compact physical mass crowded into close proximity. But who will say that there is any unity there. In the same way some artificial program might be set before the American people that because of its inclusiveness and perhaps contradictions, would cause a great number of men to rally momentarily to its support. Each one would be advocating a different measure. Each would wish to see society go in a different direction and would only remain with the party because his particular hobby was included in a paper declaration of principles. The moment that there came to be any prospect of victory, and promises of the realization of the various and contradictory planks of the platform of such an organization, there would be a splitting up like that of a crowd which has been pressed together upon a bridge, when the bridge has been passed and their various destinations are at hand.

The socialist on the other hand seeks rather a point of common interest than a measure of physical compression and attachment. He looks into the course of economic evolution of the last century and sees that the tendency of that evolution has been to bring two great facts to the front. The first of these has been the essentially co-operative nature of modern production with the great complex machinery of the modern factory system. The second is the growing and overwhelming importance of the wage-working and producing classes. He puts these two together and it follows as logically as from the premises of a mathematical theorem that he who would accomplish anything must work in accord with these two facts. He must seek to overthrow the present class government of the wage-producers and to replace it with a government of the producers (widened to include all members of society), who will operate the tools of production co-operatively.

This is the central point in the great economic and social movement of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries.

This is the great lesson which that development is teaching. This is the focus of the social discontent and the point around which ultimately all efforts for social betterment must unite.

Why longer deny these facts? For a half-century, in a hundred different nations "reform" parties have risen, fallen, disintegrated, and finally been gradually absorbed into the socialist movement. Slowly, steadily and surely the fact has grown more evident that here was the common factor, the central unifying thought which must constitute the basis of any really unified movement. It is not about time that we began to recognize the logic of these facts? Have we not brains enough to read their lesson without waiting for a half dozen more fruitless attempts to "unite" on some other basis? Have we not the intellectual comprehension enough to grasp the tendency of this evolution before it crushes us beneath its relentless advance and forces us to mutely onward, mere instruments in the hands of industrial development. Can we not make this political unity a conscious intelligent unity at once instead of quarrelling among ourselves and playing with silly exactly the same of yours, then you are a hypocrite and should at once recognize the fact and adopt the program and philosophy which you do believe to be wholly true.

The socialist points to the fact of the international nature of his movement to show that it contains the largest common factor that has ever entered into any social philosophy the world has ever known. He asks you if the position which is wide enough for the German and the Frenchman and the Russian with the Dane, the Jap and the Australian to unite upon is not wide enough for the few who are met at Detroit to stand upon, and if it would not be better to accept that philosophy as it stands as a basis of union than to attempt to change it to meet the interests, prejudices or whims of some small sect in America and by so doing throw it out of accord with all the remainder of the world. This is even granting the possibility of such alteration, which in reality is out of the question, for the socialist would consent for a moment to even consider such a proposition. "If then you are to unite at all you must unite on that basis. Upon any other you at once a new political party at this conference, which party it is said is "to support all of the best features of Socialism."

Socialism proposes the collective ownership and the co-operative use of the means of production and distribution as well as an equal opportunity for all in the use and benefit of the means of production and distribution. Here are not many features to pick from, but here is Socialism,—both its good features and its bad ones if it has

If the new party is to support the best features of socialism which of these will it pick?

Is it to stand for collective ownership without co-operative use or is it to stand for co-operative use without collective ownership, or is it to stand for both collective ownership and co-operative use and deny equal opportunity for all in the use and benefit of the collective ownership and co-operative use of the means of production and distribution?

If the new party is to support "all of the best features of Socialism" what else will it support?

If it supports nothing else it would

individual schemes and social utopias until we are physically forced into a solid body by the process of exploitation and economic concentration?

Practically every member of the Detroit Conference will admit that each year the conference is "growing more socialist." This simply means that every year it is being forced nearer to a point of actual unity. But why wait the slow operation of physical forces? Given time enough, erosion will level the mountains, but the civil engineer about to build a railroad does not defer tunnelling on that account. Given time enough, and economic development will compel unity in accord with the socialist position. But because the socialist believes that human intelligence can grasp the course of economic development and learn to work in accord with it, and to anticipate its mere physical results, he seeks to persuade thinking people to unite in support of a program in accordance with social advance.

Do not let this position be misunderstood. The socialist does not ask you to unite upon the ground of mutual concession. He does not agree to give up half of his program on condition of a similar surrender on your part. He knows that anyone who makes such a proposition thereby only testifies to his own ignorance of the facts of social life and growth. Divergent social programs cannot be joined together as a carpenter fits boards by sawing a bit off there and planing away a roughness here. They either are or are not true and possible of realization, and the only possible basis of unity is to join in support of the one which is true. With no assumption of false modesty the socialist comes forward in support of the claim that he alone, of all those who offer social theories and programs for consideration has the true one. And if you do not believe what out from your communion all the great host of those who have grasped and adapted the truths of international socialism and your unity becomes a force. You shut yourselves out from the influence, assistance and esprit de corps of the world-wide movement, and instead of being a great united organized army condemn yourself to become an isolated fraction of a disintegrating mob.

A. M. SIMONS.

III.

The Detroit Conference has been called to discuss the question "What to do about it?"

At this meeting of dissatisfied people there will not be one representative of the present order there and prepared to defend things as they are.

All will be agreed that wrongs as serious as to call for some action different from any heretofore taken by our government ought to be undertaken now.

The Single Tax, the Referendum, Municipal ownership, Anti-Imperialism and the Success Club will all be there with proposals which can be undertaken and carried out within the wage system, and the Socialist will be there to insist that the trouble is not with the ones who are running the wage system, and that no sufficient remedy can be found for the wrongs of the wage system so long as the wage system exists and that to abolish the wage system and inaugurate the co-operative commonwealth is not only the best but the easiest, quickest, simplest, surest way out.

A new collar for the capitalist dog will not improve the character of the dog itself. It is not a new collar that is wanted. It is a dead dog.

It has been given out confidentially to the general public that an effort will be made to organize and launch lose no strength by supporting Socialism outright.

If it is to support any thing less than Socialism it cannot hope for the support of any one who wants Socialism and wants it now.

Such a new party must be made up of shirkers and those whom the shirkers control, or of workers and those whom the workers control, or it must be made up of part workers and part shirkers, and within its ranks the same old battle of the workers and the shirkers, fighting for the mastery, must be fought over again.

If it is to be made up of the shirkers and those whom they control it will not be worth the trouble of making it. Any one of the capitalist parties now in existence will answer such a purpose and will save the cost of making a new machine of the same old kind.

If it is to be made up of the workers and those whom they may be able to control, then that is the Socialist objective pure and simple, and the Detroit shirkers should vote to take a recess and finish their work at the unity convention at Indianapolis.

If it is to be made up of part shirkers and part workers each struggling for control within the new party, then the party will be biggest on its birthday and its friends would save the doctors' bills and the funeral expenses by having it never born at all.

If it is to be made up of part workers and part shirkers, each faction expecting to get control, then if the workers get control the shirkers will desert it and here will simply be another Socialist faction in the field, with its headquarters penniless and homeless and its headquarters confined, befogged and doing nothing.

If the shirkers should get control, as they doubtless would in such a party, then the workers would be obliged to support the very men who compel them "to divide up daily" the products of their toil and so, at last, as the only way out they would be obliged to bolt again and join the Socialists.

Better join us now, Comrades, we are taking in members.

If you are a shirker and in the reform business for entertainment there are a good many things which could be said in defense of the proposal to organize a new party as a source of amusement for yourselves and others.

If you are a worker and tired of the motto that "to the victors belong the spoils" and really believe that to the producers belong the products, come then to the Socialists. Unite now and help them to get together and get to work.

Hearts' Paper Ignores Article Referring to Bernstein's Misconception of Scientific Socialism.

In answer to the editorial which recently appeared in the Chicago American advocating (though in a confused manner) the ideas of Edward Bernstein on scientific socialism, the following reply was sent to the office of that paper, by a comrade. As was expected it was not published and therefore appears in our columns.—ED.]

The editorial in the Monday evening issue (of June 17th) of the Chicago American involves a misapprehension.

What Bernstein really said was that socialism was not scientific in the sense of his own individual definition of science, i. e., purely empirical recognition without speculation. He was careful to add that socialism was scientific in that respect that it strove to fix the laws of economic evolution and utopian only in so far as it referred to the unknown future.

Bernstein, moreover, is by no means an accepted authority on economic questions. His criticisms are more remarkable for their dialectic cleverness than for their scientific value. He may style Marx's and Engels' works "half truths"; the majority of socialists prefer the half truths of Marx and Engels to the quarter truths of Bernstein and to the utopian dreams of Fourier. In questioning the scientific value of Marxian doctrine, he deprecates the men he attacks. The unsoundness and superficiality of Bernstein's statements were exposed more than once by Kautsky, Vandervelde and others, whose claims to scientific distinction are at least as well founded as Bernstein's.

He who eagerly grasps and extols Bernstein's ideas and ignores the men who by their painstaking and fundamental work gave him an opportunity to gain a cheap notoriety at their expense, shows too plainly that his wishes are stronger than his discretion.

Whether Marx's law of surplus value, his economic conception of history and of the class struggle are scientific in the sense of Bernstein's individual definition or not—socialism is the next logical and inevitable step in economic evolution.

Orthodox and academic science, the official science of a ruling minority, does not and cannot dare to be true. The moment it does so, it inevitably comes into conflict with the class interests that support it. What avails the criticism of such a pseudo science? The science of the despised proletarian alone can do and dare. It alone can investigate free from selfish considerations and boldly state all the truths it may discover. For it does not seek to defend the privileges of a few, but to establish JUSTICE FOR ALL.

A Literary Treasure.

Messrs. Chan. H. Kerr & Co., 34-36th Avenue, are now in a position to furnish bound volumes of the International Socialist Review containing the first twelve monthly numbers from June 1896 to June 1898 inclusive, at the price of $1.00 each. The book is handsomely and solidly bound in red cloth with gilt lettering and will make an important addition to the library of Socialist literature, consisting as it does of a choice collection of essays from many of the ablest Socialist writers of Europe and America. As the number of these volumes is strictly limited and cannot be increased, intending purchasers should supply themselves as speedily as possible while the volumes are still on sale.

A match game of Baseball for the benefit of the striking Machinists of District No. 2 will be played at Ogden Avenue and Rockwell Street Sunday July 7th, 2 p. m. Teams from the Building, Material Trades Council and the 1st Area of Machinists will compete. Full base band in attendance. Tickets 25 cents.

Comrade Jos. Wanhope, editor of the Workers' Call, will deliver a lecture on "The Evolution of Property," at the Socialist Temple, on Sunday evening, June 24th at 8 p. m. As this will be the first appearance of Comrade Wanhope as a speaker at the Temple, we hope for a large attendance. All welcome.

FOR COMMITTEE.

A MIGHTY HUNTER

Wilshire Takes in Chicago While on the War-Path.

BRYAN FLIES BEFORE HIM.

Local Comrades Install the "Challenge" Editor on the Public Roster and Keep Him There.

The Chicago comrades know a good thing when they see it, and as this knowledge leads them in every case to put the aforesaid good thing into operation, so when H. Gaylord Wilshire, the notorious editor of the still more notorious "Challenges" of Los Angeles, Cal., drifted into the city on last Saturday night, the comrades at once determined to place him in circulation forthwith. Comrade Wilshire was by no means disinclined, and promptly cleared his decks for action. Within less than half an hour after he stepped from the train, he was installed on a soap box at the corner of State and Congress Streets and was telling an audience of several hundred people, a few things that they really ought to have known, but didn't. On the afternoon of the following day he repeated the performance at North and California Avenues, and the same evening addressed another very large audience at the Socialist Temple, as reported in another column of this paper.

As these preliminaries didn't seem to weary the indefatigable Wilshire, and it was evident that he was quite ready to deliver his challenge any old place where a crowd could be collected, the local party members determined to gratify him (and themselves) to the full in this direction, so Monday evening found the Los Angeles man confronting a crowd of between three and four hundred people under the shadow of the Newberry Library on North Clark Street and Walton place. He was introduced by Comrade Simons who told the crowd something of the personality of the man who was about to address them, and the Wilshire batteries opened again for the space of an hour. If there were any hostiles in the audience, they evidently didn't know it, for they reserved their fire, as so opposition whatever was dispensed. On the following evening the speaker in the neighborhood of Third and Halsted Streets had the same gospel preached to them by the same untiring missionary. They also displayed a commendable reticence in questioning the accuracy of the speaker's views, and Comrade Wilshire resumed his journey eastward next morning, no doubt carrying with him the impression that there are at least 5,000 people in Chicago, who, like Mr. Bryan, have developed the faculty of observing a discreet silence when confronted with an unanswerable argument.

As a rule Socialist speakers encourage discussion and invite hostile criticism from their audience, but Comrade Wilshire is undoubtedly the exception to this rule. Not indeed that he did not strongly urge and even dare any of those present to step up and controvert his argument, but it would seem that after he had spoken his piece, there was not sufficient "incentive" left amongst the audience to induce any of them accept the invitation. It is rather a compliment anyhow to the intelligence of his Chicago audience to be able to state that amongst them not one fool could be found to rush in where Bryan, Tom Johnson, Professor Langhille and W. E. Hearst feared to tread.

And yet H. Gaylord Wilshire is no "peerless orator" who deals in "words of learned length and thunderous sound." Nor is there anything particularly impressive, awe inspiring, or dominating in his personal appearance, or persuasive and fascinating in his speech. He is merely an ordinary individual that has something to say and knows how to say it, and knows also that when it is said, the possibility of an opposing view vanishes into thin air. And the audience agrees with him. If there is any truth in the saying that "silence gives consent."

Comrade Wilshire is out on an intellectual scalp hunting expedition, but the game although numerous is extremely wary, and as a hunter, he has so far not been remarkably successful. Even the stalking of the big game preserve in Lincoln, Neb., produced no results, the principal quarry taking the alarm and departing stealthily from his lair. Comrade Wilshire came here with no trophies dangling from his belt and has departed as he came. But perhaps the City of Detroit, to which he is bound, may afford better sport, as it is reported that a covey of "reformers" will shortly congregate in that locality, and who knows but he may bag a specimen or two before the usual stampedede occurs and the third creature scurry to cover? At any rate the Chicago comrades wish the bold hunterman all possible success, and proffer as parting advice the suggestion that heavier game bag might be realized if Comrade Wilshire were but to open fire with reduced charges, and thus possibly tempt the game within practicable range.

Again the capitalist press resurrects the old falsehood that the views of Edward Bernstein are about to produce a serious split in the ranks of the German Socialist party, from which it may be reasonably inferred that socialism is producing a few "retrograde splits" in the ranks of the capitalist parties. These reports, like dreams, generally go by contraries.

The city council of Galesburg, Ill., having repealed the local eight-hour law, Chicago labor men will send several representatives to that city to protest against their action. The mayor and the city attorney it seems have given it as their opinion that the eight-hour law is "unconstitutional," which is the stereotyped way of describing anything that doesn't suit the interests of the ruling class. Now if the protest only took the form of advancing the workmen of Galesburg to vote these gentlemen out of their offices and put in people of their own class, who don't regard eight-hour laws as "unconstitutional," the money expended upon the transportation of the aforesaid labor men might be considered as well spent. Much advice if acted upon would be vastly more effective than this "the strong telegram of protest" which President Compton is said to have sent to Galesburg.

The thousands of workmen who voted for Alderman Hector, will doubtless be delighted to hear that this gentleman, as Chairman of the Council Police Committee, advocates the establishment of a mounted police force because he was impressed with the efficiency displayed by mounted men in terrorizing the St. Louis Street car strikers last year, stating that when one of these mounted "cops" dashed up with a Winchester and a sword, he looked pretty big and was in some places worth fifty men on foot. Another alderman in the committee, with somewhat more political discrimination, suggested that this was an aspect of the question which it would be better to avoid, to which Hector rejoined that "a good bluff was better than nothing," a remark which indicates that he considers striking workmen as both cowards and fools. The next time that this "good bluff" runs on an aldermanic ticket, the workmen will have an opportunity to disprove or substantiate his opinion of their courage and good sense.

It is now reported that the government is making investigations that may end in wiping out the trust—or something else. The officials of the attorney general's office are going to determine whether certain great corporations are operating in contravention of the Sherman anti-trust law. If it is discovered that this is the case, something is going to drop with a dull sickening thud, though whether the something in question will be the "certain great corporations" or the law which they contravene is yet a matter of conjecture. It is said that the officials in question hope to make out a strong case against the corporations, but as the information to be collected and arranged secretly, it is very reasonable to suppose that they don't hope to make the case strong enough to imperil their positions. At any rate, if this does actually happen it is easy enough to bring up the question of the "constitutionality" of the Sherman anti-trust law. As a general rule a law is easier knocked out than a trust, and it is probable that in this as in similar cases the line of least resistance will

Your slavery rests on your neighbors' ignorance. Give him a Workers' Call to help break your fetters.

A FRUITLESS CAPTURE

Striking workers in the railroad shops at Columbia, S. C., organized into a body last week and succeeded in capturing a gang of forty-two "scabs" who had taken their places and were sleeping in two box cars on the premises of the railroad company. The report of the affair doesn't say that the strikers got their places back on account of this feat, but it does say that the "scabs" here at work again, except a few who were badly beaten in the conflict. It further states that the mayor of the city has detailed a strong squad of city police to reinforce the guards of the company and that they are now on duty. Now if the strikers were only to organize and capture the mayor's seat and fill it with one of their own number, and also capture every political office in the city for their own class, might not better results be reasonably expected from this method of procedure than from the mere capture of forty-two "scabs," who had to be let go as soon as they were captured? The striking workmen had all of their number shot in the attempt, and then accomplished nothing, while with their votes properly placed they could have attained infinitely better results with no danger whatever to themselves. But while workmen prefer to be shot, black-listed and jailed rather than vote their masters out of power the latter will naturally remain perfectly satisfied with the arrangement. They can stand it as long as the strikers, and most probably longer.

THE DETROIT CONVENTION.

As most Socialists will doubtless watch with some curiosity the proceedings of the Detroit convention, the symposium upon that subject which appears on the front page of this issue of the Workers' Call, will perhaps interest our readers to some extent. The writers, who are well-known members of the Socialist party will attend this convention for the purpose of observing its drift, and advancing the Socialist position for the consideration of the heterogeneous body of "reformers" of which the convention is composed.

It is perhaps unnecessary to observe that these comrades will be present merely in an individual capacity and with no thought whatever that they represent the organized forces of socialism as duly accredited spokesmen, and a perusal of their respective articles will at once dispense any suspicion that they are liable to compromise or limit the full demands of revolutionary Socialism.

A large number of this issue will be sent to Detroit and every member of the conference supplied with a copy. While this in itself may perhaps not be productive of immediate results, it will at any rate destroy the possibility of any "reformers" pleading ignorance of the Socialist position as an excuse for requesting action on a basis of "mutual concession" or compromise.

We venture to say in conclusion that the position taken by the writers of these articles will meet with the unanimous approval of all class-conscious Socialists.

The French journal "L'Illustration" gives the "score" of the recent great automobile race, in a pictorial representation of the victims killed and injured by the competing homicidal machines. In addition to hundreds of dogs, cats, chickens, sheep, etc., it seems that fifty-six children were also included in the "loss". There, "L'Illustration" depicts as being hung up on hooks amidst a large number of the so-called "lower" animals, and as a testimony to the artists' accuracy of perception he has correctly clothed the bodies of the suspended infants in the garments usually favored by the working class, coarse blouses and petticoats, string suspenders, and wooden shoes, etc. It is safe to assert however that the "bag" of human victims secured during the automobile race is considerably less than that scored by the factories throughout France in an equal time. A casual glance at the illustration will irresistibly remind the reader of the vast progress made in the last century. "Monsieur" driving from Paris to his chateau in the country, behind four spirited horses, as described by Dickens in the "Tale of two Cities," was only able to bag one proletarian infant during his journey, and eventually paid with his life for the "sport" so obtained; while the modern "Monsieur" is enabled (thanks to improved methods of transportation) to not only discount his score fifty-six times over but to avoid the consequences also. However it has been observed with truth that slavery has a habit of repeating itself and it may very well be apprehended that this dangerous

"sport" may possibly be interrupted with unpleasant results for Monsieur and the capitalist also.

A FURTHER EXAMINATION

Perhaps the most reliable method of ascertaining the power and importance of the Socialist movement in any foreign country can be found in placing together the various opinions of the different capitalist parties, of such country and making a generalization therefrom. It will be found if things political in France are judged from this standpoint that a consensus of capitalist opinions leads unmistakably to the conclusion that all political factors socialism is universally conceded to be the most important, in spite of the dissensions within the party, which, whenever they occur, are invariably heralded throughout the capitalist press of the world as being certain proof of the decadence of the Socialist movement. And although these opinions are mostly given from the standpoint of one or other capitalist factions, they nevertheless, without exception, point to the same conclusion, viz: that socialism is certainly the coming power if not already so.

Looking over last week's budget of political news from France, as it is given by the press correspondents, the above-mentioned facts may be easily discovered. For instance, on June 22d, the second anniversary of the present Waldeck-Rousseau ministry was celebrated as a "record-breaking" event, having lasted longer than any other, with one exception, since the third republic was established. M. Waddington, a politician attached to the present office-holding faction, in a conversation with a press correspondent, asserts that the country has never been quieter and business never better than at present. There is, according to M. Waddington, no cloud upon the political horizon save one. The present ministry he says, owes its prolonged existence to the fact that the Socialist party is divided, and that when this division ceases to exist, the cabinet is certain to be overthrown, a complete admission that the political destinies of France are in the power of the Socialists whenever the latter may see fit to lay hands upon them.

The governor of the Bank of France then adds his testimony to the importance of socialism as a factor in French politics, although he contradicts M. Waddington's complacent assertion that "business was never better," by pointing out that French capital to the amount of $121,000,000 has within the last five months been invested chiefly in Russia, Germany and Switzerland. This "alarming exodus" is stated in the reactionary press to be due solely to the fact that French capitalists dread expropriation through socialism, and are therefore investing their capital in countries where they consider that less danger is to be apprehended from a revolutionary working class. One of these journals asserts that under the third republic the capitalist is to occupy a similar position to the nobility under the first. The latter lost their heads, the former are in danger of losing their property, through the "financial folly" of the present cabinet, which is declared to be paving the way for an "era of socialism."

Nor does the outlook for the forthcoming general elections, which are scheduled for May of the coming year, promise to relieve the situation in the slightest degree but actually intensifies it, from the capitalist point of view. It is sorrowfully admitted that in spite of the dissensions existing between the different Socialist factions, an enormous gain in their votes, at the expense of the reactionary elements, is almost certain, and to make this still more certain the representatives of the Socialist parties are working with the utmost energy to remove any obstacles which might in any way prevent this consummation. That this forecast is thoroughly accepted by those who make it, may be seen in the efforts to consolidate the Clerical, Royalist and Imperialist forces into one homogeneous body for the purpose of coping with the coming revolution; and the attempts to resurrect the spirit of "Chauvinism" as it is called, a political term which implies in French something similar to the "Jingoism" of England or the aggressive capitalist "nationalism" which has been rampant in this country since just before the late war with Spain.

It will be seen from the above, that while a thoroughly united Socialist movement may be highly desirable at present, and absolutely indispensable in the near future, it is nevertheless certain that the social revolution cannot be arrested even if perfect Socialist unity is not immediately attainable. And it is not altogether certain that if such unity did exist at present the France that the realization of socialism would be unduly nearer. While all Socialists should recognize that dissensions as to tactics spring from imperfect conceptions of socialism which are in turn reflexes of an imperfect capitalist development, it is nevertheless obligatory upon them to work constantly for party solidarity, which will eventually be accomplished by keeping pace with the economic evolution which tends always to array modern society into two distinct classes with distinct hostile interests. The fact that the properties of socialism in spite of their different shades of political beliefs are fast uniting to defend their common interests against socialism will act as a powerful agent in compelling a similar solidarity on the part of the working class. When the advocates of capitalist exploitation in France thus confess their recognition of the situation, we may reasonably infer that they have not overrated the case and feel that as the whole movement is in a satisfactory condition, although complete union has yet to be accomplished.

Funds Urgently Needed.

To the Branches of the Socialist Party. Comrades:—There has been sent to you in a separate envelope a clipping from the paper which is a call for funds to send the delegates to the national convention.

We have no other people to call upon for funds except the Socialists, their friends and sympathizers. Therefore we ask you comrades to do your best and let us hear from you a healthy response, accompanied by money. We need quite a large sum to pay the expenses.

Yours fraternally,
 THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
 per W. Kennedy.

English Labor Notes.

The peculiar and promising system of elementary instruction, containing the beginnings of a modern solution of the great problem of education, is becoming known to the reactionary pillars of society. The possibility of poor children acquiring a higher education in the Higher Grade Schools and Evening Continuation Schools is endangering the chance of the bourgeois children for the exploitation of proletarian ignorance. The respectable classes cling to the coat tails of progress and want the old exclusive endowed and grammar schools back. They have a valiant knight in armor Etonian who strikes the expenses for the other schools from the budget of the London school board and receives the support of the courts against the protestants.

According to the seventh official report of the Board of Trade the number of trade union members had increased from 1,649,221 in the beginning of 1899 to 1,942,515 at the end of the same year. This number represents one fifth of the male and one tenth of the female working population. The unions have a surplus of $2,721,500 and a total wealth of $1,530,000. Unemployed members received $65,000, victims of sickness and accidents $1,131,330 and aged and invalids $714,764.

The international congress of miners in London discussed means for avoiding disaster; an international of wages; an invitation to American miners to unite with their European comrades for the purpose of stopping competition among themselves and increasing the chances of their emancipation; the question of flags day for an annual international miners' holiday.

Always remember that the main bulwark of capitalism is the ignorance of the workers. They are in darkness only because they do not know the way out. Are you doing all you can to show them the path?

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

The Austrian consul in Chicago is going home on a three month's vacation and will report to his masters that in all probability the United States will own Europe in a few years. How much worse off the European laborer will be if this prediction comes true he does not state, neither does he give the impression that the American laborer will benefit to any extent by the perpetration of this.

Another "slow" is being aimed at Dowd. An alderman has just conceived a measure which will practically give the right to close Zion when ever they see fit. That is how the papers put the matter, which translated into English, means that Dowd's establishment has been entered upon the list of sources from whence capitalist political campaign funds can be derived when occasion, (in the form of a parolman), demands.

John D. Rockefeller attended service at the Fourth Presbyterian church last Sunday, where he was informed by the pastor that "worldly things are not true possessions but that religion is the only worthy aim of life," and John D. winked the other eye. He appreciates the soundness of the doctrine, knowing that if the fellows who have no worldly possessions can be induced to accept it without reserve, so much the better for their souls and his body—and incidentally that of the gentlemen who preached it.

So far Mrs. Nancy B. Irving has not discovered the "honest business man" for which she offered $1,000, but then that is not the fault of the multitudes of candidates who have claimed the reward. They may have discovered themselves to Mrs. Irving all right, but if they will look closely into the proposition they will find that they have not complied with the terms. They forget that Mrs. Irving is to decide for herself as to what constitutes honesty, and that her conception may be and most probably is decidedly different from theirs.

A handful of "owners of blooded horses" have requested the South Park commissioners to "make a discrimination between the class of horses and vehicles that can be used on the Washington Park roadway," claiming that plowhorses and vehicles with iron tires are spoiling the drive for the purpose for which it was originally constructed, which of course was solely for the gratification of owners of fast horses and expensive rubber tired sulks. The latter should strengthen their request by asserting that as "the streets belong to the people" there is plenty of room for the aforesaid people to drive their plugs upon them without intruding upon "public" property that is intended only for the use of some of the people.

The former assistant secretary of the treasury, Mr. Frank A. Vanderlip, has just returned from a trip to Europe, and brings back information to the effect that the nations on the continent, with, in 1901, when most of the commercial treaties expire, open up a tariff war upon American commerce. Mr. Vanderlip thinks that the war will result in a victory for the U. S. by which term he correctly designates the capitalists of the United States. He says they cannot fight off our factories and our industries with old castles and oil paintings, all of which is doubtless very true, although Mr. Vanderlip is probably mistaken in believing that these weapons are the only means of defence which the European capitalists can wield. However, he evidently has not the slightest idea that the working people of those countries will be forced to take a hand in the game when they discover that they cannot compete with the cheap labor of the United States, and perhaps it is as well that this contingency is disregarded or ignored by the class for which he speaks. "Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad."

One Garland Wilson, a patriot, who patriotically assisted in the benevolent assimilation of the Philippines now writes to the Chicago American soliciting the powerful aid of that paper

A SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE.

Comrades who are interested, asked to meet for the discussion at the Social Temple.

Last Sunday afternoon at the Social Temple there was an informal meeting of comrades interested in the idea of a Socialist Co-operative, and plans for practical work were thoroughly discussed. Suggestions were made by Comrades Richter, Higgins, Stangland, Brennan, Kerr and others, and Comrade Kerr was requested to put into writing for the Workers' Call the plans agreed upon. In order that the comrades of the city may give them consideration. A meeting is to be held at the Social Temple next Monday evening to consider these plans and form a working organization.

The object is to form a Co-operative modeled after those of our French and Belgian comrades, designed primarily to raise funds for socialist propaganda, and incidentally to enable the comrades co-operating to obtain the necessities of life at less than competitive retail prices.

The form of organization proposed is that of a "society not for pecuniary profit" under the laws of Illinois, with life memberships at $10.00 and annual memberships at $1.00. This form of organization is much less expensive than a corporation, and is also much more flexible, as there is no limit to the number of members, which can grow indefinitely as the work of the Co-operative enlarges.

It is proposed to begin with the sale of staple groceries, not including perishable goods and not including articles like sugar and flour, which are usually sold at about cost, but taking in such articles as coffee, tea, cereal foods, canned goods, spices, dried fruits, butterine, etc., which are usually retailed at a profit of from 25 to 100 per cent.

Our plan would be to fix our selling prices low enough to give a substantial benefit to the comrades making purchases, but high enough to leave a safe margin over the cost of handling. Goods should be bought and sold for cash only, no exception to this rule being allowed, and reports should be made of all receipts and expenses at frequent intervals. The profits should be divided in such proportions as the Co-operative might decide by vote of the membership, into two parts, one of which should be appropriated to aid the propaganda work of the party in such manner as seems best and the other used to increase the work of the Co-operative, to which latter purpose all membership fees should also be set apart.

It is suggested that the first sales depot of the Co-operative be located at the Social Temple, for the double reason that this would avoid any new outlay for rent and that it would be easy to have some one in charge of the goods before and after every propaganda meeting, so that comrades from all parts of the city could make their purchases at such times without waste of time and outlay.

It is hoped that as soon as permanent North and South side headquarters are established, branches of the Co-operative can be opened, the purchasing being done in common in order to get the lowest rates.

We cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that every one of the comrades thus far interested is firmly opposed to the idea of incurring any debt or asking for donations in starting this movement. We believe the experience of our European comrades and a sober view of economic conditions in Chicago make it evident that there are more than enough Socialists in the city to make co-operation a success if ordinary judgment is used in the choice of methods.

We have attempted as a start to outline the work only so far as the supply of staple groceries is concerned. When this department is in running order and a small surplus is accumulated, it will be easy to add other departments, such as tailoring, shoes, cigars, men's furnishings and other non-perishable goods, while as soon as a large proportion of the Chicago wage workers become Socialists we can establish delivery routes for bread, milk and other perishable products.

We mention these last merely to show why they are left out of our present program. It is simply because prompt daily delivery is a necessity in these cases. We have a probable customer about 1,000 Chicago families reached by the Workers' Call, but these are scattered over too wide a territory to be reached economically, with perishable goods. However, with the goods we propose to handle, there are probably 1,000 socialist families that can easily help themselves and help the cause by making their purchases at the Temple.

Don't forget the meeting at the Social Temple, Monday evening, July 1. There will be no oratory but a lot of planning to do. Don't stay away and criticize the idea; bring your criticism to the place where it can do some good. If you can't come but want to be counted in, write a postal card to the Workers' Call, saying that you will pledge $1.00 for an annual membership to be paid when the Co-operative is ready to begin work.

CAPITAL AND LABOR

Ex U. S. Attorney General Foresees Future Conflict.

RECOGNIZES CLASS STRUGGLE

Capitalist From "Common Front" Admits the Correctness of His Observation.

Is there a revolution coming? Ex United States Attorney General Wayne McVeagh says there is, and thus gives what may be taken as a sort of official recognition of the fact. But the importance of his utterance on this matter does not lie in the simple assertion of a coming revolution, but rather in the specification of its nature. Mr. McVeagh predicts not simply a revolution (which is at best a vague term capable of many interpretations) but a SOCIAL revolution, a revolution which is the outcome of "obedience to the law of social evolution"—a revolution which has for its object a more equitable distribution of wealth, a revolution in short which is based, frankly, clearly, and completely, upon the recognition of a struggle between economic classes—inevitable, because "in obedience to the law of social evolution."

Wayne McVeagh, Ex United States Attorney General, has publicly recognized the central truth of the Socialist philosophy—the existence of a CLASS STRUGGLE, "in obedience to the law of social evolution."

Wayne McVeagh, Ex United States Attorney General, is not alone in his recognition. He has made no original discovery. He merely thinks upon this question as millions of men think now and as tens of millions will in the near future. What he has said upon this subject has been repeated innumerable times from thousands of socialist platforms in every country in the "civilized" world, and rarely has it been stated more concisely, distinctly, and unreservedly. It is worth repeating.

"Now, if it is at least possible that in the not distant future America will be a Socialist Republic, Webster's warning into history, for our electorate is already beginning to be divided and MUST, IN OBEDIENCE TO THE LAW OF SOCIAL EVOLUTION, continue more and more to be divided by that sharp cleavage which separates those who are contented with their lot from those who are discontented with their lot."

"Under whatever disguise, called by whatever names, inheriting or existing whatever parties organizations, the alignment of the two great political divisions of American voters who will sooner or later struggle against each other for the possession of the government will INEVITABLY be upon the basis I have named."

The party of the contented will be ranged under one banner and the party of the discontented will be ranged under the other, and that alignment will steadily develop increasing sharpness of division, until the party of the discontented, being the majority, has obtained the control of the government, to which under our system they are entitled, and then they will be sure to remodel the present system for the distribution of wealth, unless we have previously done so, upon a basis wiser and more equitable than those now existing."

"The one party will be, under whatever name, the party of CAPITAL, and the other party will be, under whatever name, the party of LABOR."

As may well be imagined, the expression of this opinion has created considerable interest in the editorial rooms of capitalist newspapers. Now it is ever managed to slip unperceived into the columns of the daily press is a mystery which yet remains unsolved. Why it was not garbled, mutilated, and distorted, after the usual method is equally unexplainable. At any rate its appearance rendered an attempt at resistance unavoidable and the paid editors of the Chicago Tribune, Chicago Herald and Chicago Chronicle have had to face a task for which they were about as well equipped as the savage who with bow and arrow confronts a workman armed with a modern repeating rifle—the task of demonstrating the fallacy of the class struggle.

That these writers perceived the fallacy of attempting this feat, may be gathered from a perusal of the petty editorials which they produced in alleged rebuttal.

The Tribune scribe conveniently assumes that Mr. McVeagh finds that "sharp cleavage" alluded to in the attitude of the Democratic party, and then asserts that the Democratic party in 1894 will find some other issue than discontent. He is of course aware that discontent will play some part in the future but he "cannot possibly admit" that it will grow more rapidly than contentment, and become so acute that it will obtain political power and thus remodel the present system of wealth distribution. All of which means that whether McVeagh's prediction comes any truth or not the political battle will be on the same ground as in 1894.

in any case. He is wise enough to know that if he did, the Tribune would quickly find another literary decoy duck to take his place, so he prudently contented himself with denouncing premises which he himself assumed were the basis of McVeagh's contention, asserting the eternity of the Republican and Democratic parties, and assuring Mr. McVeagh that he will never live to see his prognostications realized.

The Record-Herald man then declares that the real line of cleavage is between the "conservative and radical elements of society" and not at all between content and discontent. The struggle is only between those who wish to conserve things as they are and those who are always proposing something new. This gentleman like the other, "cannot possibly admit" that Mr. McVeagh is correct, and for the same reason. Neither can he possibly admit that what he has written in rebuttal, proves, (if it really proves anything) that he agrees with McVeagh. Only call the opposing forces "conservative and radical" instead of contented and discontented, and all will be well. The difference lies altogether in the name.

Last and least the imbecile Chronicle's literary hack enters a feeble denial by asserting that the distribution of wealth is governed by "natural economic law" whatever that abstract phrase may mean. He thinks that it was "extremely unwise" in Mr. McVeagh to speak as he did but he knows positively that it would be still more "extremely unwise" upon his own part to attempt anything more than a general denial. So there isn't going to be any revolution. Mr. McVeagh to the contrary notwithstanding.

It will be observed that not one of these mercenary champions of capitalist robbery, feels competent to discuss the question of the line of cleavage being "in obedience to the law of social evolution," as Mr. McVeagh asserts, for in fairness it must be said that the latter merely asserts the existence of the class struggle instead of demonstrating it. That he can demonstrate it if necessary by an appeal to past history, is altogether probable, but if not, Socialists most assuredly can. That the political writers on the capitalist journals cannot demonstrate the fallacy of his assertions is equally true, BUT it should be borne in mind that their inability to disprove the existence of the class struggle is not due to their limited knowledge but to the impossibility of the task. A socialist who might be on the staff of any of these papers, writing for a livelihood, (and there are many such) could do no better than they.

The best that can possibly be done by writers on the capitalist press, on the rare occasions when they are confronted by the fact of the class struggle, is, after a general denial, to lead their readers to suppose that outside the two political expressions of capitalism no other factors of any importance can exist; that if any change of the nature spoken of is to come about, it must necessarily be the work of one or other of them, and to studiously avoid any mention whatever of the fact that the struggle between two distinctly hostile economic classes is the cardinal principle underlying Socialism.

If it be pleaded that an assertion can be fully answered by a simple negative, it might be as well to say that there is no capitalist journal in existence to day, that dare throw its columns open to socialists for the purpose of demonstrating the reality of the class struggle. Were such opportunity given, there would be no lack of socialist writers ready to take advantage of it, and it is not even unreasonable to suppose that some of the literary slaves who out such a pitiful figure in attempts to refute the irrefutable, might also take part in the far easier task of demonstrating a fact for which the entire past history of the race stands as witness.

But it is useless to expect this, while the world remains under the economic supremacy of the capitalist class, and when that stage has passed no demonstration will be needed. But at least the satisfaction remains with us, of knowing that when confronted with the facts of the class struggle, the apologists of capitalism are forced to adopt the ridiculous tactics of the ostrich by sticking their heads in the mire of ignorance and asserting they "cannot possibly admit" the reality of something which they will not and dare not look upon.

A Chicago board of trade man makes the announcement that he has retired from business because having reached the age of 54 he thinks he should give way to younger men. The "workingman" also retires about that age but it is because no one will hire him. Under socialism he as well as the "rich man" could retire without retiring to the poor house.

Speaking of the life of a harvest hand out West a Chicago "boke" is reported as saying: "Out here, day treats you just like you was a workman—its horrible," from which it is evident that "Weary Willie" and "Dusty Rhodes" have used their powers of observation to escape purposes during their wanderings.

LOCAL PAPER MAKES REPORT

Socialist Editor Explains Challenge to Bryan and Lectures on the "Trusts."

The Nebraska State Journal, of Lincoln, Neb., gives the following account of Comrade Wilshire's speech at the Oliver Theater in that city, on June 21st:

"H. Gaylord Wilshire spoke last night at the Oliver Theater before a good sized audience on socialism. He admitted to his hearers that he did not expect Mr. Bryan to be present when he challenged him, but he said that all things were possible in advertising oneself. He wanted an audience to listen to his talk on socialism and he took what he considered his best plan."

that a trust is a conspiracy of capitalists. The Socialist view a trust as the natural evolution of industry. He reviewed conditions at present. Though the industrial systems are good apparently, it is plain that such conditions are ephemeral. The laborers' wages are fixed by the unemployed and what they are willing to work for. The present state of affairs will not permit the laborer to share in an increased production no matter how large this production may be. There are claps of the times indicating that the process has come to a point where it will not have smooth sailing longer.

In the case of oil refineries, too many such institutions grew up and the demand for oil was not sufficient to support all. Mr. Rockefeller devised the oil trust to obviate this condition. The combination he organized is, however, simply the thermometer to indicate that competition in this line of business reached that point where it was natural to make of it a monopoly.

As a result of the formation of trusts, the capitalists will reach that point where they must deny employment to labor. There are two classes of labor, those operating existing machinery of production and those building new machinery of production. Each depends on the other. The operation of the

to get one together. He said he expected to be called a blatherer, a mountebank, and other anonymous terms for his actions, but he did not care what he was called. He regarded it justifiable to do any trick he might get before the public. He admitted he invited Mr. Bryan, but he did not care, for with the insult to Mr. Bryan came an advertisement to himself, and that was what he was after. He said, too, all along that it was not himself but his subject that he desired to place before the people, but in getting it before them he found it difficult to make his opponents defend themselves. He therefore took an attitude that by stringing remarks he might drive them to say something. He admitted, however, that no person had ever accepted his offer to debate with him. He had the assurance to say this was because his arguments were so irresistibly logical that no one not possessed with the power of hypnosis ever an audience could successfully compete with him on the platform. He admitted that if Mr. Bryan were there he might prove the better orator, but when it came down to logic Mr. Wilshire thought he would be ahead many laps. He said he wanted to meet Mr. Bryan in debate because if he were only able to do this once, he was confident he could win an argument, which would be a big advertisement for one Wilshire.

In opening, Mr. Wilshire said frankly that he had taken occasion to use the name of Lincoln's distinguished citizen, which he was quoted, knowing that whether Mr. Bryan accepted the challenge or not, the fact of Mr. Bryan's connection with the speaker's presence would advertise the cause for which he was working. Mr. Wilshire said there was no personal animus against Mr. Bryan in his presence in Lincoln. The speaker first outlined Mr. Bryan's theory of trusts, which he said was Comrade Job Harriman Outlines His Idea of Organization.

A FLEXIBLE CONSTITUTION.

Powers and Duties of Socialist Officials Under Ready Control of the Party Members.

The approaching Unity Convention, to be held at Indianapolis, July 20th, has given rise to a number of plans for union. The one thus far most advertised is known as the "Strobel plan." In a criticism recently published in the various party papers, I pointed out the fact that this plan provided for separate organizations in each state, instead of a unification of them. It is, however, not sufficient to show the fallacies of proposed plans, but it is necessary to offer some proposition, which, if adopted, would effect the unification of the various factions, nationally and locally, and at the same time it is necessary to overcome the obstacles which now exist. The plan must not be unwieldy, must not irrevocably vest the power of the party in any committee; must be practicable, simple, inexpensive, and above all things, must unify the factions. I submit the following, believing that the above points are all satisfactorily provided for:

The affairs of the party shall be conducted by the National Executive Committee, the State Committee, the locals, the National, State and Local conventions and by the general vote of the party.

BULGARIA.

The party has its seat in Karanlik. Constantin Boswelloff is secretary and treasurer. The official organ of the party is Robotnik cheky Vostok, a weekly published in Sofia under the direction of Comrades G. Kirkoff and Gav. Gueorgiev.

Other socialist papers are: Novo Vremie, a monthly review published in Plovdiv (Philipopol) under the editorship of Comrade D. Blagoff. Troide, an illustrated monthly labor review, edited by E. Dubeff in Bata Zagora. Obchito Delo, a fortnightly review edited by the ex-deputy Comrade Saccapoff in Sofia. By referendum of the various locals, P. Brankoff and C. Boswelloff were nominated delegates to the international bureau. The latter was chosen as corresponding secretary. The party has remitted the first half of its quota.

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

Socialism is still very weak in the vast expanse of the Argentine Republic. It numbers 1,500 active members belonging to 25 groups, 9 of which are located in Buenos Ayres.

The Argentine Republic, as everybody knows, is exclusively an agricultural and stock raising country. It has only two towns with a certain industrial development, Buenos Ayres and Rosas.

The population of the republic is very cosmopolitan. Immigration brings every year a class of generally ignorant individuals, who are often without morality and opposed to any organization. Hence they form a favorable medium for the development of anarchism.

The Argentine socialists endeavor to counteract this state of the proletarian mind and therefore they make strenuous efforts to organize trade unions. They fight unrelentingly against the anarchists who sow the spirit of suspicion and disruption among the working people.

The official organ of the Argentine socialist party is the Vanguardia, published every Saturday. There are furthermore La Luz, published fortnightly; the A B C del Socialismo and Vorwärts, both weeklies. The last named paper is published in German, the other three in Spanish. An Italian weekly will soon follow.

The trade union press numbers three organs: El Obrero Panadero, the organ of the bakers; El Obrero Alaband, the organ of the bricklayers; and La Organización. The first two are strongly imbued with anarchism, the last named emanates from the socialist unions.

The seat of the socialist party is in Buenos Ayres. Mexico No. 3771. Encas Oriental is a clergy and Angel Serna treasurer; delegates to the international bureau are Achille Cambier (Paris) and Charles Dillenbach (Switzerland).

BOHEMIA.

(By Karl Vanek, Secretary of the Czech-Slav-Social Democratic Party.)

The delegates of our party to the international socialist bureau are Anton Némec and Franz Soukup, both of of the political correspondence, supervises the accounts and regulates the expenses incident to political activity. Comrade J. Jensen has similar functions as the head of the united co-operatives. Both sections have their seat in Copenhagen.

The principal organ of the party is the Social-Demokraten, published in Copenhagen, with a daily circulation of more than 41,000 copies. It is the largest socialist paper.

The party has seven dailies in the provinces. Each of these papers has its own editor and press. 1. The Sydjyllands Social-Demokrat, published in Naarsted, southern Sealand. 2. The Fyns Social-Demokrat, in Odense, island of Fynen. 3. The Danmark, in Aarhus, Jutland. 4. The Randers Arbejderblad in Randers, Jutland. 5. The Nordjyllands Arbejderblad in Aalborg. 6. The Hornens Social-Demokrat in Hovore, Jutland. 7. The Vestjyllands Social-Demokrat in Esbjerg.

Nor is this all. Six other dailies are published in the province with the assistance of the editors and presses of the above-named papers. The Ostjyllands Social-Demokrat in Koge, Sealand. The Vestjyllands Social-Demokrat in Slagelse, Sealand. The Silkeborg Social-Demokrat in Silkeborg. The Vejle Social-Demokrat in Vejle, Jutland. The Fredericia Social-Demokrat in Fredericia, Jutland. The Kolding Social-Demokrat in Kolding, Jutland.

The Danish socialist party, then, publishes fourteen political dailies. Besides it publishes a weekly trade review, Samarbejdet, and an illustrated comic paper, Ravnen. Finally, several of the great trade unions have their own organ.

The two delegates to the international bureau are: P. Knudsen, deputy, Himmerstage 22, Copenhagen K., and J. Jensen, deputy, Nørrefarmagade 47, Copenhagen K. The former was chosen as corresponding member. Both of them also act as members of the interparliamentary socialist committees.

few years ago, and against which he daily "warned" the "public". It might determine him to relinquish the "warning" business for good. His warning against socialism was neglected by those to whom it was addressed, simply because it was impossible for them to do otherwise, and if he lives long enough he will see his latest effort in that direction fare similarly, and for the same reason. But no one can deprive the old philosopher of the satisfaction of saying "I told you so". If he wants to get even with the "public" that way.

SALE OF TICKETS.

By far the most important local matter now before the comrades is undoubtedly the work of making the approaching annual Socialist picnic a success in every sense of the word. The Committee of Management are busily engaged in perfecting all arrangements which will conduce to the pleasure and comfort of the day, and if those who have taken upon themselves the sale of tickets will exert their utmost energy to disposing of as many as possible, only one more condition is necessary to assure the success of the enterprise, viz., favorable weather, a factor over which we have no control, though a pleasant day may be confidently expected at this period of the year.

We know beforehand exactly what amount of work those in charge of the details of arrangement have done and are doing, but have no guide whatever, more than conjecture as to the progress of the sale of tickets. Therefore we would once more call attention to the necessity of renewed efforts for their disposal. Let those who have sold many not desist from their work, while those that have sold few should use every effort to make up for lost time in the short period which yet remains. Five thousand tickets presented at the gates on the 14th July next, would set a new record for the local Socialist movement. It is in the power of the comrades to accomplish this if they put to work to attain it.

THE ANCHOR MARKET.

Into whatever branches of industry American commercial enterprise may extend in the future to the detriment of Great Britain, there is at least one such that not only seems destined to remain unconquered by our enterprising exporters, but which actually promises to exploit them indefinitely. This industry cannot be fostered by protective tariffs or protected by a trust, or transplanted to American soil with any hope of success. Its product must always remain an import, for although it has been boastfully stated that American manufacturers have not yet of product better than any European competitor it is nevertheless undeniable that in the manufacture of anchors we are hopelessly outclassed, and must depend upon our rivals, principally Great Britain, to furnish much supplies as are needed, or thought to be needed—which is after all the same thing.

One of our correspondents has furnished us with a prospectus setting forth the fact that an enterprising Britisher has just completed the compilation of an "American Anchor and Blue Book," which can be procured for the trifling sum of 15¢ or thereabouts, and which aims "to record the Arms and Lineage of American Citizens and Register the Landmarks of Family History," to quote the words of the prospectus.

The author will also, for a monetary consideration, supply Coats of Arms, Crests, etc., according to the rules of the College of Heraldry. To any American citizen who feels that he won't be happy till he gets them, and who is prepared to put up sufficient filthy lucre to defray the expenses of research or invention regarding the ancestry that he thinks he should have, a skilled Heraldic artist is also employed who will construct the Coats of Arms, genealogical tree, and other similar appendages pertaining to the manufacture of anchors.

The American citizen—the progeny of the robber barons of the sixteenth century—now has an opportunity of preclaiming to the world through this valuable medium, the fact or falsehood, as the case may be, that his ancestors in the middle ages also displayed the same parasitical characteristics to which their descendants owe their social and economic position in the modern world of capitalism.

IS THERE A CLASS STRUGGLE?

It is not very likely that Mr. Wayne McVeagh will be asked by the capitalists to contribute an article explaining the reasons for assuming that the party of capital and the party of labor would ultimately meet in a final struggle for the possession of the law-making power. Such a task would be easy in fact, but easy of demonstration. One has only to look over the present labor situation to see innumerable signs of this tendency. There is hardly a city of any magnitude in the nation today that has not one or more strikes involving from 50 to 30,000 men on its hands. A multitude of machinists in every industrial centre from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Lakes to the Gulf, are in open revolt against their conditions of life, while another strike of metal workers involving 10,000 men is less than two days, and which may very probably bring out 100,000 more in less than a week, has been declared against a handful of capitalists who own and control means of production amounting to more than one billion dollars, a combination that compels solidarity upon the part of the workers, as may be seen by the fact that the majority of the men on strike are not fighting directly for increased wages for themselves—but for an increase of wages for ALL UNION MEN.

In spite of the alleged prosperity it is plain that never was the spirit of revolt and discontent more ripe than today, and never was the tendency towards solidarity on the part of the working class more marked than at present—a phenomenon which is the reflex of capitalist combination wholly and solely. The significance of this state of affairs is also reflected in the activity of "reformers" and other friends of capitalism, who are now busy disfranchising the negro as a prelude to similar treatment for the white man, advocating old age pensions, single tax, municipal ownership, "Christian" trade unions, "turning the rascals out"—suppression of the saloon evil, the Golden Rule, and a thousand and one panaceas which they assert if adopted would bring peace and harmony between capitalists and laborer.

And in the meantime the two classes drift farther and farther apart, and every day sees thousands of men line up on either side, while socialism, which definitely takes its position as the party of the working class and insists upon the reality of the struggle between the classes, continually gains recruits at the expense of the enemy. If the capitalist press is to be believed, these things mean nothing that is beyond the power of the Republican or Democratic parties to reconcile. Mr. McVeagh sees in them the formulation of hostile economic interests that will eventually meet in a struggle for the control of the country. Our readers can judge for themselves which of these two opinions has the greatest weight of evidence in its support.

A glance at European countries will show that in many places the same situation exists in a still more intensified form. "Never," says a press dispatch from Rome last week, "never has socialism in Italy been so formidable and menacing to existing industrial and political regimes, as at the present moment." While the same dispatch admits that the workers and peasantry are in an extremely dangerous and embittered state of mind; that the revolutionary spirit cannot be stayed; that at any moment a spark may kindle the expected conflagration.

In France the fate of the ministry is completely in the power of the socialists, while in Germany the movement is so powerful numerically that the pretense of the non-existence of a class struggle has long ago been given up by the German capitalists. In Belgium the Socialists are even now in the majority and seeking to further secure their position through universal suffrage, while in every other European country the struggle between the parties of capital and labor becomes ever more distinct and menacing.

Is there a class struggle? Ten thousand capitalist journals all over the world make, a feeble shifty apologetic denial, which is its own refutation. Ten million workmen all over the world by their votes have registered an affirmative, and the logic of events, every day in every shape and form, testifies to their correctness.

Always remember that the main bulwark of capitalism is the ignorance of the workers. They are in darkness only because they do not know the way out. Are you doing all you can to show them the path?

The secretaries of all Ward Branches have been provided with a supply of tickets for the Workers' Call picnic. Along with them is a separate envelope a receipt for the same has been sent, which the recipients will sign and return to this office, 25 N. Clark street, Chicago, which have already received tickets and have not yet returned signed receipts for same are requested to do so at once, as it is necessary that the Executive Committee possess a full account of all tickets that are sent out.

SHAPED BY THE WAY.

If the statements concerning the decadence of socialism in Europe, which appear in the daily press from time to time were as reliable as the reports of new trusts in contemplation, how happy the capitalist exploiter would feel.

The Chicago American, in an editorial attempting to show the value of poverty to the world, states that those who wish to be placed securely beyond the reach of poverty merely crave THE OPPORTUNITY TO BE USELESS. If this is true, how about the successful capitalists? And does it not follow that the highest ideal of capitalist society is the production of useless persons?

The "philanthropy" which induced Mr. Yerkes to improve the passenger transportation facilities of London, is not sufficiently broad to tempt him to invade Paris for the same purpose. He has no doubt heard that French capitalists through fear of socialism were seeking investments in other countries and has concluded that people who don't appreciate their own exploiters are unworthy of help.

The boy orator of the "Fratie" has been warning his "followers" against the "reorganizing element," which he asserts is seeking to control the Democratic party while concealing their hostility to the "Kansas City Platform." Mr. Bryan evidently thinks that the latter crass structure is not yet "sufficiently decayed." In his mind there, seemingly yet exists "a fascination for a ruin that is romantic," as a popular comic opera declares.

The Supreme Court of Ohio has decided that there shall be no prosecution for failure to mark goods made by convict labor, in order to show that fact. There was a law to the effect that such goods should be so marked, but it was held that it didn't apply—at least to goods made in Ohio prisons. In such cases, the fact that the producer is marked instead of the product, seems all sufficient. Labor legislation is always an easy mark for a Supreme Court, anyhow.

A press dispatch from London gives the information that the state robe of the Dowager Empress of China hangs in the window of a tailor's shop in Fenchurch street, waiting for a buyer at $2,500, while a firm in another part of the city, advertising itself as "expert appraisers of loot," which has become a drug on the London market. From which it would appear that modern society can avail itself of facilities for the disposal of this peculiar form of "property," which were utterly unknown in the days of Captain Kidd.

A news item from the Record-Herald on the Detroit Conference says: Walter Thomas Mills of Chicago spoke on "Socialism" and urged the support of reform movements by the workingmen. If teachers would live on the same scale as workmen, he said, the latter would support them without a murmur.

It will be seen from the above that the Record-Herald has thus disqualified itself from entering as a competitor for the $1,000 which Mrs. Nancy B. Irving offered to the business man who could demonstrate that his business was conducted without the assistance of lying.

As an example of class-consciousness we may mention that one of the comrades sent a short item concerning the arrival of St. Gaylord Wilshire of Los Angeles, in this city, to the office of every Chicago daily. The notice referred to the fact that Wilshire had for months used every effort to induce W. J. Bryan to meet him in a debate on the question of trusts, and had offered the latter $5,000 to appear on the platform and $5,000 more if the audience decided that he (Bryan) had the best of the debate. In every office the item was accepted for publication, but it never appeared. Press censorship is not altogether confined to Russia.

Another "reformer," a medical one this time, has come forward with a scheme for changing a negro into a white man by inoculation with a certain germ which it is claimed will eliminate the black pigment in the skin. If this idea materializes it will destroy the occupations of many worthy persons who have devoted their lives to various ways, such as by disfranchisement, lynching, colonization, at Liberia and similar purposes for which it is supposed the negro is eminently fitted. However there is one peculiarity about this "reform" which characterizes it as a genuine and differentiates it from other "reforms." Its inventor declares frankly that it is only skin deep.

A BICYCLE MAILBOX.

Proposed to Party Members Visiting the Indianapolis Convention as Individuals.

A great many of the comrades have expressed a desire to have a bicycle brigade of individual delegates to the Indianapolis convention, which in addition to showing the importance of our organization on the convention floor, can be made a delightful outing and an excellent means of Socialist propaganda in the town between here and Indianapolis.

Already about fifteen comrades have expressed a desire to join such a brigade, and doubtless we can muster from 50 to 75 wheelmen and women who would like to make the trip.

With colors flying, and small banners displayed, a procession of this kind and dimensions would create a sensation, and we could form in the center of each of the towns we entered and hold a successful meeting of a half hour or longer, during which time the less sturdy of the party could put up for the ride to the next town.

Action must be taken at once, and all who think they would like to join the brigade should at once send their name and address to Comrade J. H. Bard, at 713 W. Irving Park boulevard.

Get in Line!

On next Sunday every Socialist in Chicago should make it his special business to attend the parade of the Arbeiter-Sängerbund, which will form at Madison Street and Market Square at 1 P. M. The Federated Singing Societies of the Northwest will give a Monster Concert on that day in the hall of the First Regiment, 15th Street and Michigan Avenue, and the parade in question will march there from the place of assembly. A massed choir of 500 singers will be one of the features of the entertainment.

Many hundreds of sturdy German comrades are enrolled in these societies, which are very strongly permeated with the atmosphere of Socialism, and in requesting the organized Socialists of the city to attend and help out by their presence the parade and entertainment given by these Workingmen's Singing societies, we feel that we are merely asking for a manifestation of working class solidarity which is eminently fitting and proper to Socialist organizations.

No one need be told how during the years in which socialism was despised and ridiculed, when to openly profess socialism was to be looked upon as a cross between a murderer and a lunatic, the German comrades manfully in these societies kept its spirit alive and clung stubbornly to the truths which are now beginning to be admitted by hundreds of thousands of the American people. Let us manifest our appreciation of their services for the common cause of socialism by adding our numerical strength to their marching ranks on next Sunday, July 7th.

A UNIVERSAL OWNER.

I came to a mill by the river side. A half mile long and nearly as wide. With a forest of stacks and an army of men. Tilling at furnace and shovel and pen. "What a most magnificent plant!" I cried. And a man with a smudge on his face replied, "It's Morgan's."

I entered a train and rode all day. On a royal coach and a right of way. Which reached its arms all over the land. In a system too large to understand. "A splendid property this!" I cried. And the man with a plate on his hat replied, "It's Morgan's."

I dived in a nation filled with pride. Her people were many, her lands were wide. Her record in war and science and art. Proved greatness of muscle and mind and heart. "What a grand old country it is!" I cried. And a man with his chest in the air replied, "It's Morgan's."

I went to heaven. The Jasper walls. Towered high and wide and the golden halls. Shone bright beyond. But a strange new light. "What's the meaning of this?" I cried. And a Saint with a livery on replied, "It's Morgan's."

I went to the only place left. "I'll take a chance in the boat on the limestone lake. Or perhaps I may be allowed to sit On the griddled floor of the bottomless sea. But a being lost with horns on his face. Cried out, as he fished me off the place, "It's Morgan's."

Organizers and Comrades holding tickets for the entertainment for the Socialist Orchestra are requested to settle for same by next Sunday.

CORRESPONDENCE.

To Square Accounts.

Comrades:—As the time of the convention is drawing near, the N. E. C. is anxious to close up all its accounts so as to make a complete report as possible to the convention, and in order to do this the comrades are requested to see to it that their Local settles at once for all indebtedness if any for last. Don't stamps for the assessments of 15c. per member levied by the N. E. C. last February, and all comrades are also requested to pay up their dues in date. COMRADES, DON'T FAIL TO ATTEND TO THESE MATTERS AT ONCE.

All secretaries of Locals and State Committees are notified to forward to the National Secretary the names of the delegates elected to represent them at the National Convention immediately after their election, so that a complete list may be on file if needed at the convention.

The attention of all secretaries is also called to the semi-annual reports which they are requested to fill out and forward to the national secretary before July 15th, so that the membership of the party at the present time may be included in our report to the convention.

Prompt attention in all of the above matters will oblige.

Yours fraternally,
 W. BUTSCHER,
 N. E. C.

BOOK REVIEWS.

WOMEN, HER QUALITY, HER ENVIRONMENT, HER POSSIBILITY. By Martha Moore Avery. Boston Socialist Press, 21 Maywood St., Boston, Mass. Paper, single copies 10 cents; 51 per dozen. This eloquent little essay, addressed to members of her own sex, is one of the best things which Comrade Avery has produced up to the present. The position of woman under present economic conditions is truthfully portrayed and an able exposition of those conditions, which forms the chapter on "Environment," follows, the whole concluding with an excellent sketch of the possibilities which socialism will open for women, and an earnest appeal to them to join in the struggle for the complete emancipation of the race from the curse of capitalism and wage slavery. If it were possible to place Comrade Avery's essay in the hands of a million wage working women a strong impetus to the Socialist movement might be confidently looked for. So far as we know the appearance of this book marks the first attempt to bring the truths of socialism directly before the attention of women, and it must be admitted that the essay in question sets an example of strength and clearness that might be used to advantage as a pattern for similar productions in the future.

Explanations Needed.

Speaking of the difficulty of procuring laborers for the Northwest a "business" man, who runs an employment agency, is reported as follows: "I had an order this morning for four men to go to Dakota, free five both ways, $1.5 a day. Not a man could I find willing to go. We've been posted with 'bums' hanging around pretending to look for work, and getting their living by robbing men who had just come in from a few weeks of work out West."

It is very evident that this "business" man doesn't like outside competition in robbing laborers, an occupation for which "employment agencies" as a rule are specially established, judging from the numerous complaints about these institutions which have been continually registered for years back. Hasn't the "bum" as much "right" to rob the laborer that comes into town, as the employment agency has to rob the one that goes out? If it is merely a question of robbery it is rather immaterial as to the personality of the robber whether he be a "bum" on the street or a "bum" in an employment agency. And isn't it rather strange, by the bye, that there should be so many men coming in from the West after a "few weeks work," when the harvests are yet ungathered and wages amounting to $150 per day can be secured? May it not be that the number of laborers coming into the city from the West after a "few weeks work" might explain to some extent the reason why so few can be induced to go out? May it not be that the newcomers are telling stories of their experience which won't at all coincide with the flattering tales of work and wages published in the daily press. "Far off hills are green," but the fellows that have returned from visiting them are not, and they are probably able to unfold a tale which discourages their listeners from attempting to follow their example.

A Necessary "Device."

The inventor of a patent voting machine in San Francisco invents an advertising leaflet recounting its points of superiority over the old methods. The fact that the circular is intended primarily for the use of politicians and capitalists rather than voters, is attested by the enumeration of one "advantage" which appears in a list of nine others. It runs as follows: "A device is attached for locking any number of candidates out of use, as desired in some states."

There is little doubt that the inventor had in mind the necessities of the political situation in some of the Southern States, in calling attention to this "device," and the capitalist politicians will not be slow to see the possibility of its usefulness in suppressing the socialist vote. Such suppression is comparatively easy, but unfortunately for the ruling classes Socialism and the Socialist vote are not exactly one and the same thing. If this inventor would only figure out a device that would suppress the former, his fortune would be assured, but as that

Local Party Progress.

Reports of Organizers of the South, West and 4th District Divisions, on public meetings, party press, financial returns, and general activities for the past week.

A record of growing activity.

SOUTH SIDE.

Comrade Mills, the division organizer, has been attending the reform convention at Detroit since June 26th, and this in connection with the extremely hot weather, has caused a slight falling off in the amount of work done in the district, the boys are very enthusiastic however, and promise to put their shoulders to the wheel and make a record, that will terrify the capitalists from now on. Comrade Cassidy of Roseland, is making a set of handsome banners that will add color and interest to the different ward meetings in the near future.

Our two lady speakers Meedams Forberg and Davies, are building enviable reputations for themselves, and it is becoming quite the usual thing for the organizers to specify that if possible one of these favorites be sent to their own particular street meetings.

THE WEEK'S MEETINGS.
At the close of Comrade Withers' address at Sixty-third and Halsted streets, on the evening of June 25th, the crowd showed no disposition to disperse but remained to listen to a still further exposition of the doctrines of socialism at the hands of Comrade Mills. In the midst of his discourse the fire department dashed by—a fact the speaker took instant advantage of to point out the promptness and efficiency of the public service and to ask why the public saw fit to take the matter of protection against fire out of the hands of private parties yet left the more important business of protecting the public against hunger and cold to irresponsible individuals? The meeting was so interesting that scarcely a person left to go to the fire which was only a short distance away.

Comrade Andersen and Berlyn held another splendid meeting at this same place on June 26th. The crowd was scarcely as large as when Comrade Withers spoke but was very attentive and satisfactory.

One of the best meetings of the week was held at the corner of Thirty-ninth and Cottage Grove on June 26th. Mrs. Davies and Comrade Berlyn and Backus held forth for nearly three hours to a large and attentive audience. Mrs. Davies' accounts of some of the suffering that had come under her observation in the tenement house districts were enough to stir the hardest hearts to resentment. At the close of the meeting a man who had been a very attentive listener came forward with the remark that "I've been a Republican all my life, but from now on I am a Socialist. You have opened my eyes," and in fact it is thought that several others had their eyes opened at several other meetings.

Comrade Saunders delivered an address before the Woodworkers' Union at 63rd and Halsted streets on June 25th that was highly appreciated by all present. The members of the labor unions are beginning to discover that in their contests with capital it is a bad policy to use capitalists' favorite weapon—starvation, for the capitalist can get along without his profits but the workman must have bread. The place to measure strength with the capitalist is where he is weak and the workman is strong—at the ballot box.

Comrades Pierce and Backus rode down to South Chicago on their wheels on June 22nd and held a meeting at the corner of 22nd and Commercial Ave. Comrade McDermott assisted them in expounding the gospel of industrial freedom to an attentive audience.

The Saturday night meetings at 11th and Michigan Avenue are becoming known all among the best in the city and the last one was no exception. Comrades Backus, Kleininger and Taft were the speakers and many were the telling points that they made. One of the audience was anxious to know what sort of homes could be supplied to the people under the new system, as he was tired of paying $25 a month (or 10%) on a home that he could not live in.

On June 26th, Mrs. Davies, Paul Pierce and W. B. Pierce, 4, Horvath, 2, Anderson, 2, Saunders, 1, Nelson, 1, Mrs. Lowrie, 1, Washburn, 1.

New members: Ellis, 4, De Boer, 4, Harper, 4, Raab, 1, Vind, 1, Lowrie, 1, Washburn, 1, Nelson, 1.

WEST SIDE.

West Side Organizers met last Sunday at the Temple. Every organizer answered to the roll call except those from the 4th and 5th Ward Branches. Reports showed that every ward has held an open air meeting during the week, except the 19th which will be organized next Saturday at Comrade Dr. Kamlin's office, 373 E. Halsted St., corner Torqueur Street.

Committee on By Laws was given further time. Meeting of organizers was arranged for to discuss best methods of agitation and exchange ideas on the subject.

Officers were elected for a term of six months, thus—Rec. Sec., J. P. Larsen, Fin. Sec. G. D. Evans, Treas. J. McMill, Division Organizer A. Klenke with salary of $12 per week.

Secretary was instructed to appear before General Committee and recommend the re-consideration of the payment of $2 per week to each Division.

Comrade Hechtman (7th Ward) reported having secured 7 ads for the Workers' Call in the last two weeks, and recommended that other branches do likewise.

AGITATION.
Fourteen out door meetings and one indoor (at the Temple) were held during the week. On Tuesday Comrades Kiangland, Untermyer and Goodspeed spoke at 48th and Lake, and Comrade Huggins at Centre and Blue Island Avenue. On Wednesday the 12th Ward held its open air meeting at 24th and Oakley Avenue, where Huggins and Breppan spoke to a large audience. Same evening, 14th Ward held a large meeting on Roby and Chicago Avenue.

On Thursday Comrade Fox spoke at Paulina Street and Milwaukee Avenue. On Friday a "property owner" endeavored to break up a meeting at the corner of O'Brien and Halsted streets on the plea that "nobody" was sick. The bluff (an old one) didn't go and neither did the comrades (Klenke and Goodspeed and Morris) who made a few more people sick of capitalism—through their addresses.

Same day at the corner of 19th and Paulina, Comrades Robbins and Evans opened fire. There was a "Democratic Headquarters" (saloon) on one side and a "Republican Headquarters" (ditto) on the other, which gave the speakers an opportunity to expose the rottenness of both old parties.

Saturday, no less than five open-air meetings were held, thus establishing a record. The locations were Hoyne and Madison, 42nd Ave. and 24th St., West Ave. and Homer St., Paulina and Milwaukee, and Carpenter and Milwaukee. The speakers were Comrades Robbins, Fox, Goodspeed, Huggins, Klenke, Bartels, Brennan, Collins, Morris, Knox and Evans.

Sunday afternoon saw a large audience at North and California Ave. to listen to the debate between Mueller (Single Tax) and Caplan (Socialist). Many questions were asked from both speakers after the debate had closed, and then Comrade Klenke opened the regular Socialist meeting which lasted from 4 p. m. to 11. The proceedings were enlivened by a Single Taxer who asked to address the crowd from the stand. It was given him and he amused the crowd by futile attempts to expose the "fallacies" of Socialism. A collection of $4.20 was taken. Comrade Collins, Brennan and Ballard spoke at Collins and Madison Ave. on the same day, while at the Temple the usual Sunday evening meeting was held.

ANNOUNCEMENTS:
Saturday 10 p. m. Organizers meeting at the Temple. Organizers are requested to be present on time as at 1 p. m. the comrades will start for the down-town parade.

Temple meeting 3 p. m.—Speaker, M. Caplan.

Baseball team meets for practice Sunday 10 p. m. at Western and Chicago Avenue instead of as formerly at 48th and Lake.

West Side comrades are requested to hustle the sale of pic-nic tickets. The West Side must positively send 2,000 people through the gates on the 14th July. Every man must work might and main towards this important end as we are bound to lead all other divisions of the city in this respect. It is the greatest day of the year, so let us work that through our efforts the grounds may be taxed to their utmost capacity.

NORTH SIDE.

The North Division Agitation District is now in complete working order and thoroughly organized.

The following officers were elected: Recording Secretary, R. A. Morris; Fin. Secretary and Treasurer, F. W. Knox. Report on open air meetings was as follows: 21st Ward Branch holds public meetings every Thursday, 8 p. m. at N. Clark Street and Walton Place. 22nd Ward—Orchard Street and North Avenue on Tuesday evenings. 23rd Ward—Shoemaker and Wrightwood Avenue Sunday evenings. The 22nd and 23rd Ward Branches hold no meetings as yet.

Comrades Knox and Morris were instructed to visit the branches at their business meetings and speak on the need of a strong organization and a working membership. Comrade Morris was elected to represent the North Division at the meetings of the organizers and arrange for speakers.

Arrangements were made to secure permits for the following new meetings: North Clark street and North Avenue, Sundays at 4 p. m., in charge of Twenty-third Ward; Division street and bedwidge court, Wednesdays, 8 p. m., in charge of Twenty-second Ward branch; Belmont and Lincoln avenues, Fridays, 8 p. m., in charge of Twenty-fourth Ward branch.

Branches have arranged to secure due stamps, application and subscription cards through the division secretary, and will give special attention to the circulation of the Workers' Call. Secretary was authorized to secure 50 Call subscription postals and a supply of due stamps. Collections are to be taken up at all public meetings. Question of hiring organizer was not decided, but it was arranged that in case one was hired, the $2 per week from the party was to be waived by this district.

AGITATION MEETINGS.
Very successful open air meetings have been held during the week, and less disappointment has arisen from the failure of speakers to appear than formerly. The supply of speakers is now tolerably well assured. Our best meetings were held at Clark street and Walton place, and Orchard street and North Avenue. At these meetings collections amounting to $3.75 were taken up, over 300 Calls sold and 7 postal subscription cards for the party organ. On Sunday the meetings at Lincoln Park attracted 300 people, who listened most attentively to the speakers. Over 100 Workers' Calls were sold, with 4 subscription cards, and a collection of 75 cents was taken up. This meeting will be continued regularly.

The meeting at Sheffield and Wrightwood avenues, in charge of the Twenty-fifth Ward, was well attended, although the weather was rather too warm to hold the crowd. A collection of 35 cents was taken and literature to the amount of 10 cents was sold.

Comrades should at present devote every energy to the sale of Workers' Call picnic tickets, as funds are urgently needed by the paper. Convention delegates' fund should also be attended to.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

At the organization meeting last Friday, roll call showed all the branches.

Branch 1 of the 27th ward reported 40 house delivery subscribers to Workers' Call; branch 2 reported 39 subscribers, and branch 3, 16 subscribers.

Five hundred additional regular readers of the Workers' Call on the house delivery plan, is our mark for the next sixty days. Drop in line comrades and do some hustling; a big addition to the regular readers of the Call means a big addition to the Socialist vote next election.

In addition to our five regular weekly meetings, the organizer was instructed to establish regular monthly meetings as soon as possible at the following towns: Hanson Park, Mayfield, Irving Park, Jefferson Park, Norwood Park, Mt. Clare and Rossmore.

The organizer stated that the total receipts since the spring election were about $12,000; total expenses about $7,000, cash on hand $3,000. Organizer was instructed to present a complete financial report at the next meeting, and to open a set of double entry books in which to keep the accounts of the organization.

Saturday evening the meeting at Grace and Whipple was highly attended, hence the hustlers in branch 3 are going to evaluate and set up their rapid fire guns on the corner of Belmont and Elston avenues, fully determined to exterminate the competitive idols erected in the hearts of the people of that locality, and plant in its stead the co-operative germ, which will eventually develop the human machine into human men and women capable and with leisure, to further develop all that is good, true and noble within them.

Tuesday evening the meeting at Armitage and Tripp was well attended and a complete success. Collection $7.00, in addition to discovering a $7.00 interest manifest for socialism in this locality. We also discovered some good speaker timber, which is badly needed by our district. Those further meetings may uncover more prospective speakers. That's the way boys, don't be afraid of the soap box. While its only a soap box it beats the average college for fitting a man to be of real and permanent benefit to himself and his fellow, and our district is just asking to give out a few more diplomas.

Wednesday evening our first meeting at Belmont and Lincoln avenues turned out all right, although this is more than we can say for the comrades that didn't turn out. But all will be forgiven if you make it hot, around that corner each Wednesday evening hereafter. The speaker was asked many questions, which in most cases seemed to have been satisfactorily answered. Much interest was manifest throughout. This will doubtless prove a valuable corner to roll up your sleeves (comrades), and get these people setting in their own interests for a change.

The meeting at Milwaukee and Diversey Thursday evening was a lively one. There seemed to be an unusual number of inquisitive persons present, which added materially to the interest of the meeting. Comrade Robbins, the principal speaker of the evening, handled the inquirers without gloves, and some of them learned more about socialism in a slightly few minutes (than they had been able to acquire during the whole of their past lives).

LABOR ITEMS.

And Notes From Trades Union Journals and Exchange, Throughout the United States.

Trade unions in this country, it is calculated, have increased 100 per cent during the past 15 months.

International Salt Trust is in process of formation, which will practically control the world's supply.

Social Democrat elected to city council in Rich Hill, Mo., making two out of four now controlled by the R. P. P.

Goss Printing Co. of Chicago contended the demands of the striking machinists, of whom 150 have returned to work, on the basis of a nine-hour day and 10 per cent increase in wages.

Non-union carpenters to the number of 135, employed by packinghouse firms of Armour and Nelson-Morris, are striking for an increase of wages. They had been receiving 25 to 30 cents per hour.

The binder twine trust in protesting against the convict-made twine turned out by the Kansas penitentiary. Trust says it is unable to compete with the prison-made products. Is this a case of robbers robbing robbers?

There is no class struggle, of course, but just the same 50,000 workmen of the Amalgamated Iron, Steel and Tin Workers' Association are now standing face to face with half a dozen trust owners, each declaring that they will fight to a finish.

Standard Oil Co. has erected a petroleum store house with a capacity of 250,000 barrels in a river port in Southern Manchuria. Russian capitalists controlling all fields of Alaska are alarmed at the invasion and announce their intention to fight the invaders.

A scheme to combine all the cop combinations in one combine, is reported as waiting the return of J. P. Morgan from Europe. A scheme to combine all the coal miners at the ballot box will eventually result when the latter discover that combination is a good thing for them also.

Strikes and boycotts continue to rage in nearly every city of the country, and reports from everywhere are in effect that hundreds of recruits are joining the ranks of organized labor for the purpose of moving up several more steps in securing better social conditions.

Chicago Trades Unions have been busily engaged last week in electing officials. Lathers, Plumbers, Electrical workers, Cigar-makers, Carpenters, Steam Fitters, Bookbinders, Bridge and Structural Iron workers, Engineers, Gunsmiths and Painters are amongst those who have been so employed.

There is no official confirmation of the report that the two principal candidates have joined Morgan's billion dollar steel combination, but as Mr. Morgan says that "no one of the public's business," official confirmation is by no means indispensable at the present stage of affairs. Only when Morgan has exhausted the possibilities of trustification, will it become "the public's business"—through Socialism.

The statement of Congressman Taylor, Rep. of Ohio, before the Industrial Commission, in Washington, is causing much comment. Mr. Taylor said he didn't know the remedy for trusts, but that they "will lead to socialism because the people represented by the government will arise and take into their own hands the work operated for the few and operate them for the benefit of the many." Such thoughts are growing nicely.—Cleveland Citizen.

The Social Democrats have three speakers in Oregon. In Portland, according to the Daily Times, "a man who attracted such a crowd as to blockad a street Sunday by talking socialism was hustled off to jail. Other street harangues are immune from arrest, though they are so common and numerous that perhaps they are not able to commit the offense of blockading the street."

THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Party Members Meet and Propose Plans for a Co-Operative Grocery for Socialists.

Pursuant to an invitation published in last week's Call, about forty comrades met Monday evening, (July 1st), in the Socialist Temple, for the purpose of discussing the proposed plan of a co-operative grocery for Socialists.

Comrade Huggins was nominated chairman, and stated in a short and lucid introduction the origin, purpose and chances of success of such a venture.

Comrade Kerr then outlined the plan of organization, and recommended adoption of the following preliminary by-laws:

1. Name. The name of the association shall be the "Socialist Co-operative of Chicago."

2. Object. The object shall be to advance the principles of international socialism, by the circulation of literature and the contribution of funds to the Socialist party, and incidentally to benefit mutually the members of the Socialist Co-operative by supplying them with necessary goods at less than current prices.

3. Membership. Any member, or the wife of any member of the Socialist party, may become a member of the Socialist Co-operative by payment of a membership fee of five dollars. At least 50 cents of this amount must be paid in cash at the time each member is enrolled; the remainder shall be deducted from the rebates on purchases as provided in Section 5.

4. Meetings. The annual meeting of the Socialist Co-operative shall be on the 1st Monday of September of each year. Special meetings shall be called by the Board of Directors whenever petitioned by ten per cent of the membership, notice of such special meeting to be published in two successive issues of a Socialist newspaper published in the city of Chicago.

5. Directors. The control of the Socialist Co-operative shall be vested in a board of nine directors, to be elected by ballot at the annual meeting. Each member shall vote for nine candidates and the nine persons receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. They shall hold office for one year, but any director may be removed by a majority vote of the members present at any special meeting.

6. Officers. The directors shall choose from among their number at each meeting a chairman to preside over the deliberations of such meeting. They shall also at their first meeting elect from among their number a secretary and a treasurer, and shall elect a manager, who need not necessarily be one of the Directors. All officers except the chairman shall hold office until a new Board of Directors is chosen, but may be removed by an affirmative vote of not less than five Directors.

7. Duties of Secretary. It shall be the duty of the Secretary to keep a record of the proceedings of the annual meeting and special meetings of the membership and of the meetings of the Directors, and to perform such other duties as usually pertain to this office.

8. Duties of Treasurer. It shall be the duty of the Treasurer to receive all moneys belonging to the Socialist Co-operative, and to pay out the same upon vouchers signed by the manager, and to make a weekly report of receipts and payments to the Directors and a quarterly report in printed form to the membership.

9. Duties of Manager. It shall be the duty of the Manager to make purchases and arrange for the sale of merchandise, subject to the general instructions of the Directors, to employ and discharge such employees as may be required, and to have a general supervision of the whole work of the Socialist Co-operative. He shall be present at each meeting of the Board of Directors and shall, whenever requested, give full details regarding the work, in his charge.

10. Rebates. The manager shall fix the prices of goods at approximately the same as charged at retail stores, and shall not purchase such goods as are customarily sold at a profit less than ten per cent. Every member shall have a card or pass book on which his purchases shall be entered. At the end of each quarter the Directors shall issue a statement showing the gross receipts, the amount paid for goods and for expenses, and the net profit. Of the net profit one-eighth shall be devoted to Socialist propaganda, in such manner as the Directors shall determine; one-eighth shall be set aside for the increase of the stock of goods of the Socialist Co-operative and the remaining three quarters shall be returned to the members in proportion to the amount of their purchases, not however in the form of cash, but in the form of credit.

In the ensuing discussion the following points were brought out: The majority is in favor of such a co-operative. There shall be no rebates. The co-operative is to be organized in order to prevent the possibility of capitalist elements gaining control of the venture. No comrades should be eligible as man-ber of the Board of Directors or as any other officer, unless he belongs at least six months to the party. The chances for the success of the venture are guaranteed by the present condition of the grocery business.

A motion to nominate a charter committee of three was carried, but no action was taken. It had become rather late and about half of the comrades had left, when the following final motion was carried:

The minutes of this meeting shall be published in The Call, and a meeting shall be called on Monday, July 15th, 8 p. m., at the Socialist Temple, for the purpose of constituting the corporation. No discussions to be in order, but action for immediate organization be taken. ALL WARDS ARE INVITED TO SEND DELEGATES WITH INSTRUCTIONS. Comrades are requested to discuss the matter at their ward meetings.

"Freedom of Contract."

A story comes from Burlington, Kansas, to the effect that the farmers of Ogemaw county, driven desperate by the sight of their wheat crops being ruined for want of harvesters, held up a train on the Santa Fe road, and at the muzzle of revolvers compelled the crew to cut loose from the train two emigrant cars containing harvest hands bound for the western fields.

The latter resented this action and a fierce conflict ensued between the two hundred harvesters and the armed farmers. After several had been injured on both sides a "compromise" was effected by which the two hundred, agreed to work for the farmers at $3.50 per day. It is said that great excitement exists over the serious nature of the offence and the prominence of the parties engaged—which latter phrase doesn't apply to the kidnapped harvesters, but to the farmers.

This story, if true, proves several things. It demonstrates that the boasted "freedom of contract," which the laborer is said to enjoy, only exists when the latter is seeking work, and is promptly suspended when the employer is seeking labor power, as for the "seriousness of the offence," it will be found eventually that the farmers are as safe from the intervention of the law in this case as they would be had they merely burned a negro at the stake. Kidnapping is only a serious offence when practiced on a member of the ruling class. To steal the son of a packing house millionaire like Cudahy, is infinitely more "serious" than the stealing of a few hundred workmen, who at best are considered merely as raw material necessary to the process of production.

The Line of Least Resistance.

What's the use of working for $3 a day when you can live a whole week on 25 cents? This is the reply given to a reporter of one of the Chicago dailies, by one of a group of idle men who stood on the curbstones, utterly indifferent to the fate of the Kansas wheat crops, which are said to be rotting in the fields for want of labor. A long and doleful screed condemning this attitude follows the remark. We would like to ask how is it that under capitalism these men lack "incentive," to such an appalling extent? Had they been the product of a Socialist commonwealth their attitude to labor could be easily explained from the ordinary capitalist point of view. Yet there is an exceedingly sane philosophy underlying the reply of the idle one, if a little trouble is taken to unearth it. Even capitalism with its distortions and falsifications cannot wholly obliterate the perception that work is a means instead of an end; that men work to live instead of living to work. The only manner in which such men could be induced to go to Kansas, lies in debarring them an opportunity of obtaining 25 cents per week upon which they can LIVE. And as this is impossible, owing to the fact that other capitalists here require the cheap labor of these cheap men who want to "live," nothing further can be done unless the blessed "freedom of contract" is abrogated.

"Labor is the great educator, rest giver and perpetuator of the race. The average day laborer at the present wages, if honest, temperate and industrious, gets more enjoyment out of life than the average millionaire."

This is what a writer signing himself "Old Soldier" says in the New York Journal of June 22d and this is what Mrs. Ella Wheeler Wilcox says in the same paper commenting upon the above effusion:

"I believe every word of the above letter. Never was labor so respected as today. Never was it so well paid. Never was it so nearly equal in power with capital."

And this is how the New York Journal itself corroborates the statements of "Old Soldier" and his endorser: "Mary Ferriss, who May 22nd last was removed with her two children, Francis, 4 years, and Margaret, 1 year, from 217 Bowers, died this morning in the hospital. The woman, as well as her two children, were suffering from exhaustion caused by starvation. She had been unable to support herself and family. The younger child died two or three days after their admission to the hospital and the other one a week later."

From all of which it may be inferred that the reputation of a "clever writer" is often conditioned upon the existence of stupid readers.

If the oratory of the pulpit were taken seriously, it would immediately put a quietus on those preachers who have developed the habit of denouncing "materialism" in their sermons. Our daily papers team with accounts of such sermons, preached by highly-paid clergymen all over the land; whose salaries are dependent upon the "materialism" of the wealthy members of their congregations. These denunciations have usually about as much effect as the barking of a yellow dog has upon the moon, the fact being that those who have paid most attention to material things as regards their accumulation, are always the most influential members in any church, and the very people whom the average clergyman takes the greatest pains to conciliate, knowing, as thousands and millions of other wage slaves know, that the means of subsistence depends upon their favor.

The denunciation of "materialism" or "worldliness," as it is sometimes called, is a sort of pious fraud that imposes neither upon the preacher or his wealthy supporters. It is a doctrine that is intended for the consumption of people who possess little or nothing and who have small hope of ever being otherwise, as it gives an opportunity of assuming the "virtues" of spirituality and "other worldliness" to the fellow who lacks material possessions.

THE SILVER CROSS
—or—
The Carpenter of Nazareth
—by—
EUGENE RUE

The plain, but thrilling story told in a masterly manner by the great French author, and held of the reader as soon as he starts to read it. Stripped of the Church garb, Jesus appears before us as the type of the earnest, honest, selfless worker, a figure which history has reproduced with slight variations in every crucial period in the progress of man's life, when the old order of things had passed and was about to give way to the new.
Aids from being a story of most absorbing interest, with dramatic incidents second to none, the book gives that noble character to the teachings of the carpenter of Nazareth which most of our generation—whether Christian, Jew or freethinker—have failed to preceive through the haze of Church legend which attaches to the story of Jesus.
As a picture of society and the social classes of that epoch with the struggle rapidly within it, this story will throw a strong light on our own conditions of to-day.
121 pages, cloth, with or without silver cross decoration, price 40 cents.

THIRD YEAR—WHOLE No. 123

CHICAGO, ILL., SATURDAY, JULY 13, 1901.

PRICE ONE CENT.

SOCIALISM AT DETROIT.

Comrades who were present, describe the gathering. Stumping a "Gold" Democrat. Bismarck landed as a "Socialist" by Congressmen. Socialists play skittles, with "reformers" as ten pins. The attempt to form a "third party". Unconscious endorsement of the Socialist position. Resolutions passed almost unanimously and then tabled. Conference finds Socialist logic impregnable, and dissolves, probably for ever. Various notes and observations on the proceedings.

The one impression which dominates all others concerning my recent trip to Detroit was the all pervading character of the growth of socialism. Everywhere it was the same story of new converts, increasing interest, and disintegrating capitalist parties. At Benton Harbor, Kalamazoo and Battle Creek, which were visited on the trip towards Detroit, there was everywhere found evidence of great socialist activity. Rousing outdoor meetings were held, questions asked and new interest aroused.

Driven to the Last Ditch.

An illustration of the hopelessness of Democratic party from the gold Democratic point of view was shown in Battle Creek. A politician of that persuasion who occupies a prominent place in the councils of his party, said that he still hoped that if Olney or Whitney were nominated and the party "re-organized" there might be some hope of being in the race in 1904. "What will be your issue?" I asked. "Well I think that we might make a fight on the trust issue," was the reply. Of course this was interesting and I was anxious to know just what he expected to do to the trusts. He explained that he thought that some system of taxation might be devised that would gradually tax the trusts to death. On my pointing out that it was recognized by all economists that a trust having the power to control prices could not be taxed, but would simply shift all such burdens to the consumer, he replied: "Yes, that's true, but we will take the tariff off and then they cannot raise the price." "How about international trusts?" I suggested. "Well," he answered, "I will have to admit that I do not have any very clear idea of what we will do, but I think that some way will be found." This Michigan like hoping that "something will turn up" is the last ditch of the old party followers.

Don't Train Parrots Perform.

Arriving in Detroit I found that Comrades Mills and Wilshire were having no end of amusement with the politicians and "reformers". A meeting on "Reform or Revolution" had been arranged by the Detroit socialists at which the socialist members of the Conference were invited to speak. A large number of delegates were present as well as many Detroit people and a rousing meeting was held. At its close some DeLeonites who were present tried to start up the rickety old "buzz saw" but found as usual that they possessed nothing more dangerous than a wind-mill. They tried making a disturbance in the hope of breaking up the meeting, but finally succeeded in getting calmed down to the point where they could spring the regulation set of questions concerning Cary and the Army, etc. By the way Daniel should take a day off and write out a new set of questions for his followers, as the old ones are getting somewhat tramped around the edges and his men do not seem to have sense enough to even occasionally vary the style, and thus break the monotony of imbecility. After Danny's followers had blown off their steam, the remainder of the audience began to ask intelligent questions and a most interesting discussion was carried on for some time.

Bismarck as a "Socialist".

The next morning as I was entering the Conference Hall, I was of my surprise to hear a speaker say from the platform: "The only vital force in political life today is socialism. The socialists of Europe are the only ones who represent social and political progress." As I knew that some of the socialists were on the platform, I was somewhat surprised, but having been properly warned by various private as well as open letters from socialist comrades concerning the danger of being "captured by the burg-boss" which any socialist subjected himself to by attending this conference, I did not at once rush headlong into the arms of the speaker (whom I now saw was Congressman J. J. Lewis) and embrace him as a long lost brother. Being properly forewarned I waited for him to continue. "The time has now come when we must nationalize the railways," he said. "The German socialists did this years ago. Led by Count Bismarck, the greatest of German socialists, they enacted a series of laws for the benefit of the workers." Now this was information with a vengeance, and I saw at once that the socialists were in imminent danger of being captured and was very thankful that some of them had stayed in New York from whom they could deal deadly blows to all who would attempt to capture them through the party means which the reformers had served to show the deep hell into which they heard of and hence could not easily capture. But having been brought up with the idea that the proper way to fight anything was to get close enough to it to hit it, I foolishly arose to reply to Mr. Lewis. "As a man and a socialist," I said, "I cannot sit still and hear the man who dedicated to the work of capitalism the hard earned pennies of the German socialists, who made it a penal offense for two or more men to meet together as socialists, who killed or imprisoned all those who dared to speak for socialism, who stood in fact as the most complete antithesis of socialism that this generation has produced and who was its most skillful and unscrupulous enemy, designated as a socialist. The speech to which we just listened however is more important as an indication that a certain stage has been reached than for what the speaker said. It indicates that the capitalist politicians of America have been compelled to see what Bismarck recognized long years ago that socialism is a power that must be reckoned with. American politicians are seeking to follow in his steps and hope by stealing the forms of socialism while retaining the substance of capitalism, to keep themselves in power for some years longer." At this stage in the game Mr. Lewis suddenly left the room and the Conference, and never took part in its discussions from then on. Another sure sign that those comrades knew what they were talking about who said the socialists who went to the Conference would be swallowed.

And so the fun went on. It was one grand glorious continuous joke, so far as the socialists were concerned. They simply ran around and pointed their fingers at the reformers of the time jump. Over and over again we sang in their ears the story that we were not reformers but revolutionists, and that the logic of socialism was so impregnable that they dare not discuss it. They replied that we were arrogant and egotistic, but did not deny the principles and positions that we set forth.

The "Third Party" Abortion.

On the second day of my arrival I was asked to meet with the group that had been formed to arrange for the organization of a third party. Now, according to our cautious friends, was the time when I should have hunted for a cyclone cellar and remained carefully concealed until these terrible individuals had disappeared. These were the special monsters whose regular diet was "raw socialism, and to enter whose presence was certain death to anyone connected with a revolutionary organization. But "fools rush in, etc." and I never did claim to be an angel, and so I boldly called into the proceedings. A few moments later Comrade Wilshire also braved the danger of infection, and there we were, two babes in the woods surrounded by these terrible, contaminating, compromising, devouring beasts, who looked and acted very much like other human beings, and did not seem to entertain any hostile designs. However, having been properly warned, Comrade Wilshire and myself prepared for battle. I called the attention of those present to the fact that the man who was there to represent the St. Louis Public Ownership party had been doing some tremendous lying on the floor of the conference as well as through the press, and in the literature that they had distributed in the conference, regarding the participation of socialists in their affair and then told them that if they were men they would either prove their statements at once, when I would gladly apologize, or else keep their mouths shut and remain silent for the remainder of the Conference. They chose the latter alternative and never took part in its proceedings from then on. I then pointed out that in all countries the break-up of capitalism was accompanied by the formation of numerous complaining, reforming parties who gradually disappeared, as the classes they represented were crushed out, and in the end those who opposed capitalism were forced into the socialist party and were compelled to accept its principles. "You can either do this now or later when forced by economic necessity," I continued. I then assured them that I represented as one but myself, but assured them also that the socialist party did not spend most of its time hunting for a cyclone cellar, but that they were about as fearful of us as some of our comrades had been of us, and finally this terrible group of conspirators, this head of organized destroyers of socialism, went UNANIMOUSLY to endorse the Social Democratic Party, and if I could not remember the exact words, I would show the deep hell into which they derided it all they appointed me one of the delegates to present this report to the Conference.

Rolling Them Over

Meantime at every session of the Conference the few socialists who were present were doing their best to keep from being absorbed. Comrade Steedman made a magnificent speech showing the application of the materialistic philosophy of history to the formation of political parties, and pointing out with impregnable logic that the socialist party alone contains any germs of vitality. Comrade Corinne Brown spoke on Woman Suffrage, but brought out the same lesson, while Comrades Mills and Wilshire sought in vain to find some one who would accept their challenges to discuss the positions of socialism. Over and over again a whole row of reform positions would be set up only to have one of these comrades bowl them over with a cheerful invitation to "let 'em up again." It was really too easy to be amusing.

Resolutions Hypnotize "Reformers".

Finally on the last day there were resolutions to be introduced, and this proved the greatest fun of all. I hope that the croakers are having close attention at this point to see what they missed by being cautious. The socialists had prepared a series of resolutions which because of their arrangement formed a logical argument for socialism, and we therefore asked that they

"Resolved, Sixth, That to strain this result we declare necessary the success of a political party representing the people who desire these ends." And even this was adopted by a considerable majority (25 to 5).

A Ludicrous Awakening.

Then began the most laughable thing that perhaps ever took place in a gathering of supposedly intelligent people. Everyone of these propositions had been adopted by an overwhelming vote on its own merits, but now that it became generally recognized that such adoption meant the endorsement of socialism, the timid ones, like some socialists, and so by a vote of thirty to thirty-five the whole matter was laid on the table.

Socialism Predominant.

Then came the grand wind-up for the socialists in the meeting arranged by Comrade Wilshire. Comrade Corinne Brown presided and the various comrades who had been present at the Conference occupied the time. Hence to say that it was a rousing meeting with a larger attendance than was present at any meeting of the Conference itself (Detroit papers to the contrary notwithstanding) and that the socialist participation in the Conference, which had been one long glorious series of the Conference was true, not one of their prophecies fulfilled, not one of their criticisms justified. The members of the Conference, with the exception of a half dozen professional politicians, who were here to seek their own advantage, and perhaps a score of Single Taxers, who went chasing round and round the race track circle of ideas (?) that goes to make up their doctrine, were willing and anxious to hear and learn. It was the most fertile field for socialist propaganda I ever encountered, and every phase of the result justified the action of those socialists who participated.

A. M. SIMONS.

ECHOES FROM DETROIT.

It was the general opinion of the socialists who did attend the Detroit conference that it was not at all a misfortune that more of the socialists were not there. After so many had not decided not to attend but had urged others not to go there could be no feeling on the part of the non-socialists that any effort had been made to capture the body, by any concerted action on the part of the socialists.

Enough Socialists Present.

There were socialists present sufficient in number and active enough in the conference discussions to present the socialists' point of view on every question at any time considered by the conference. At the beginning there

SOCIALIST BRICKLAYERS.

Busy laying foundations of new Social Structure which must be ready for occupancy on March 4th, 1906, if possible. Plentiful material at hand. Workers required. Bring kit of tools which must include Workers' Call Sub Postals. Report for work any Saturday night at Socialist Temple. Birth and growth of the Socialist Bricklayer's Educational Club. Activity demanded from every member. Socialist Bricklayers Club is not a Sanatorium, therefore no invalids need apply.

The Socialist Bricklayers' Educational Club was organized April 6th, 1901. The object of this club is to get the Socialist Co-operative Commonwealth, and as a means to an end, to spread socialism among the unions. The trade unions offer the most fruitful fields for Socialist propaganda. They are already organized and recognize the need of organization. They are beginning to recognize that socialism is the real objective point of trade unions. The socialists stand for all that the trade unions contend for. The unions demand short hours, long wages, (with no limitations on either). They demand better conditions of labor for ALL their class, regardless of whether all their class deserve it or not. Scab or union man, it does not matter. The union when victorious call them all her children, and all have equal rights to the benefits which the union has secured.

During a strike when the men are in actual want, yet refuse to surrender, they may find a scab who by his action is endeavoring to render null and void the organization they have worked for years to build, and their temper getting the better of them they may perhaps give him an education on the necessity of the solidarity of the toilers, and quicken his perception through the medium of a long piece of lead piping, yet after the strike is won, they invite him into the union again—cancel all his fines, make much of him, and invite him to share with them the benefits the strikers won. Not only do they invite him but they demand that even the "scab" shall reap the higher wages, and if they find out that he is working for less than union wages or in any other way refusing to share the benefits the union has secured, they may sometimes find him with a brick or remove the scum from his eyes with a long fist. After the operation he generally sees things from a common sense point of view, and is usually a wiser and a better man. Whenever the unions give one of their craft an exhibition of physical culture, it is with the avowed object of ultimately bettering his condition. The unions endeavor to give to ALL their members the best conditions of labor. They make the interests of all the members identical, so that individuals wishing to better their own condition are forced to better the condition of all.

Socialism will make the interests of all identical and will include all that the unions have striven for. We unionists have not made greater progress because our diagnosis of the ills we suffered was wrong. That the strike has lost its former effectiveness is admitted even by capitalists. The capitalists did not go on strike to gain their power, they took political action. We now recognize that on the economic field he is a giant, we are a pigmy, but on the political field our positions are reversed. We discuss these economic questions in our club and then in our

Our union is absorbing socialism as a sponge absorbs water, and everything indicates that our capitalist bossman is going to get a UNION HAIR CUT next election. When we organized our club we had no idea that it was going to be such a success. The word "bustling" only gives a faint idea of what we are doing. Meetings packed with workers—no dead timber—a colony of bees are leaders in comparison. We are camping on the slimy trail of capitalism, and we are going to lie in at the death; standing rule that any member when challenged who cannot show up at least one sub card be fined 50 cents; no member yet found guilty of the heinous offense of having no sub cards for sale. Every meeting live members are admitted. Since April 12th we distributed among the building trades 2,000 Workers' Calls. Paid the Workers' Call $27.40 for sub cards; paid for 5,000 thought provokers; also passed motion through the union that every meeting the union shall set apart thirty minutes for discussing economic questions. A member who dared to discuss socialism in the union a few years ago would have saved his family trouble by getting a clean shave and hiring a wooden overcoat before he made his speech. Packed the Bricklayers' Hall on the regular meeting night and had Walter Thomas Mills talk to bricklayers for one hour and twenty minutes on "Trade Unions and Socialism." At our S. E. E. C. meeting July 6th, Socialist Temple, the following business was transacted:

On motion it was ordered that the S. E. E. C. go to union in a body on Tuesday, July 9th, and get permission to have Thomas J. Morgan speak to them on their regular meeting night, July 23rd. Union business to be rushed through by 8 o'clock p. m. and speaker given entire evening. Secretary ordered to notify all S. E. E. C. members to be present at union on July 9th. Secretary reported receiving from executive committee 6 subscription lists to procure funds to send delegates to convention. Secretary mailed them to members. Demand for list exceeded supply. Secretary forced to send for 6 more lists and distribute them to workers. Secretary reported bricklayers on one job collected $11.25. Comrade Christenson working on same job collected $6.25, making total of $17.50, which was turned over to executive committee. Comrades Hall, Stevens, Koch, Bransie, Kaiser, Fammere and Langenberg are going to try to beat the above amount. Money received for sub cards $10.25. Comrade Brangie wanted 30 worth of cards. Secretary announced no more cards on hand. Secretary censured, and ordered to buy $30.00 worth in proportion, $15.00 yearlies; $15.00 half-yearlies, and send $3.00 to Comrade's house. Further ordered to buy 200 Workers' Calls and distribute them to union. Collection $1.25. No more business; meeting adjourned.

The Committee of Management for the Workers' Call Pic-nic, have made arrangements to supply lunches on the grounds tomorrow. Prices moderate.

A Challenge.

The employees of the Acres Carpet Cleaning Works, understanding that the Socialist Bricklayers Educational Club was to have a picnic on the grounds of the Acres Carpet Cleaning Works, on Monday, July 14th, for $5.00 a side, money to be raised by the employees of the Acres Carpet Cleaning Works, M. Becker & Co.

There will be vastly more enjoyment in attending the Workers' Call picnic at Gardner's Park tomorrow, than in staying away and making excuses to your friends afterwards, to account for your absence.

More spheres are ALWAYS wanted.

WHEN LABOR COMES TO JUDGMENT.

be considered socialism, and that each one be adopted on its merits.

"Resolved, First, That the producer should have his product." Adopted almost unanimously (45 to 6).

"Resolved, Second, That the only guarantee of this result is the ownership by the producer himself of the land and machinery necessary to production." Went through with a whoop (45 to 3).

"Resolved, Third, That inasmuch as it is an economic law that industry operated on a large scale is the most economical and therefore the most desirable, the people should own and operate industry on such a scale." Carried by an overwhelming majority (35 to 1).

"Resolved, Fourth, That inasmuch as the people already have at hand in their various city, state and national governmental organizations, the necessary framework for the construction of an organization for the operation of industry, the people, through these various governments, should take over the land and machinery for their own joint ownership and democratic management, in order that they may be able to distribute to themselves what they produce."

By this time some of the politicians in the Conference saw what they were doing and began to get frightened, but still the vote in favor was thirty-eight to one. Ex-Archbishop General Menest of Ohio was the "one."

Then came the final vote.

Resolved, Sixth, That to strain this result we declare necessary the success of a political party representing the people who desire these ends."

And even this was adopted by a considerable majority (25 to 5).

Work in Harmony.

Another matter of interest was the way all of the socialists worked together. The Socialist group was organized early in the conference. It held four special group meetings and acted on many matters. All its sessions were enthusiastic and in the group were representatives of nearly every possible kind of a Socialist. "amicably adjusted" in one of these mysterious occurrences which can only be accounted for by the Socialist workingmen who has a theory of his own to regard to the "harmony" which exists between capital and labor. To non-Socialist workingmen these things remain unaccountable, though the mine owner and manager know their significance most thoroughly, but very prudently conceal their knowledge. It is only the Socialist who gives the game away.

COME ONE, COME ALL

We take much pleasure in announcing to the comrades and friends and readers of the Workers' Call that all arrangements for the management of the picnic have been perfected by the Committee elected for the purpose. No detail has been overlooked that will tend to the comfort and enjoyment of those who may be present, and to make this event the most noteworthy of its kind that has yet occurred in the history of the local socialist movement.

Lists of prizes for the winners of the various games have been selected, some of which have already appeared in our columns. Refreshments of all kinds have been provided by the committee of management and will be procurable at the lowest possible prices, so that none may suffer from hunger or thirst at any time during the day. A baseball game between the West Side Socialist team and the employees of a down town firm will in all probability form one of the unique features of the occasion, as the challenge which comes from the latter, and appears in another column of this issue, will almost certainly be accepted by the socialist team—socialists as a rule never being remarkable for evading challenges of any kind, either in sport or argument. In short, nothing has been neglected which it was in the power of the committee to foresee or provide, to make the day as pleasant and enjoyable as possible.

The complete success of the picnic now depends upon the amount of tickets sold by the comrades during the preceding months, and from several indications we have reason to believe that they have not failed to do their part in this important matter. The outlook for favorable weather is also very promising and we may reasonably expect that the attendance will show an increase over that of last year commensurate with the splendid socialist situation that has been so energetically carried on in the past twelve months. As a full report of the events of the day will appear in the next issue, it is to be hoped that the attendance will be of sufficient magnitude to test to the utmost the descriptive powers possessed by the staff of the Workers' Call.

"HAT" AND "HUT"

Every day that passes must necessarily bring home to men of ordinary intelligence the fact that in spite of all assertions to the contrary, the relations between capitalist and labor show ever increasing evidence of antagonism which cannot be dissipated by recommendations of prudence to either side or solved by appeals to the "morality" of the age. While the Socialist sees in this antagonism the condition of economic revolution in the future, and knows that the struggle must be waged with greater force and ferocity, those who profess to believe in the permanence of the present form of society still persist in bringing forward their discarded platitudes as a solution of the "problem". It is needless to say that the action of the hostile forces is in no way determined by such counsel. Both sides are already coming to view them as customary expressions, which although meaningless, have acquired through constant repetition a sort of claim to be regarded as peculiarly proper to such occasions.

But now that the possibility arises in the near future, of one million organized wage laborers in one industry confronting a small group of capitalists who control that industry, it is vaguely beginning to be felt that the situation demands something more than the stereotyped appeals and counsels customary to such occasions, and here and there may be heard a timid threat to the effect that "public ownership" may become necessary if neither of the combatants can be persuaded to adjust their differences without disturbing the entire "business" fabric of the community.

It is as well to remember that it was just this very class of writers who persistently declared socialism to be impossible, impractical and unworkable, when the manifestations of the class struggle were confined to local strikes and less formidable combats. It was this very class that incessantly preached the possibility of harmony between capitalist and laborer, in order to continue the supremacy of the former.

It was this class also who invariably sided with capitalist "law and order", when striking workers were slaughtered by the power of the state, called in to aid in maintaining capitalist supremacy. They have now, in spite of wilful blindness, been forced to recant their previous assertions and admit that the struggle between producer and non-producer "may" bring about a change in the ownership of the means of production. The question of the billion dollar steel trust is perhaps not the greatest monument to the power of J. Pierpont Morgan, when it is considered that through his manipulations, the blind have, partially at least, received their sight.

One million men confronting one billion dollars—concentration of wealth proceeding ever more rapidly amongst the capitalist class and political and economic organization amongst the laborers. What is to be the result? Is it not extremely probable that after the first great collision the world will harmonize of labor and capital will transform his "public ownership" into "public ownership must", and finally into unadulterated socialism, when his eyes have been thoroughly opened?

SOCIALISM IN LOCAL UNIONS

In reviewing the progress of Socialism amongst the working class of Chicago for the past year, one of the most gratifying and at the same time most significant indications of the growth of class consciousness, is undoubtedly to be found in the awakening of the members of the local trade unions towards their material interests as workingmen. Readers of this paper cannot have failed to observe the increasing number of labor organizations which are addressed by local socialist speakers every week, but they perhaps have overlooked the fact that these addresses signify much more than is seen on the surface. Their growing frequency is obviously the result of the presence of an ever increasing number of class-conscious socialist workingmen in these bodies and while there is no attempt to "capture" the union, as such, for socialism, it is nevertheless undeniable that the power and influence of socialism is steadily and unmistakably making itself felt in the ranks of the organized laborers of Chicago.

The attention of our readers is called to a report which appears in this issue, from the "Socialist Bricklayers Educational Club", an organization which though not officially connected with the political movement, is yet engaged in spreading the truths of socialism with a vigor and energy which is certainly unsurpassed by any similar body of wage workers within the city limits. A perusal of the report alluded to will more than bear out this statement.

Just what manner of men compose this organization may be inferred from several passages in the report. It will be seen that while the "Socialist Bricklayers Educational Club" is little over three months old it has already long passed the kindergarten stage, and is conducting the fight against capitalism with a determination and persistency which is generally supposed to be found only amongst the seasoned veterans of the movement.

Its members are men who know what they want and how to get it. The fact that they recognize the importance of the party press as an instrument to attain their object, proves this conclusively, and the Workers' Call has every reason to commend their sagacity upon this point, and would modestly hint that their example in this respect might be followed with advantage by others.

The bricklayer is thinking—and better still he is translating his thoughts into action. To him socialism is not a dim dreamy picture, that may perhaps be realized in a thousand years, but a real tangible economic condition that can be brought nearer realization by steady and persistent work upon the part of those interested in its coming, and it is this knowledge that accounts for the force determination with which he labors to hasten its approach.

The mark on the wall is not engaged solely in building houses for others to inhabit. His muscles may belong to a master but he is beginning to discover that his brains are his own, and that he can employ them in laying broad and deep, the foundations of a Co-operative Commonwealth, a social structure that shall stand strong and solid, centuries after the work of his hands as a wage slave, has disappeared from the earth, along with the system of capitalism which now calls it forth.

Socialist Co-operative

All comrades interested in the organization of a Socialist Co-operative are requested to be present at an adjourned meeting to be held at the Socialist Temple Monday evening, July 11.

ERNEST UTERMANN,
Secretary pro tem.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

On July 5th the Declaration of Independence was read for the first time in forty years in Jackson, Miss. But it is not thought that this revival of the recognition of freedom and equality for all men will interfere to any serious extent with the practice of lynching the colored brother who asserts his equality and freedom too obstructively.

The obsolete traction machinery of the New York Metropolitan Street Railway Company has fetched $1,000,000 as junk, but the obsolete human machine when consigned to the economic scrap pile is usually entirely unsaleable. There is probably no more valuable object to-day than the work-out wage laborer, the one product of capitalism which has no market value whatever.

On July 5th the daily papers stated that the police, fire and health department heads of the city government were up in arms against the management of the Illinois Steel Company's gigantic plant at South Chicago for refusing admission of their subordinates to the grounds and for declining to give information concerning the dead and wounded victims of accidents occurring in the great mills.

As Davis was out in a contest with the "authorities" on a somewhat similar proposition, it is not probable that the Illinois Steel Company will depart from the old established custom of concealing the details of their butcheries for any threats of this sort that may be made against them. The "city government" might as well "ground arms." The information will not be forthcoming.

A barber shop chartered by the State of Kansas as the "Barber Antiseptic Company" has been started in Topeka. One of the rules of the Company requires that the employees shall open for daily business with prayer. It may be asserted without fear of contradiction that there will be little militant trades unionism amongst the employees in that shop, if a sufficient supply of pious barbers can be procured.

A "riotous scene" was enacted a few days ago in the Belgian Chamber of Deputies by a socialist representative who wanted to know why the commandant of the Civic guard should have exhorted his men to fire on the "mob" in case of a riot. We American workmen never send any such "riotous" representatives as this to Congress. Whenever our capitalist masters feel inclined to have lead pumped into a "mob" of us, we don't want any question asked about it in Congress. We just take our medicine as quietly as possible and make no noise whatever, thereby proving our superiority to the pauper laborers of effete Europe, who actually raise a fuss over a mere threat of shooting.

A beggar was arrested in Paris last week for plying his vocation on the streets. It was discovered that he was a "well-known frequenter of fashionable clubs and social gatherings," and a large amount of cash and a check book were found in his possession. He explained that he made a comfortable living by begging in the daytime, and that his "earnings" enabled him to pose as a "society man" in the evenings. The dispatch containing this information refers to the incident as "ridiculous and unusual," which shows that the venal correspondent who forwarded it is not particularly remarkable for powers of observation. It is certainly not so very unusual for beggars to consort with thieves at night, a fact that not only police officials but even "reformers" are generally aware of.

HIS TESTIMONY.

Socialist Comrade Truesdell Tells the Story of How He Came to the Movement.

In accordance with a wish to present occasionally the reasons leading different members to join the ranks of Socialism, the Workers' Call prints the following interview between Organizer Mills and Comrade W. E. McDermott, of the South Chicago Branch:

Q: Mr. McDermott, I understand that you have lately joined the local branch at South Chicago. Am I right?

A: Yes.

Q: Would you mind telling how you came to join?

A: In order to be identified with a party that represents my views more completely than any other; for the same reason that I have in the past left one party and joined another as my views gradually became more and more radical. If there are any particular points that you want to know, I will tell you as well as I can.

Q: Does your business have anything to do with your attitude toward Socialism?

A: Yes. It keeps some people out of Socialism; it drove me into it. As you know, I am a shoemaker, and the business requires the hardest kind of work. Most of my time is spent in the courts making a record of people's quarrels, quarrels as useless and unprofitable, as society was properly organized, as would be disputes over the opinions of the people of Mars. It is almost impossible to realize the enormous waste involved in litigation and the various kinds of business on it. Now the support of people engaged in litigation or any other unproductive or destructive work must come from those who do the productive work. It would seem that the greater the number doing unproductive work, the heavier must be the burden on those who are productive, and that if these new doing unproductive work were engaged in useful labor the task of the producers would be lighter. But I cannot see how this latter condition of things can be brought about except through some change in the organization of society.

Q: Have you been a republican or democrat?

A: Both. I was a republican until I saw through the fraud and absurdity involved in the idea that employers wanted a tariff for the benefit of labor—that is that they supported lobbies in Congress to secure laws that would compel them as employers to pay higher wages. So I became a free trader. The name "free trader" at that time had almost as much odium attached to it as "Socialist" has now, but it has finally become quite respectable. After that I was a gold democrat, and then a believer in free silver. But free silver has disappeared as an issue, and it is a singular circumstance that the very thing (more money) that killed free silver and improved times, also at the same time demonstrated the truth of the free silver position. However, I came to understand that neither free trade nor free silver offered a complete solution, but that at best they were only steps in the right direction, and if they merely led people to do a little thinking for themselves, they were worth while.

Q: How about the single tax?

A: Soon after the publication of "Progress and Poverty" I read it and was a single taxer for many years, believing that it would destroy monopoly and prevent anybody from acquiring wealth without giving an equivalent. But the single tax assumes the continuance of the competitive system.

Q: What led you to look into Socialism?

A: Henry George, in his book on free trade, said that back of the robbers operating under the tariff monopoly and the money monopoly, there was another, land monopoly, who, after all the other robbers had taken their portion of the earnings of labor, took "all that was left." The essence and strength of land monopoly consists in land owners being able to take out more than is put in. If there were no profit there would be no object and no injury in owning land. Therefore profit is the cause of land monopoly. But why is profit in land? Because men are obliged to give more than they get. When I came to ask myself how profit in land can be had but profit in other good things good, I found that Socialism offered the only satisfactory answer. The inspiring motive of all booting, bribery and corruption is private profit on the one hand, and the cause of most crime in poverty on the other. Now, why strike through the single tax at one phase of the evil? Why not strike at the root? The single tax assumes competition as the natural state of society. That men knowing no better should compete and struggle with each other for bread to put in their mouths, is bad; but that they should worship the principle of competition, making the ethics of the hog pen the highest ideal and the guiding principle of civilization, is terrible.

Q: You realize, I suppose, that there is "nothing in it," as the saying is, for those who become Socialists?

A: Yes, but under Socialism there will be "nothing in it" for anybody. Every one will be called upon for his contribution to the total fund of wealth and every one will get his proper share. Under such circumstances none can waste and none become dangerously rich. I forgot to say a minute ago that logic by which the single tax would take as common property those values produced not by any one individual but by the community as a whole, applies with greater force to wealth in general. The amount which the individual by his own unaided resources contributes to the production of wealth is small. In order to produce wealth in abundance, men must make use of the vast accumulations of common knowledge and skill. Now, why this product of the common knowledge and skill, something produced not by any one individual but by all the people acting together as organized society, why this product should not be common property, I cannot understand.

Q: Do other reporters in this city

A: Yes, I know some who do. Not only that, but there are many lawyers who begin to see that there is something wrong in a system under which men of brain can only live by permission of another class of men having money and who kindly see fit to employ them. Among many classes of people I hear the opinion expressed that the trusts are growing so big and driving so many people out of business that the government will have to take the business into its own hands. Of course these people do not see that the trusts are simply ridding the country of the little exploiters, but they are beginning to see that there is something wrong in the system somewhere, and that at least is a hopeful sign.

The Biennial Singsong.

The Second Biennial Singsong of the Workingmen's Federated Singing Societies was opened last Saturday at 8 p. m. at 35 N. Clark street, when outside singers began to arrive from St. Louis, Cincinnati, Davenport, Cleveland, Shabogay and other cities.

At 10 p. m. the delegates met in convention and listened to the report of the executive. The federal secretary, O. Gratchewski, reported that 13 secretaries and 400 members composed the federation. It was decided to hold the next Singsong in St. Louis in 1904, and also to remove the executive from Chicago to that city.

In the evening the local singers gathered a respectable to their visitors from other cities.

On Sunday at 2 p. m. the singers with a large number of trades unions and led at Market Square, and with their 4 flags flying marched in parade, over 2,000 strong, through the downtown streets to the First Regiment Hall, at 14th street and Michigan avenue, where the "Latin concert" took place. The hall was packed to its utmost limits.

An orchestra of 25 musicians furnished excellent music. The climax came when all the combined singers, 400 strong, appeared on the stage to render a selection. After the concert the floor was cleared for dancing. On Monday the festival came to an end with a picnic at Ogden's Grove, where a crowd of between five and six thousand gathered to hear the songs of liberty and enjoy themselves on the dancing floor. At 9 p. m. the local singers, with bands playing, formed in line to escort the St. Louis and Davenport singers to the cars, and the second biennial celebration came to a most successful conclusion.

The Bastille was taken by the French working people on the 14th July, 1793. Gardner's Park will be captured by the Socialists on the 14th July, 1901. Are you going to join the storming party?

CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Socialists.

OHIO STATE COMMITTEE SOCIAL-DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

Dayton, Ohio, July 6, 1901.

Local Party Progress.

Reports of Organizers of the South, West and 11th District Divisions, on public meetings, party progress, financial returns, and general agitation for the past week. A record of growing activity.

SOUTH SIDE.

An encouraging feature of the South Side organization is the large number of new workers in the movement. Nearly all of the speakers are beginners, men and women who have started under the most difficult conditions with which they have been surrounded, and who have studied the causes of those conditions until now that they see the light, they can no longer keep silent, but come forward with a splendid enthusiasm to hasten the coming of the reign of justice.

The vast extent of the South Side District and its stretches of agricultural land and country villages, is a frequent subject for jest, but those same suburban residents and the workers in the factory towns are beginning to use their brains and to welcome the new doctrine that "the earth is for all men," with an earnest and determined purpose that will not again be misled by the empty mouthings of the corrupt politicians.

SOME OF THE MEETINGS.

An effort is being made to hold the State and Congress street meetings every night in the week, and with a little more system than heretofore. Vast crowds attend and at times the arguments and debates on the sides grow numerous and exciting. On Sunday night there were as many as nine overflow meetings in full blast at one time, all discussing various phases of socialism in the most enthusiastic manner.

The meeting on 33d and Commercial streets Wednesday night of last week, was followed by a debate between Comrade Backus and a Democrat, who was willing that W. J. Bryan—who he greatly admired—should do the thinking for the entire United States.

When he learned that Bryan had backed down before Comrade Wilshire's famous challenge and had taken to the earnest study of socialist questions, his admirer concluded to do likewise and promptly invested in some socialist literature.

The meeting at 33d and Halsted streets last week was attended by a great many ladies, who loudly applauded Mrs. Davies' reasons for becoming a socialist.

It was estimated that over 2,000 people attended the State and Congress streets meeting last Sunday night, and when Comrade Keop called upon all who were socialists to raise their hands it seemed that every hand in the audience went up. A similar invitation to republicans and democrats failed to elicit a single response.

Comrade Mills, the division organizer, found upon his return from a ten days' absence that arrangements had been made for a debate with the single taxers, Messrs. Dickey and Wells were rash enough to accept the opportunity to air their views and came to the Sunday afternoon street meeting at 33d and Cottage Grove avenue, prepared for battle. The debate was conducted in a fair and cordial spirit that kept both speakers and crowd in a good humor. The result was about what might have been expected—Mr. Dickey made it evident that he was much more of a socialist than a single taxer, and his colleague was convinced that his reform was faulty through its neglect of observing the natural division of the people into workers and idlers—have and have-nots.

A move is on foot to secure a regular meeting place on the South Side—an other Socialist Temple, but no definite action has yet been taken.

The State and Congress street meeting on Monday night was attended by an immense throng of people who listened with close attention to Comrades Mills, Backus and Davies in a two-and-a-half-hour address. A peculiarity of the meeting was that the crowd gradually increased until the very end of the evening.

Comrades Davies, Pierce and Forberg held an enthusiastic meeting at Thirty-ninth street and Cottage Grove avenue on July 10, with over 300 persons present. Quiet notes and low-spoken words of approval through the crowd tell over more than the hearty applause how close the speakers' words come to the very lives of their hearers.

A detailed statement of the work of the Thirty-ninth ward workers up to July 1st shows the following excellent record, the 100-mark having been passed at the last branch meeting:

A. Hansen	41
F. Morley	27
H. P. Newman	9
L. Morgan	5
D. Roberts	4
R. Waddell	3
N. Ellison	3
J. Glanbeck	3
E. Johnson	2
L. Peterson	2

Comrade Keop, the division organizer, has sold 41 Call cards and now holds the second rank.

Comrade Palmer of the Sixth ward sold 21 and Anderson of the Thirty-second 1.

New members welcomed and organized:

NORTH SIDE.

The usual business meeting of the North Division agitation committee was held on Saturday, July 6, at 26 N. Clark street, with Comrade Schuler in the chair, and the following business was transacted:

On roll call the following organizers were present:

Morris, of the 11th; Bauer, of the 22d; Schuler, of the 22d; Kraus, of the 24th; Knox, of the 25th.

Absent, Vahleisch, of Carl Marx Club. Minutes of the last meeting approved.

In view of the fact that one meeting was spoiled by lack of a speaker, the following comrades agreed to speak at meetings: H. F. Lindgren, Chas. Sand.

Other branches in North Division are asked to urge their members to practice speaking so that no disappointment will take place in the future.

In keeping with the above branches, branches are requested to appropriate 50c per month for postage in sending out postage for speakers and minutes of the committee.

Adjourned until Saturday, July 13, at 8:30 p. m.

AGITATION MEETING.

A large crowd listened attentively to Comrades Untermyer, Rubbia, and Wanhope at North avenue and Orchard street on Tuesday evening. One hundred calls were sold and a collection was taken.

Wednesday evening's meeting at Division and Sedgewick streets was a failure—no speaker.

Thursday evening at Walton place and North Clark street a crowd of good size, despite the holiday, listened to Comrade Caplan.

Questions were asked and quite a lively meeting held. One hundred cards were sold, a collection of 60 cents was taken up, and one new member secured.

Friday evening the meeting was called off because the 10th ward branch held a meeting at the corner agreed on. A new corner was picked out, and next Friday a meeting will be held at the corner of Racine avenue and Diversey boulevard.

Comrades are requested to push sale of picnic tickets, to get your credentials filled and to get a big vote on delegates to national convention.

All meetings are off for next Sunday on account of picnic.

The Sunday 4 p. m. meeting at North avenue and Clark street was small on account of a misunderstanding about the picnic.

The meeting Sunday evening at Wrightwood and Sheffield avenues was a complete success. Comrade Zimmerman spoke to 150 persons. Questions were asked and satisfactorily answered. One hundred cards were distributed, 2 subscribers for The Call taken, and 20 cents collected.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

At the last organization meeting all the branches, except No. 3 of the 27th Ward, responded to roll call.

The meeting was interesting from start to finish, as meetings usually are when well represented, and considerable business of importance transacted.

Tuesday evening the meeting at Armitage and Tripp was prevented by rain early in the evening.

The meeting at Lincoln and Belmont avenues was fairly well attended, 23 cents worth of literature sold and a collection of 33 cents taken.

A number of individuals exhibited some of the ineffectiveness that is so common in making good socialists, and were answered to the apparent satisfaction of the inquirers and audience.

Comrades Robbins and Bard were the soap box orators on this occasion.

Thursday evening, those of the comrades who were not firing skyrockets, fireworks and roman candles were doubtless putting up intellectual ammunition to be administered in large doses internally, externally and eternally, for the purpose of inspiring in the breasts of the Chicago savages, an irrepressible desire to follow in the steps of their forefathers, by engaging in the declaration of independence business, but, on the latest improved business methods, by demanding industrial freedom.

Friday evening Comrades Leffingwell and Bard, who were on duty at the corner of Belmont and Kinton Aves. but in this encounter, while the opposition was fairly numerous, were unable to draw their fire, but so prepared this may be accounted for from the fact that this is our first engagement from this position and we probably have not as yet got the exact range.

Comrade Leffingwell, the man at the big gun on this occasion, is rapidly developing a wonderful marksmanship.

Sunday, 2 p. m., at Armitage and Kedzie, with Comrade Leffingwell at the bat, Guntwald let base and Bard in the centerfield, we ran a bluff that the natives wouldn't meet, and after a half hour or more of trying to entice them into the "game" we temporarily withdrew from the field.

From some of those who had nerve enough to get within hailing distance, we learned that on Monday evening the streets are crowded with people who are not so shy, hence we will endeavor to play them again on Monday evening, July 15th, and we trust that all the resident comrades who understand and enjoy the game, will turn out on that occasion.

Any persons in the 24th or 27th Wards who are interested in the cause of Socialism, but not associated with the organized movement, but who contemplate doing so, should address the District Organizer, J. H. Bard, 713 West Irving Park Blvd., who will call and see you.

Capitalist politicians and other confidence men will not be permitted to operate at the Workers' Call picnic in Gardner's Park tomorrow.

Orbits at the Temple.

Last week was a critical period for the West Side comrades who were threatened with the loss of the Temple as a center of propaganda. They were served with a notice to vacate by the owner of the premises, regardless of the fact that the July rent had been rendered on June 24th.

The suit for possession was tried in Justice Chitt's court on July 1st, and was decided against the socialists. But the West Side politicians who fondly imagined that they were about to get rid of a "disturbing element" were doomed to disappointment. They did not reckon on the stubborn defence which was decided upon by the comrades, who immediately took an appeal against the ruling.

Comrade Theo. Williams came to the rescue as bondman and was accepted by the justice, who fixed the bond at $500. The counsel for the socialists, Comrade Peter Sissman, reports that he is very hopeful of ultimate victory for them.

As the costs of the case place a heavy burden upon the Temple, it is hoped that the friends of the movement will come forward with financial assistance as soon as possible.

No meeting will be held in the Temple on July 14th on account of the Workers' Call picnic falling on that date. Comrade Professor E. Untermyer, who was scheduled to speak there on July 5th, was unable to be present on account of sickness, but he will lecture on the 21st of July upon the subject of "Woman and the Labor Problem." It is to be hoped that a large audience will be present.

The Ladies' Auxiliary meets every Thursday night at the Temple, as per announcement in another part of these columns. West Side Socialists are especially urged to attend the Sunday evening lectures in full force, and to make special efforts to induce their friends and acquaintances to come along also.

As neither Bryan nor Roosevelt will be present at the Workers' Call picnic in Gardner's Park tomorrow, the outlook for a really enjoyable day is all the more certain.

headquarters in Springfield, the men from Canada and from Texas, the materialists and the spiritualists, were all there and acted together in perfect harmony. Every vote taken was practically unanimous. Comrade Mills was elected chairman of the group on nomination of Steadman, and Simons was made the Socialist member of the conference committee on Resolutions also on the nomination of Steadman. Wentworth, Simons, Wilshire and Steadman were elected to speak from the floor of the conference at the time specially allotted to socialists. Their election was unanimous by the members of the Socialist group. On the evening of July 12 the socialists held the conference hall all to themselves. Mrs. Corinne Brown presided and Comrades Wilshire, Simons, Carr and Mills were the speakers.

Socialist Women on Sunday.

On Sunday morning Comrade Mills spoke in the pulpit of the Universalist church, one of the largest and most centrally located churches in the city. He spoke by special request of the pastor. He presented the historic argument for scientific socialism, was frequently applauded while speaking, and at the close almost the entire congregation gathered about him to express their approval of the address and not infrequently to express surprise as to the scientific and historic defense of the Socialist position.

Local Comrades deliver

One of the best features of the conference was the activity of the Detroit socialists. Their Sunday afternoon meeting at which Simons, Wilshire and Mills were the speakers, was the most enthusiastic meeting during the whole week in Detroit. Unless it was the meeting of the last evening of the conference in Philadelphia Hall, where the socialists had complete possession.

Stand for Clear Cut Socialism

The effort to organize a new party was rejected by Lee M. Mowbray of St. Louis. He said Comrade Mills divided the time on the first evening devoted to the question, "Is Political Union Feasible?" Mills contended that only on the program of socialism in these days possibility for such union, and that on this program union could not long be avoided. When Mowbray followed he spoke in a discouraged and disappointed way of his hopes for getting together on a platform of common ground for socialists and anti-socialists, but the proposal was not again mentioned from the floor during the conference. Comrades Simons and Wilshire attended the group meeting of the allied parties and persuaded them to take no action other than to send a committee to Indianapolis. The chairman of the group was Dr. Patterson, the owner of the Arena, who voted with the socialists in the conference on every vote from start to finish. He will appoint the committee to come to Indianapolis.

SUMMER READING
THE SILVER CROSS
The Carpenter of Nazareth
—by—
EUGENE SUE.

The plain but thrilling story told in a masterly manner by the great French author, put before the reader as he starts to read it. Stripped of the Church gown, Jesus appears before us the type of the earnest, honest radical leader of the people, a figure which history has reproduced with slight variations in every crowded period in the progress of mankind. When the old order of things had reached its climax and was about to give way to the new, Jesus came as a savior of the masses, with a story of most absorbing interest, with dramatic incidents sound to sense, the book gives the noble character to the teachings of the carpenter of Nazareth which most of our generation—whether Christians, Jews or freethinkers—have failed to perceive through the haze of Church legend which attaches to the story of Jesus. As a picture of society and the social classes of that epoch with the class struggle raging within it, this story will throw a strong light on our own conditions of to-day.

asures of family life upon them except kept the floor of the dancing pavilion hot under their feet, until about 12.30 P. M. "The business men" the Official American Worker said. Franklin speaks history as the greatest and most unqualified success ever undertaken and executed by the local Socialist apparatus.

While it is gratifying to know that all local problems in this direction have been broken, in the outing of last Sunday, it is eminently proper to give justice where justice is due. It is owing to the Official American Worker and the Committee of Management, and the attention which they bestowed upon details, however small, that this success is to be attributed. Some two weeks ago we remarked editorially that this Committee had perfected all arrangements and might be relied upon to do their part. We are glad to say that they have fully justified our anticipations, and also that the comrades who were charged with the not quite so agreeable task of selling tickets have acquitted themselves fully as well. Franklin has been every inch to do his duty—and the expectations were realized.

A few words more before closing. It would be unwise to pass over the fact that a group of comrades, both men and women, who were on the committee, consisting members of the various branches that Sunday, served Franklin were not only important but indispensable in the success of the picnic. These were the comrades who volunteered their services as waiters, cooks, bartenders, etc., and there in charge of the various games. Although we no doubt found their pleasure in giving pleasure to others, none the less do their services demand recognition, and the Committee of Management takes pleasure in acknowledging through the columns of this paper how much their valuable assistance has contributed to the splendid success of last Sunday.

Local Party Progress.

Reports of Organizers of the South, West and 4th District Divisions, on public meetings, party press, financial returns, and general agitation for the past week.
A record of growing activity.

SOUTH SIDE.

The Division organizer of the South Side was suddenly called out of town on last Saturday and was greatly disappointed at not being able to attend the picnic.

Comrades Backus, Pierce, Moller and Davies held a very large meeting at 24th and Cottage Grove avenue on July 10th. A lawyer who was present tried to convince the crowd that a scheme of gradual taxation was a sufficient remedy for present social evils, but failed in the attempt. He promised to debate the question later and the comrades are quite ready for him.

Meetings at State and Congress are more largely attended than any others on the South Side, discussion often lasting until midnight. A St. Louis capitalist was present at one of them and expressed himself satisfied that socialism—perhaps in a modified form—was inevitable and that it might expect many supporters from men of his own class.

Two splendid meetings were held by Comrade Mills last week at West Pullman and Burnside respectively. At the former place a audience of 1,500 were present, at the latter about 400. The speaker was invited back again by a restaurant proprietor of Burnside, who promised to advertise the meetings if they could be held regularly. Probably after the convention the Burnside meeting will become a regular institution.

District organizer also addressed the 32nd Ward Branch at an indoor meeting on Wednesday evening. Hall packed and audience very enthusiastic. Comrade Saunders held a good meeting at 11th and Michigan ave., on last Saturday, though owing to his having arrived rather late, the crowd was scarcely as large as it should have been.

NORTH SIDE.

Tuesday evening the meeting at the corner of North Avenue and Orchard street was a success. Comrade Kaplan was the speaker. A good collection was taken and 100 calls were dispensed of. The meeting at Franklin and Oak streets was addressed by Comrades Sand and Morris. Comrade Sand is a new speaker and did unusually well, holding the box for 40 minutes or more. Sixty-nine cents was collected, 100 calls distributed, and another speaker named Martin filled out the time.

Thursday evening at Walton place and North Clark street a crowd of 400 people, men and women, listened attentively to speakers Morris and Bartels.

The great success of these meetings has caused the North Side politicians and little shop keepers to become greatly worried, and the result is that the meetings are continually disturbed by police.

At the last meeting a patrol wagon load of police came over to stop the meeting. We would not stand for their bluff and kept the meeting going. The wagon was kept standing as a back-ground, giving the speakers an opportunity to show the workers assembled the kind of freedom they vote for.

It is evident that these meetings are too successful to suit Honore Palmer, and political guardian "Jim" Quinn. And finally, Quinn or no Quinn, little store keepers or no little store keepers, the Twenty-first ward branch will continue these meetings at Washington square.

Friday evening a meeting begins at Diversey and Racine, under the auspices of the Twenty-fourth ward branch. The meetings at Wellington and Bedford and Center and N. Clark street were not held because of the Workers' Call picnic. Next week they will be resumed.

Financial report will be inserted next week.

WEST SIDE.

West Side open air meetings to the number of 25 were held last week and party new members added to the Division organization. Every organizer and worker in the division is kept eternally busy.

Last Monday only 4 organizers were present, and for this reason the meeting was postponed until next Sunday at 10 a. m. Every organizer must be present as business of great importance has to be transacted.

A KLENKE,
Organizer.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Saturday, July 6th, the meeting at Belmont and Elston avenues was well attended. Comrades Wm. H. Leffingwell and J.H. Bard addressed the meeting.

Tuesday meeting at Tripp and Armitage was lightly attended, but considerable interest manifest.

Wednesday meeting at Lincoln and Belmont was addressed by Comrade Sam Robbins. A good attendance and an interesting meeting.

The meeting at Milwaukee, Avenue and Diversey was unusually lively, particularly the latter part of the meeting when a perfect hail of questions and answers prevailed and apparent evidence that a considerable number of those present were unusually impressed.

Friday evening the organizers' meeting was not so well attended as it should be two branches being entirely without representation.

Hereafter let us see every branch represented and the meetings will be much more interesting and productive of much better results if this meeting is attended by all the workers of the branches.

SOCIALIST BRICKLAYERS CLUB.

On July 9th we approached our union with the proposition to have a socialist speaker address the body. After the motion was put to the body, it was apparent that two of our most prominent members, while temporarily in a state of mental aberration, were bent on defeating the motion. Both voted with each other in putting ragged edgins on the atmosphere, and though they tried much, they said little.

When the draught ceased, our comrades cleared the decks and prepared for action, and when they got through with our opponents there was nothing left of them but a little spot of grease. For ten minutes our comrades handed out enough intelligence to furnish any one whose head was not too pointed, a "new set of brains." As both of our patients were subscribers to the Workers' Call, we advised them to read and digest the contents, promising them in return a complete cure for the somnambulism with which they were afflicted. The motion carried with only one dissenting voice. Comrade Collins will speak at our union on July 23.

At our S. B. E. C. meeting Saturday night the following business was transacted:

Meeting called to order at 8 p. m. Comrade Friedrichs in the chair. Motion made to invite Comrade K. up to speak at union should anything, unforeseen prevent Comrade Collins from appearing. On motion it was ordered to advertise meetings in three consecutive evening issues of the daily press and in one issue of the German paper.

Comrades Donahue and Langenberg appointed as committee to attend to advertising.

Motion carried that Comrade Stevens make special effort to induce Editor Roberts of Chicago American to impart notice of meeting as news item.

Comrade Cotrell ordered to make it his special business to see President Lillen of the Building Laborers' union and arrange for speakers to address his union; also to organize a Socialist Laborers' Educational club and report next meeting.

On motion it was ordered that Comrade Coffelt and Hall select books for our library. Further moved that we procure large bookcase. Comrade Vorpal declined to have money expended from treasury, declaring we had expert cabinet makers in our own club, who would give us much better bookcase than we could buy. Comrade Prince arose and generously volunteered to make us a handsome bookcase 72x14x14 in. if we would pay for material. Comrade Brongia, while thanking Comrade Prince for his munificence, thought it would take too long to make one. Comrade Prince assured us that shavings would be flying to his basement Tuesday night and bookcase delivered two weeks hence at the latest. Motion carried that we accept, with thanks, the offer from Comrade Prince.

Comrade Friedrichs elected Librarian. Secretary announced the delivery of 100 Challenges, and his intention to write for bundle order of $5 every week.

Secretary notified to announce in the Workers' Call that all socialist bricklayers should meet the obligations which the knowledge of socialism imposes by sending to the Workers' Call office whatever funds they can spare to help send delegates to the convention.

No argument is necessary. Brother Bricklayers, we need the money; let us use your names on the list in the Workers' Call Text week.

Money received for sub. postals, $4.25. Collection, $1.50.

No further business, meeting adjourned.

Socialist Temple Notes.

On next Sunday night (July 21) Professor E. Untermyer will speak at the Socialist Temple on "Woman and the Labor Problem". Those who have heard this comrade and know his ability to handle every phase of socialist thought, will doubtless avail themselves of the opportunity to hear him again.

After making all sorts of trouble for the West Side comrades in the endeavor to force them out of the Temple, the agent has at length climbed down from his high horse, and now offers a lease of the building to the comrades at an advance in the rent over what they are now paying. Being in somewhat straitened circumstances financially, we appeal to all comrades interested in the success of the Temple enterprise to come Sunday night and bring their pocket books with them, as we must raise a considerable sum in a short time.

We contemplate giving a ball and entertainment at the Temple, in the latter end of August or early in September, in aid of the Temple Fund. Further particulars later.

SECRETARY.

GENERAL COMMITTEE.

Report of Meeting, Election of New Members, Officers and General Secretary.

Regular meeting of the General Committee of the Socialist Party of Chicago, held at the Schiller Building July 8, 1901.

Forty-nine delegates responded to roll-call. Comrade Smiley in chair. The minutes of the Executive Committee were approved. The communications were referred to new business.

The report of the Financial Secretary was accepted. Also the reports of the South and North Side organizers. The reports of the Executive Committee were accepted. The Joint Campaign Committee were accepted. The report of the Executive Committee recommending that the General Committee refuse the request of the 9th and 10th Ward Branches and the La Salle Political and Educational Club was approved and the request refused.

Comrade Taft was elected General Secretary of the party, receiving 25 votes to 22 cast for Comrade Knox.

It was decided that it be the sense of the committee that no cigars be purchased for the picnic unless same bear Union Label.

The old Executive Committee was continued as a picnic committee and was given charge of the same.

A special meeting of the General Committee was decided on for the purpose of instructing delegates and attending to other business pertaining to the National Convention at Indianapolis.

The matter of paying $5.00 per week to district organizers was referred to referendum. The complaint against J. M. Stewart was referred to the Grievance Committee.

A committee of nine, consisting of Comrades J. B. Smiley, R. A. Morris, W. T. Mills, D. Smith, Knox, E. Richter, T. J. Morgan, J. B. Smith, W. Kennedy was elected to draw up such amendments to the constitution as are necessary to provide for the position of General Secretary and to define his duties.

The following officers were elected for the coming six months: Financial Secretary and Treasurer, E. Richter; Grievance Committee, R. Baur, L. Anderson, H. N. Daniels; Auditing Committee, A. Sobhar, G. Evans, J. Pierce; Executive Committee, D. Smith, P. W. Knox, M. Becker, R. Morris, M. Kaplan, J. Saunders, R. Robbins, A. Jorgensen and W. Kennedy.

Comrade Taft withdrew his name from the list of candidates for delegates to the National Convention.

On motion of branches in West and North Divisions etc. following resolution was submitted to referendum.

Resolved, that the payment of five dollars a week to division organizers from general party funds be discontinued.

The meeting then adjourned.

SOCIALISM ON WHEELS.

Comrades Will invade Michigan and Indiana on Route to the Unity Convention.

A group of fifty Socialists will start from Chicago on bicycles on the morning of July 23d, for Indianapolis, where they will attend the Unity convention, and others from Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan and Indiana will join them at the start and on the way. They will take plenty of time and will hold meetings all along the way there and back.

Among them are a number of the most effective campaign speakers in the Socialist movement. Walter Thomas, M. Mills, Becken, August Klenke, J. H. Bard, C. P. Lowrie, of Chicago, and E. Backus, of Texas, are among the speakers who will start with the boys from Chicago, and in barns, red flags, Socialist tracts and campaign speeches 200 miles long, will be the features of the trip, and local Socialists will arrange for meetings in the towns passed through. Lunches by the road side, and nights in a hay mow are among the possibilities. Enthusiasm, red flag and a line of towns painted red will spread the Socialist's favorite color over twenty counties and seventy-five towns of Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin.

The route has been planned to follow good roads and by such easy stages that the most inexperienced riders will have no trouble in keeping up.

Those who cannot take the time for the entire trip will be invited to join for a day or so, and it is certain that the entire journey will be a regular holiday picnic.

Comrades along the way will arrange meetings, entertain members of the brigade and will also join the procession by scores.

THE ROUTE.

Chicago to Michigan City by boat, leaving Chicago at 9 a. m. and arriving in Michigan at 12:30 p. m.; public meeting upon arrival. Meetings will be held in all the towns passed through; leave Michigan City at 2:30 p. m.; Waterloo 5:30, LaPorte 6 p. m. and spend night, a few speakers going on to Stillwell for evening meeting there. (1st day 12 miles.)

JULY 24th—(30 miles).
Start 8 a. m. Stillwell 9:30, Watertown dinner; leave 2 p. m., Tynes City 3:30, Plymouth 5 p. m., and spend night, a few speakers going on to Argos for evening meeting there.

JULY 25th—(42 miles).
Start 8 a. m., Argos 9:30, Walnut 10:30, Tiam 11 a. m., Devilsville 6 p. m., Denver 4:30, (a few will stop here for the evening meeting), Peru 6 p. m., and spend the night.

JULY 26th—(21 miles).
Start 8 a. m., Bunker Hill 9:30, Miami 10:30, and dine, making Kokomo for night meeting.

JULY 27th—(32 miles).
Leave 8 a. m., Sparyville 9:30, Jackson 10:30, Tipton for dinner; leave 1:30 p. m., Atlanta 2:30, Arcadia 3:30, Cicero 4:30; a few speakers will stay here for evening meeting; Noblesville 5:30, and spend the night.

JULY 28th—(41 miles).
Start 9 a. m., Castleton for dinner, where we will meet a number of the Indianapolis Socialists, who will conduct us into the capital city in time for evening meeting. Total distance by wheel 124 miles.

THE RETURN.

The trip home will be made in the same manner, but a route through the country further east has been selected. It is not known as to what day the convention will adjourn, but the time made will be about as follows: the exact dates to be supplied to the comrades along the route upon the adjournment of the convention.

FIRST DAY—(38 miles).
Start 8 a. m., Edna for dinner, at Pendleton leave for speakers for evening meeting, the main body going to Anderson to spend the night.

SECOND DAY—(22 miles).
Start 8 a. m., Alexandria for dinner, and speakers will be at Fairpoint.

Gas City and Marion for evening meetings and the night.

THIRD DAY—(21 miles).
Start from Marion 9 a. m., La Fountain for dinner, and spend the night at Wabash.

FOURTH DAY—(31 miles).
Start 9 a. m., Manchester for dinner, Warsaw for night.

FIFTH DAY—(25 miles).
Start 9 a. m., drop speaker at Milford for noon meeting, dinner at New Paris, speakers left at Goshen for night meeting, main body to Elkhart, and spend night.

SIXTH DAY—(23 miles).
Start 8 a. m., dinner at South Bend and spend night at Niles. A few speakers going on to Herrin Springs.

SEVENTH DAY—(41 miles).
Ride into Benton Harbor and St. Joseph and hold noon and night meetings, and leaving on boat that evening for Chicago. Total miles en route 705.

SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE.

Members from many Branches Meet and Adopt By-Laws for the Conduct of Business.

Pursuant to adjournment, the comrades interested in the proposed co-operative met at the Socialist Temple on Monday, July 15th, at 8 p. m. Comrade Huggins was elected chairman. The minutes of the last meeting were read for the information of those comrades who were present for the first time, and after a few more introductory explanations by Comrades Kirs and Huggins, the by-laws of the Co-operative, published in number 122 of The Call, July 6th, were read section by section for approval or amendment.

Section 1, Name, was adopted as formulated, the name "Socialist Co-operative of Chicago," being approved by the majority against the protests of a few overcautious and suspicious comrades. Section 2, Object, was approved and the contribution of funds to the Socialist propaganda quoted as a strong point in favor of the name. "Socialist" Co-operative. Section 3, Membership, was approved as formulated, for it was pointed out that only party members and their wives could be relied upon to uphold that part of section 10, Rebates, which provided that one-eighth of the net profits should be devoted to Socialist propaganda. Outsiders could be encouraged to make their purchases through members who could turn over the rebates to them. A first payment of 50 cents was considered sufficient for admission to membership; but in order to raise the funds necessary for the purchase of the first stock, higher payments up to the amount of the full membership fee were to be solicited.

Section 4, Meetings, was amended to read as follows: "The annual meeting of the Socialist Co-operative shall be held on the first Monday of September of each year. Special meetings of the stockholders shall be called by the Board of Directors whenever petitioned by 10 per cent of the membership, notice of such meeting to be published in two successive issues of a Socialist newspaper published in Chicago. The Board of Directors shall hold regular meetings monthly; special meetings may be called by any five directors by giving not less than three days' notice in writing to all the other directors. Section 5, Quorum, was introduced as a new section to read as follows: "One fifth of the membership shall constitute a quorum to transact business at the meetings of the Socialist Co-operative, and two directors shall constitute a quorum to transact business at a directors' meeting." Section 6, Directors, was amended to read as follows: "The control of the Socialist Co-operative shall be vested in a board of nine directors, to be elected by ballot at the annual meeting of the stockholders. Each member shall vote for nine candidates and the nine persons receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. They shall hold office for one year but any director may be removed by a majority vote of the members present at any special meeting. No comrade shall be eligible as member of the board of directors or as any other officer, unless he has belonged at least six months to the party, has been in good standing for at least three months and is a dues-paying member. Section 7, Officers; 8, Duties of Secretary; 9, Duties of Treasurer; 10, Duties of Manager; 11, Rebates, were adopted as already published. Section 12, Amendments, was introduced and formulated at the suggestion of Comrade Goodspeed to read as follows: "These by-laws may be amended at any time by a two-thirds vote of the stockholders at any regularly called meeting, provided that the proposed text of such amendment must be given by publication in a Socialist paper published in the city of Chicago at least one week before such meeting." The by-laws as a whole were then approved and adopted.

A few more explanations were then given in reply to questions and a few more suggestions discussed. The question of location of an apportioning, auditing and arbitral committee was left to be discussed at a later time. Comrades Kerr, Goodspeed and Kleininger were nominated and elected as a committee to secure a charter for the Co-operative. The members present constituted themselves into committees to solicit new members for the Co-operative in their respective wards. On roll call the following branches were found to be represented: Wards 4, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 20, 23, 27, 35, and Glen Ellyn. Comrade Kleininger announced that the "Chicago Co-operative Trading Society" and the "Chicago Consumer Verein" would be glad to buy their goods through our buyer for the purpose of obtaining cheaper rates.

War on Organized Labor.

Employers' Association of Dayton, Ohio, circulates the recent injunction of Judge Kumer against the Metal Polishers, as a specimen of how combinations of workmen should be paralyzed from a capitalist point of view, and urges the necessity of union among labor skippers.

In a recent issue of this paper, attention was called to the fact that the solidarity of capital was making itself strongly apparent in every part of the industrial field throughout the country, and that this solidarity was manifested in the legal decisions against organized labor, which were and still are being reported almost as daily occurrences in the capitalist press. Further evidence is now being given, in a pamphlet and circular issued by the Employers' Association of Dayton, Ohio, and sent to all employers of labor throughout the United States, that the capitalist classes recognize to the full the fact that they are now confronted with a hostile laboring class which must be disarmed and disorganized if the present system of exploitation is to survive.

The pamphlet deals with the recent decision of Judge Kumer of Ohio, who it will be remembered, declared that picketing, boycotting, "persuasion and other methods employed in labor difficulties" were illegal, and enjoined the defendants (Metal Polishers Union No. 5) from employing such methods, and the legal arguments pro and con leading up to the decision constitute the main portion of its contents, which are declared in the circular, to be published in the interests of employers in the United States.

But the circular which introduces the pamphlet is itself of infinitely more significance than the rehearsal of the legal technicalities, precedents, etc. upon which Kumer's decision is alleged to be based. Its opening paragraph shows clearly that however blind the workingmen may be, the capitalists are fully alive to the fact that the present political and economic system is their servant and creature of their class, and exists in its present form solely to subserve their interests. They recognize further, a truth that the vast majority of the laborers are ignorant of, that the demands of the latter for better material conditions must, if conceded, inevitably overthrow the political supremacy of capitalism. The circular starts off as follows:

"Realizing the importance of the labor problem; that the rapidly developing policy of dictation by organized labor has become appalling, and will, if not soon restrained, ultimately paralyze our foreign and domestic trade, and imperil our system of government; that it has already reached such proportions as to necessitate the formation of national and local organizations of employers of labor for protection against the encroachments upon their rights and the rights of free and independent workmen, under the Constitution of the United States, and for the purpose of assisting in antagonizing the flagrant violation of the law as commonly practiced by organized labor for the purpose of compelling employers by intimidation, coercion, boycotting, personal violence and other unlawful methods, to submit to its demands, the Employers' Association of Dayton, O., has had published the proceedings, etc., etc."

The object of the proposed association is alleged to be the securing not only of the rights of the employers, but those of "free and independent workmen." Just who the latter are may be gathered from the opening lines of the preamble. "Free and independent workmen" are evidently those who are unorganized and therefore not in a position to "dictate." This is merely another form of the favorite capitalist assertion that members of labor unions are enslaved by their organizations, a position which permits the capitalist to pose as the champion of personal liberty and unlimited exploitation of labor, at one and the same time.

"Dictation" there must be; the capitalist himself says so; but he looks at the matter from two different standpoints. As regards the laborers, those who through their organization have acquired the power to "dictate," are slaves, while the unorganized laborer who cannot be so is "free and independent."

But when his own class is considered, this reasoning is at once reversed, and the employer who possesses the power of "dictation" is alone, "free and independent" while the employer who is forced to submit to the "dictation" of a labor union becomes a slave. This very convenient theory assumes that combinations have a very different effect upon those forming them. The laborers only combine in order to enslave themselves, while the capitalists combine in order to gain "freedom and independence" for themselves—and incidentally for the laborers.

It will be seen therefore that freedom for the capitalist spells slavery for the laborer, while conversely, freedom for the laborer means the abolition of the capitalist, a truth which the latter recognizes in the assertion that "OUR system of government will be imperiled" unless the "dictating" power of organized labor is "soon restrained" as the preamble says.

Just what this "restraint" means, is seen by the summary of Judge Kumer's injunction against the Metal Polishers, and which is regarded by the Employers' Association of Dayton, Ohio, as "the most complete and comprehensive definition of law on the question at issue that has been handed down by any court in the country."

The injunction in question may certainly be so regarded by the Employers' Association. Its provisions deprive a labor organization of the slightest reason for existence. The defendants are enjoined perpetually from interfering in any way or manner with the business of the company either by threats, intimidation, personal violence or OTHER MEANS calculated to prevent "such persons" (the free and independent workmen) from entering and continuing in the employ of the plaintiffs; from boycotting, picketing or patrolling, congregating or loitering about or in the neighborhood of the premises of the plaintiff, persuading or inducing any person not to trade or deal with plaintiff, etc., etc., giving directions or orders to committees, associations or other bodies to obstruct or interfere in any manner whatever with the business of the plaintiff. The injunction to be perpetually binding upon defendants and all others, with "judgment for costs expended in the cause and execution thereof."

It requires no great intelligence to discern the fact that this decision renders a labor organization utterly and absolutely impotent, an emasculated caricature, without power or initiative. And this is exactly as the capitalist class would have it. How long will it take the average Trades Unionist to see that between "restraint" of this sort and the complete abolition of the Union there is practically no difference?

In taking their stand upon this injunction of Judge Kumer's, the Employers' Association are in reality issuing an ultimatum to the labor unions demanding unconditional surrender of every weapon which is of any possible use to them in the struggle. That the use of these weapons should be declared illegal by a capitalist judge is nothing more than what might reasonably be expected. The Employers' Association know perfectly well that capital and labor cannot jointly rule in the economic field, that no dual control is possible. The "rights" of both laborer and capitalist must be defined by the latter, and will continue to be so defined, so long as "OUR system of government" exists, as the circular declares.

For years the Socialist workingmen in Trades Union organizations have labored unceasingly amongst their fellows, to inculcate the absolute necessity of political action on the part of their class to place themselves in possession of the law making power. They have shown conclusively that the development of capitalism was, logically, bound to render impotent the economic organizations of the workers, and that whatever tended in any manner to restrict the exploitation of the laborer would at length come under the ban of capitalist law. And now comes the Employers' Association, with the avowed purpose of nullifying every effort of the laborer to gain better conditions of life, by promulgating as the most "complete and comprehensive definition of law" a decision which strips the latter of every vestige of economic power and leaves him a helpless prey to his exploiters.

If this decision stood alone, it might be said that too much importance has been attached to it. But there is hardly an industrial State in the Union in which during the past twelve months one or more similar decisions have not been promulg

A motion was then carried to hold the next meeting on Monday, August 5, at 8 p. m. in the Socialist Temple. This meeting is to be a MEETING OF PROSPECTIVE MEMBERS, and the order of the day, to be introduced and adopted by a majority vote of those present will be:

1. Enrolling of members.
2. Reading of minutes.
3. Election of directors.
4. New business.

All who intend to become members are invited to attend and register their names. Guests are welcomed, but only members will be allowed to take part in the discussions.

ERNEST UTERMANN,
Secretary pro tem

On last Saturday the raten workers met at the Socialist Temple for the purpose of organizing a trades union of the craft. The organization started with about 75 members and was addressed by several union officials and by Comrade John Collins, of the Machinists. Comrade Collins' address was listened to with much attention and vigorously applauded. The howl which was heard again at the Temple on next Saturday, 20th inst. at 2 p. m.

Monday Northcott last week informed the members of the Illinois State Soc. Association that the commercial companies were running the politics of this country. His remarks created a "sensational" and "thrill of horror" at one and the same time. However, the victims have by this time entirely recovered.

The scheme to divide the people with a perpetual debt in assuming shape. The "Inventor" things says "a gigantic scheme" under way to transfer the railroads of the United States to the government. A western member declared that within a few years Rockefeller, Harriman, Vanderbilt, Gould and Morgan interests would turn over to the government every line of railroad in the country; the government to pay the total value, $100,000,000, a string of bonds to be controlled by the same interests and to finance the deal. Now the people-time state Socialists, who "don't want to confiscate anything," ought to be happy and lend all their aid to help along the scheme of the wily magnates—Cleveland Citizen.

or
The Carpenter of Nazareth
EUGENE SUE.

The plain but thrilling story told in a masterly manner by the great French author, set before the reader as soon as he begins to read. Stopped at the Church, 2 and 3 are appeared as the type of the earnest, honest radical leader of the people, a figure which history has reproduced with slight variations in every racial period in the progress of mankind. When the old order of things had reached its climax and was about to give way to the new, the book gives that noble character to the teachings of the carpenter of Nazareth which most of our generation—whether Christian, Jew or freethinker—have failed to perceive through the mass of church and state dogma which has been piled upon it. As a picture of society and the social system of that epoch with the class struggle raging within it, this story will throw a strong light on our own conditions of today. 151 pages, cloth, with or without silver cross decorations, price 50 cents.

NEW TENDENCIES IN AMERICAN SOCIALISM.

From advance proofs of International Socialist Review.

That the present moment is a critical one in the history of the socialist movement in America is a commonplace. Every observer has noticed that both within and without the socialist organizations, the influences that affect the socialist movement appear to be approaching a climax. Whether this condition will continue to grow more acute for some time to come no one can say. But it would seem probable that the Indianapolis convention would mark the turning point. Coming as it does at such a crucial time, that convention will perhaps mark the beginning of the greatest setback it is possible for a movement resting on economic development to receive or, as we all hope, the date from which the socialist movement will have shown itself large enough to effectively cope with an industrialism whose rotten ripeness has prepared the way for a new social organization.

One thing is sure, and that is that in the midst of the most tremendous political, social and industrial chaos the world has ever known, the one center of intelligent evolution is to be found in the developing socialist thought. Every field of art, literature, science, music, education, or industry, is feeling the influence of that thought. A delegate from the recent meeting of the National Educational Association at Detroit states that the whole proceedings swung round a contrast between the new pedagogical theory, demanding educational advance and growth, and the capitalist environment that cramped and deadened all things educational.

The populist party is today but a memory so far as a political organization is concerned. But the impulse which once led to the casting of a million votes in blind protest against a galling capitalism, is becoming more intelligently revolutionary. The suffering of the American farmer during the past ten years, together with the lessons of general economic development, have made the farmers of America ready for socialism. But the socialists are not yet ready for the farmers. The majority of socialist writers and speakers are so hopelessly ignorant of the problems of agriculture that they cannot possibly have an intelligent opinion upon them. Yet they are anxious to write farmers' programs and to give voice to farmers' demands. Many a socialist talks learnedly of the problems of agriculture from the depths of a city office who not only knows nothing of practical farming but would be hard put to it if asked to name a single periodical or book on agriculture. If such men will first study the needs and demands of the farmer they will find that he is simply making, in a more or less intelligent form, the age-long demand of the slave, that he receive what he produces and that he possess in common with his fellows the tools with which that product is created.

The great body of trade-unionists, too, through the formation of trusts, leases of injunctions, and use of militia, are being forced to recognize the necessity of independent political action to secure common possession of the essentials to life. When they have recognized this fact they are socialists. The labor fakir is losing his grip all along the line. Capitalist politicians are being driven from the unions. Active socialists in the trade-unions are hastening this process at a multitude of points.

Within the political parties all is chaos. In the height of its power the republican party is panic-stricken lest its old dummy adversary disintegrate and give way to a real antagonist. Hanna shrieks out that the next struggle will be between republicans and socialists. Wayne McVeagh repeats the same statement in more guarded language. The leading spokesmen and writers of the republican party however round the railing form of their dearest enemy and urge the "re-organization" of the democratic party, and hail with joy all signs of reviving strength. But the case is hopeless. The economic class whose interests were represented by the democratic party has ceased to be of sufficient importance to be hereafter represented in the political world. Therefore, that party has ceased to exist save as a disorganizing memory that one would fain put aside and out of mind. From the party organizations of Ohio, New York and Illinois, as well as from countless individuals comes the proof that since the class of little exploiters has disappeared, there is nothing left for the professional politician save to choose between the proletarian and the capitalist class. But the victors flock only where carrion calls, and proletarian bones have already been picked too clean by the hyenas of capitalism to tempt the vultures of the four birds of politics. So all these, whether formerly democratic or republican, try to cling to dictatorship. Neither can see anything to be gained by expending the sweat of the workers. And they are right, for he who comes to the proletarian of today can rob him of nothing but his fetters.

Millions in America today have been prepared by economic development for acceptance and understanding of the principles of socialism. But the socialists, who should be spending every energy in bringing those principles before the people who are ready, are wasting their time in child-like wrangling. The time is now here for action. If we who are in possession of the machinery of socialist political parties have not intelligence enough to adjust that machinery to accommodate the new elements that are ready for socialism, then those elements will form a political machinery of their own and we will be forced to accept their work. This will mean perhaps years of costly blundering and human suffering, as unnecessary as cruel and costly.

One thing is certain. This fiercely fermenting new wise demands new bottles. A mighty social upheaval, a great political party, an economic revolution cannot be confined within the bounds of a fraternal society for propaganda purposes. The greatest need of the hour is not, as in the past, a training school for propagandists, so much as a political expression of the movement that is already at hand. Questions of dues, officers, constitutions, and membership, must give way to the larger facts of economic exigency and social evolution. The current of revolution has grown too broad in America to be confined within the limits of any lodge-like organization, and any attempt to so confine it will fall with disaster to those who make the effort, as well as to the socialist cause. This does not mean that officers, dues and constitutions are not necessary, for they are of great importance. Those who would seek to dispense with such essentials are emptying out the baby with the bath. But from now on these things must be looked upon as merely means to an end, and not always the most important means. This is not a question of choice. It will not be by vote, but by social development that this condition will come to pass. When socialism shall have begun to spread into every nook and corner of the country, when nominations are made in legal primaries by voters whose qualifications are determined by capitalist law, when socialism shall have given us the responsibility for official actions as well as the work of propaganda, when, in short, we shall have become a political and social force instead of a mere educational cult, then the fundamental change will have come, no matter whether we have had sense enough to realize it and accommodate the forms of our organization to it or not.

Party of economic doctrine can no longer be secured through party discipline. The time is even now here when the attempt to uphold economic heresy by personal expulsions becomes the broadest of burlesques. The party of socialist principles must henceforth be maintained by the burning away of all dross in the heat of free discussion. The right and true must be made to triumph because of their legal power to conquer and not because of the support of party discipline. This demands the greatest freedom of personal discussion and action within the party. At a time when the socialists were but a chosen few in a hostile land, when the corrupting influence of capitalism beat ceaselessly upon each individual from every side, then it was perhaps necessary that those principles be intrusted to the few who would protect them from contamination and preserve their purity. So long, too, as there were economic classes with conflicting interests, there was pressing danger from those who would steal from the socialist army a portion of its weapons only to brand them into forms that could be used against their rightful owners. But today, when socialists have left their sectarian seclusion to take the offensive upon the field of battle, and when development has progressed to the point that there is no class or party that can afford to accept a portion of the socialist logic, lest they be at once compelled to take the whole, this danger is no longer imminent. If today such a party is allowed to grow up and to act as an obstacle for a few years to the progress of revolutionary socialism it will be because the organized socialists have not recognized the changes of economic development and have refused to cowardly seclusion within their tents while those of perhaps less knowledge of socialist principles but more courage of their convictions and greater grasp of present social movements have dared to act, even if unwisely.

Once more "It is a condition not a theory that unifies us." The socialist movement has already outgrown the reach of party discipline. With the hundred independent socialist papers of today grown into a thousand in a year hence, any press censorship becomes as impossible and as ineffective as permanent expunction. We grow, not because we will it, but because we are alive and obey the laws of growth.

Any organization that shall correspond to present exigencies must possess great flexibility. The socialists of no other time or place were ever confronted with such a task—nor such an opportunity—as that which now lies before the socialists of America. It is more nearly comparable to the international problem that have confronted the socialists of Europe than to any questions that have ever arisen within national boundaries. It is even more difficult and more significant than any international question, for in the last analysis all such problems could be solved by cutting the Gordian knot of international connection and leaving each nation free to solve its own problems. But political and economic relations force us to accept the fact of national unity, and it is but the part of a coward and a fool to refuse to recognize this fact. History, tradition, political practice and economic solidarity demand that there be but one national socialist party and any discussion of anything else is an idle waste of breath which may for the

We must "come from within" and strike from without. Let us become conscious of our strength. Let us lay aside utopianism in all its forms. Let us maintain the purity of our doctrine by striking them continually against the weapons of our adversaries that all essential matter may be farred away. Let us not fear contamination by contact with capitalism. Let us rather draw close to every old and decaying social institution, that, while preserving our identity we may strike the harder blow. This does not mean the slightest concession to Fabianism, compromise or fusion. We must always and at all times preserve the class-conscious position, maintain our independence and abate no jot of our principles. The evolution of the age has justified the truth of those principles and every passing day emphasizes their truth. Today no man dare openly challenge the fundamental principles of scientific socialism. No man has challenged them for many years. Why, then, should we fear injury to them in closest comparison with the exploded positions of the defenders of capitalism?

IDEAS ON PLATFORM

Several Important Features Discussed and Explained.

TO AVOID FUTURE DISSENSION

Well Regulated Central Body Instituted, as a Necessity for Efficient and Systematic Work.

Convention day is near at hand and the eyes of Socialists organized and unorganized are now turned upon the delegates who are to meet at Indianapolis on July 29th. That the result of their deliberations will resolve itself into the welding together of all principle-conscious socialists into one solid body, is the fervent hope of every man who realizes that in the establishment of cut, revolutionary, and uncompromising.

It is very necessary and important, that in these days of freakism, when the air is filled with proposals of reform of every description, single tax, income tax, prohibition, three cent farism, municipal ownership and a host of other "isms", to point out that the producer has nothing to gain from any palliatives—that inasmuch as the wages he gets are determined fundamentally by the cost of his subsistence, the supply of labor ever being in excess of the demand, under private land and tool ownership, consequently the competition between laborers for jobs will force wages down to the level of the reduced cost of living, causing loss of time and energy wasted in the non-realization of the promised "half loaf", pointed about by our "one-step-at-a-time" theorists.

Let it be explicitly understood that we are not socialists for office-getting purposes, and though this may tend to lose us some support, it will result in making principle-conscious socialists, who cannot be stamped into the ranks of capitalist parties by every hurrah campaign of a Bryanite character. We should profit by past experience; the defeat for re-election of Maguire at Paterson, N. J., of Rutherford at Holyoke, and Chase at Haverhill, Mass., should be sufficient lesson for us. We want men to vote for principle—not for individualism.

3rd: It would also be politic to define our attitude towards the S. L. P., and make it clear that the difference is not fundamental but tactical; that a Socialist party is not necessarily Socialism in absolutism; that parties are merely repositories and reflections of the sum total of the average intelligence of their membership; and are like the aggregate of individual members composing them, and by no means infallible. Let us therefore agree upon and adopt a constitution liberal enough to include every man, whatever opinion he may hold upon matters of tactics, so that he can accept the socialist philosophy and be prepared to fight within the ranks, along the lines mapped out by the Socialist political parties of the world.

Let our by-laws be such as will enable our party membership to unite with or assist the S. L. P. within such localities where combined effort in the political field may make the election of socialists possible.

4th: The necessity of a National Executive Committee to have a properly regulated, well working machine, every wheel and every cog within the wheel, as well as every particle of matter that tends to make the machine harmonious and fit within their respective compartments. The larger and more complex the combination, the greater need for a central working organ, likewise is this true of a political party. The larger its scope or field of operation the greater the need of a central directing authority which tends to conserve energy, eliminate waste and focus knowledge. Let us therefore have a National Executive Committee with well defined constituted powers, orderly regulative but never supreme and over-burdened to the mandate of the membership of the organization proper. The seat or headquarters of such committee should be centrally located to the mass membership, and if pressure of business demands it, perhaps likewise institute an auxiliary committee in one or more sections of the country which are too far removed from the seat of the central body to facilitate unimpeded working; such auxiliary bodies to be subordinate to National Committee and have supervision only in their respective territories.

5th: Another and most important point is the need of recognizing the principle of democracy in our political relationship, which we are far from doing at the present time, as for example in the constitution of the S. L. P., where the N. E. C. is invested with authority to suspend indiscriminately, any section, branch, or individual for "traitorous conduct". The question as to what constitutes a traitorous act is almost indecipherable and can easily be construed to mean simply just what the N. E. C. may choose. Under such circumstances and vested with such power, the several members of an N. E. C. can suspend the entire party membership and leave their action subject to the endorsement of but a single branch of ten members.

There is but one safeguard against this, and that is, to so provide that the member under charge, be privileged not only to speak in his own defense, but also to afford him the right of voting on his suspension or expulsion.

This will enforce the spirit of democracy and avoid cause for future "splints" in the socialist ranks. A party organized in this manner leaves no excuse for holders to claim "grievances" and start new parties.

M. KAPLAN.

Professor Geo. D. Herron will speak at the Socialist Temple on Friday, July 26th, at 8 p. m. A large attendance is looked for.

On Thursday, August 1st, at 8 p. m., an open air debate will take place at corner Harrison Street and 4th Ave. between T. Donagan and M. Kaplan. Subject: "Is Single Tax Equitable". Affirmative, Donagan—Negative, Kaplan.

SOCIALIST DISCORD

Exaggerated Idea of Personality Responsible.

A LEGACY FROM CAPITALISM.

Intellectual Superiority Mainly Due to Heredity and Environment of the Possessor.

"Know thyself," is an old advice, and unlike a good many old sayings, it still holds as good in our days as it did at the time of the ancient philosophers who coined it. We cannot act intelligently, unless we fully grasp the situation confronting us. But it is not sufficient to devote our attention exclusively to the economic and social phenomena, which make up the social question. This question becomes possible in the last instance only through the entrance of human beings on the world stage. To know and understand the world of things, therefore, we must begin by knowing ourselves. If we carefully sound the long winded and seemingly profound discussions on theory and tactics that read the socialist camps in all parts of the world, we almost invariably find a personal element at the bottom of them. Each of the debaters, a product of his peculiar former and present environment, sees a part of the truth from the horizon of this environment. They would at once understand one another, and come to terms, if they would remove the spectacles of their own environment, disembody themselves for a moment and meet on the mental ground of objective facts. To recognize this truth is the first step to unity.

There is little actual difficulty in agreeing on a platform that will make a united movement possible. The logic of economic necessity is too convincing to permit of any doubt. What keeps us apart are at the bottom petty personal differences that have their roots in the little "families" which our various parties represent. The ripples of dissent, started by single individuals, spread outward and, like a rolling avalanche, increase in strength with the extent of their expansion. Lay the axe at the root of individual narrowness, conceit and egotism, and you will nip all dissensions in the bud.

Remove the power of dissent, and you will have a united socialist movement. Many of our brightest lights suffer from this disease. In a movement of such comparative youth as ours, it is easy to gain prominence with little true worth. The rank and file, as a rule, is more easily dumfounded and awestruck by a quick, though often pointless, repartee, than by an honest and logical explanation. Too often we see how talented men, their heads filled with the wisdom gleaned from the works of other minds, suddenly assume in their own eyes an importance out of all proportion to the knowledge of which they are so proud. Accustomed to carefully measure day by day, how much they have seemingly grown in comparison to others, they forget that the difference between their brains and other brains is really not such a fearful chasm as they imagine; but only a slight modification of degree. Blinded by their easy success, they neglect the simple truth, that they owe their accomplishments almost exclusively to heredity and present environment, and that very little of their fancied superiority is due to their own matchless intelligence. They become arrogant, sneer at their less gifted comrades, and often offend those who patiently, and without hope or expectation of recognition, toil ceaselessly and in the heat of their powers for the advancement of the cause; whose only incentive is derived from a heart full of love and a manhood too great to push themselves to the front at the expense of the feelings of those whom they call comrades.

Socialism is not alone the spinning recognition of economic principles. We all bow to the necessity of economic evolution and acknowledge the importance of scientific and critical investigation. But to many of us, the brightest hope and dearest jewel in the crown of the co-operative commonwealth is the "BROTHERHOOD" which it is bound to bring to all men. Filled with a longing for this spirit of fraternal love and comradeship, we have entered the ranks of the militant proletarians, only to find for many of its prominent men, the word co-operation means only a working together for their own gratification at the expense of others. Now is this all. We even hear this language after fraternal ridicule and belittled as Utopian, as unworthy of scientific and scientific men.

The restless march of economic development will shape the course from capitalist to co-operative production, whether we recognize such or think of the laws that are at the bottom of social evolution. But as all these phenomena are only possible, because they are reflected in human minds which in turn react on their environment, it will make a great difference for the future.

DIVIDE AND CONQUER.

"YAT PARTY."—"We only do this to show that we don't believe in 'dividing up'."

moment obstruct the coming of such a party, but cannot prevent its ultimate appearance and success. Whether that one party will come as the result of intelligent co-operation or as a survival after a bitter fratricidal struggle, is for the socialists of America to decide.

But if there is national unity, local diversity is no less a fact. There is as great variation in economic conditions between Maine, South Carolina, New York, Mississippi, Illinois, Florida, Dakota and California, as between Germany, Belgium, France, Norway, Italy and Spain. Yet, as was said before, there must be an organic unity and not a federation of independent, isolated groups extending over the entire United States. To talk of anything else betrays an ignorance of American political, social and governmental institutions too dense for argument to penetrate. The ideal must be complete state autonomy in local affairs with closest national control of national affairs. This ideal can be realized through the establishment of a central control that shall be almost entirely advisory and educational in its character and that shall secure obedience to its decrees only because of the possession of wider knowledge of the things on which it speaks.

Under the conditions of the future the maintenance of a membership in a mark of greater activity for socialism than a list of socialist orthodoxy. The mark of membership will be a demonstration of co-operation and organization, not of discipline and regulation.

The whole attitude of the socialist movement from now on must be one of attack upon the entire capitalist organization at every point of opening.

We have nothing to gain from half-way measures, save delay to complete victory. Economic evolution in America has wiped out all stepping stones between capitalism and socialism and he who fears to take the whole leap will but fall into the abyss that separates them.

Two contending forces are struggling for the mastery in the socialist movement of America at this moment. One sees only this new phase of economic development and that the old institutions of socialism do not correspond to the new demands. They would wipe out all the work of years and surrender all to the exigencies of the moment. These men would abolish national organizations, and, indeed, all organization, and enter the field of capitalist politics to scramble for votes through the competitive offers of immediate amelioration. The other force remembers only the good work of the past and fails to recognize that new forces are here. They would seek to maintain a secular church, doctrinaire socialism, and a personal discipline. Let us apply the Hegelian dialectics that in a modified form lie back of the earliest socialist classics, and seek the solution in a higher synthesis, that shall conserve the old and include the new, that shall maintain principles intact, but shall give the greatest flexibility of form. If we can do this we shall have solved the problem that lay before us and acquired ourselves like men and women and socialists.

Trade unionists will be interested in knowing that the "scabs" who took the places of the union men at the recent strike in the Sprague Electrical Works at East Orange, N. J., have no connection whatever with the socialist movement, the entire group belonging to an organization called the S. T. and L. A., which is engineered by a notorious New York politician named De Leon, who usually poses as a "socialist" and whose avowed object is to destroy the present Trades Union through the agency of his rival organization, the S. T. and L. A. It is really so small and insignificant that its existence is not generally known to the vast majority of union men. It only springs into a temporary local notoriety when an opportunity is offered to furnish "scabs" to the employers, as in the present instance.

We observed with much satisfaction that the Appeal to Reason shows some signs of swinging into line for Socialism. It denies emphatically that it regards the "public ownership of monopolies" as the essence of Socialism, and gets mad because a writer in the Workers' Call stated that "a pretended socialist paper of wide circulation" did so regard it. This is progress with a vengeance. Six months ago the Appeal would have not only admitted the truth of the statement but gloried in it. Now it rambles over itself in an effort to show that it is thoroughly "scientific, class conscious, revolutionary, uncompromising" and everything else that the "narrow straightlaced doctrinaire fellows" have insisted on as essential. We don't mind the Appeal calling us such names as "fool agents" etc. if it finds any relief in such expressions, understanding that limitation is after all the sincerest form of flattery, and that it is only natural that those who have been compelled to abandon a false for a true position should feel a trifle sore immediately after making the change. Under these circumstances we can afford to be magnanimous and dispense with the "retort uncourteous."

THE SITUATION, OUT OF ORDER.

We note with pleasure elsewhere in our columns the prompt response made by the leaders of the Workers' Auxiliary to the appeal for funds for our delegates' expenses to the Indianapolis convention. Though as yet but a small body, it must be conceded that it is composed of active workers, and we feel that it will yet set the pace for every branch in the city. Yet this society is not a rival organization, but just what its name implies—AN AUXILIARY. All its most active members are also identified with their various ward clubs, and the inspiration they receive in the Auxiliary meetings is in turn transmitted to the club organizations. In fact all the Auxiliary's members are strongly and continually urged to join the ward clubs, and to engage there in active work. Yet, by coming together, as women, they are able to carry on certain lines of work which, individually, in the ward clubs, they could not successfully undertake. The party gladly recognizes the services which this organization is rendering to the party and gives its members as true comrades and co-workers in our common cause.

LABOR'S LACK OF A STAKE.

Now that the conflicts between labor and capitalists have assumed such dramatic proportions as to impinge upon the minds of many people the idea of an irreconcilable conflict, the question is being discussed in the capitalist press as to the fitness of the contented parties to control and manage industry and apportion the fruits of labor. Naturally enough the verdict of the press is that the laborers are utterly unfit. The Chicago Tribune arrives at this conclusion through the assertion that it would be illogical and inexpedient that industry as organized at present should be controlled by labor. "Labor," continues the same journal, "has no stake in the results."

While the illogicality and inexpediency may be admitted, as also the inconceivability of labor controlling industry as "organized at present," the latter sentence is worthy of some consideration.

"Labor has no stake in the results."

This statement may be accepted as on the whole correct, under the present capitalist system. It is an extremely convenient argument to use against the laborers when they show any tendency to control industry and apportion its fruits, but it is by no means so applicable when the capitalist system is not threatened.

"Labor has no stake in the results."

But the employer has, and as a consequence is the only fit person to control and apportion. This is the difference between employer and laborer. What then becomes of the doctrine so assiduously preached in the capitalist press, that the interests of employer and employee are identical? The employer is interested in the "results" of labor. The laborer has no interests therein. Therefore their interests are identical. Quod erat demonstrandum!

"Labor has no stake in the results" of industry, as at present organized. The present organization of industry is capitalist, that is to say, it is based on the private ownership of the means of production. Now it is a well-known article of capitalist faith that under socialism the laborer would be left without "incentive." He would be able to get the whole product of his labor, and would therefore have a "stake" in the results. At present he has none. The product of labor is "incentive" to the laborer, but it is the sole "incentive" to the capitalist. Stolen fruit is sweet, but that which is honestly acquired is tasteless. If labor (by which expression the working class is designated) is unfit to control industry and apportion its fruits, under the present system, it is evident that "labor" never will become "fit" until the system is abolished. If the employer is "fit" at the present time, it is equally evident that he will not consciously assist in the abolition of the system. That task must be accomplished by the working class who are only "unfit" while they assent to the continued existence of capitalist robbery. When they combine for its overthrow, or in other words become socialists, they will, by declaring that "labor shall have a stake in the results," have announced their "fitness," even according to capitalist standards.

A BLIND LEADER.

While the situation in the great steel strike remains practically unchanged since last week, nothing has occurred that would justify the conclusion that the chances of victory seem any brighter for the workmen than before, although their leader who has the direction of the strike in his hands still takes an optimistic view of the situation. "It may be worthy of remark," however, that Mr. Shaffer's ideas of what would probably occur in the ranks of the capitalists immediately after the strike had been declared have not been borne out by the actual events. And he has been equally at fault as to his forecast of the probable course that the non-union employees of the Steel Trust would take.

Before the strike materialized Mr. Shaffer declared that the non-union mills would be compelled to close their gates. This prediction has been proved to be without foundation, for the fact that most of the non-union mills are running at present and especially those lately owned by Andrew Carnegie.

Shortly after the strike had been declared, Wall street gave evidence of its existence, through steel stock dropping nearly twelve points inside ten days. Shaffer was jubilant. He explained that the drop was the result of public confidence being disturbed. The investor was being frightened away. He asserted that a further decline was inevitable which would soon bring the trust magnates to their senses.

But nevertheless this did not happen. On the contrary steel stock went up two points and stayed there despite heavy offerings. Mr. Shaffer then explained that the trust had a fund of $20,000,000 on which it was drawing to keep up the value of stock.

Shortly afterwards Morgan declared after the manner of Pullman, that there was "nothing to arbitrate" that no compromise was possible and that the fight would be fought to a finish. Steel stock dropped less than two points, even after this pronouncement.

Mr. Shaffer then announced that the trust would not arbitrate. He seemed to labor under the delusion that the banks and the trust were separate and unconnected concerns. He had no idea whatever of the solidarity of capitalist interests; no idea whatever that J. Pierpont Morgan is only director of the steel trust through his control of banks and bankers. He has now been enlightened on that point. Steel stock has not declined, on the contrary it has risen, and Mr. Shaffer gets still more mystified and writes an imploring letter to Morgan asking him for "consideration" and "fair" treatment.

Whatever be the result of the strike, it is painfully evident that the man whom the employers of the steel trust have selected as their representative, has an exceedingly confused and imperfect conception of the power wielded by his opponents. If he was unaware of the fact that Wall street was really subordinate to the dictates of the group of capitalists represented by Morgan, and even supposed that the banks would dare to disobey their mandate, how much more astonished and mystified he would be to learn that the United States Government itself is but the creature of his opponents? But it is not likely that Mr. Shaffer will ever receive this information until he meets some socialist workman who will demonstrate its truth up to the hilt.

AN EPOCH MAKING CONVENTION.

The proceedings of the Convention which will meet at Indianapolis next week, will be followed with intense interest not only by thousands of members of organized socialist bodies, but also by thousands of individuals to whom the spectacle of a disunited party yet seems a sufficient excuse for holding aloof from active participation in the movement. Under these circumstances, and taking into consideration the fact that the difference between the various bodies as to platform and tactics are comparatively unimportant, we have no hesitation in saying that the central object, the complete unification of all socialist forces throughout the United States, should never be lost sight of in the discussion of minor questions.

The outcome of this convention will form a reliable gauge for that numerically large body who are inclined towards socialism, but who are still outside its organized forces, to judge how far the professions of socialist writers, speakers and agitators coincide with their practice. Over and over again has it been reiterated by public exponents of socialism, that the cause they advocated was infinitely superior to the personalities and prejudices of individuals; that where the philosophy of socialism based upon the class struggle was accepted, no bar towards union existed except such as could be distinctly traced to the personalities and prejudices of individuals. This has been preached so long and so persistently that we must naturally expect those who have heard it repeated over and over again to judge by the results of this convention whether our professions in this respect have been justified or not.

It will be readily seen then, in view of the above, how much depends upon the finding of this body of representative socialists at Indianapolis. If unity is determined upon, the laborers will be ready to enter an immense field that is now ripe to the harvest, under conditions that never before were so favorable. With one of the great capitalist parties in a state of hopeless disintegration, and the other apparently impregnable to all assaults, that do not carry with them death to the capitalist system, with a general war being declared upon organized labor by the exploiting classes, with the combinations of capital growing with tremendous rapidity and the small exploiter being hurried into bankruptcy at a corresponding rate, with millions upon millions of voters standing in an attitude of mingled dismay and bewilderment, only partly conscious of the importance of the mighty economic forces now at work around them, with old political idols and fetiches crumbling into dust upon every hand, their advocates and spokesmen reduced to state platitudes and phrases from which life has long departed, fit with all these undeniable symptoms of coming social revolution before their eyes, the representatives of socialism fail to grasp the fact that above all else, the opportunity demands concerted action on the part of the working class, if they fail to take advantage of the flood tide, in what they want, and the means to attain it. The truth of this claim will be tested in the outcome of the Convention.

If you wish to test the intelligence of your neighbor try him with a few copies of this paper.

If you cannot talk your neighbor into socialism, why not get the Workers' Call to help you with the job?

We who have preached unity to the working class on the political field, shall we act them on a example? Or shall we, like the preachers, politicians and other all probability the establishment of the Co-operative Commonwealth may be postponed indefinitely, to be accomplished eventually at a greater price and through a more painful process.

We have been in the habit of boasting that with the exception of the concessions supporters of capitalism, the socialists are the only people who have a distinct and definite knowledge of tools of capitalism whom we have continually exposed in our press and on our platforms, refuse to regulate our actions and conduct by the principles we have advocated? It is by this standard that we, in spite of ourselves, will be judged. Should we fail to pass the test, so much the worse for the cause we are upholding.

No sacrifice of principle is asked for. It is agreed upon all hands that there are no theoretical differences between the various bodies of socialists organized on the political field. Differences of detail and tactics there may be, but in the face of the imperative necessity for unity now existing, these matters sink into utter insignificance. To some extent the personal factor may also have entered as a disturbing element. It can be and must be eliminated. Hundreds of active socialist workers demand that the handicap of disunity and warring factions, that have no real title to separate existence, shall be removed from the path, so that they may set about their work unfettered and unimpeded. Thousands of workmen, now passive, are waiting the results of the deliberations of this body, that they may in turn take part in ushering in the new era; while millions of workmen who perhaps do not know of its existence, will be at once brought within reach of socialism, if a solid unbroken line of battle is determined upon.

Unity can and must be obtained, and the Convention must see to it.

SILLY SEASON SENSATIONS.

Capitalist Journal Bewails their Security and Provides one of its Own Manufacture.

The Chicago Tribune of last Sunday expresses surprise over the fact that while the "silly season" is now due, the lack of a suitable crop of "sensations" is painfully apparent. The "kissing bug" and the "shirtwaist man," though again impressed into service, have fallen flat, while the usual crop of "sea serpents," inter-planetary "airships," etc., peculiar to such periods, are remarkable by their absence. However, the Tribune does its little best to relieve the scarcity by resurrecting editorially the ancient fable that Marxian socialism is now obsolete in Germany. The writer of this production, "Count" Andrew Bernstoff, of Berlin, (whose name and title alone should be a guarantee of impartial judgment), attempts by sheer force of hard lying to show that the German Socialist movement has about reached its zenith and may now be expected to decline. In order to demonstrate this, he asserts that while the Socialist vote in 1893 showed an increase of 45,000 over the preceding election, that of 1898 showed an advance of only 24,000.

Now the statistics of the German elections show that the Socialists in Germany polled 1,730,000 votes in 1893, and 2,125,000 in 1898 a clear gain of almost 300,000 votes. This amount "Count" Bernstoff divides by four, and publishes the quotient as the actual increase, and his figures are readily accepted by The Tribune, although the same paper has many times before this, published the correct figures in its press dispatches.

Probably Bernstoff acquired his title as a result of the recognition of his ability to manipulate figures in the interests of the ruling class.

At any rate, "sensations" of this sort are of more value to capitalism than bushels of yarn about sea serpents and airships, none of which are anywhere near as useful to the exploiters of labor, as stories about the alleged decline of revolutionary socialism.

REIS DESCENDS THE SINKING SHIP.

The official call of the "Bryan Democrats" of Ohio repudiating the platform of the Ohio State Democratic convention concludes as follows: "If the Democratic party abandons the principles laid down in the platform of 1896 and 1898 then it may as well close its political career, for there is little else of importance to fight for."

And how comes Mr. Bryan who, according to advisers, informs the voters that they can expect no sympathy from him. All of which implies one to ask what has become of those great issues which were "never to be settled until they were settled right?" Can it be that Mr. Bryan has doffed his reactionary tendencies, or is it possible that, after all, he values success more than "principles?" When said "principles" ceases to attract the multitude?

If you wish to test the intelligence of your neighbor try him with a few copies of this paper.

If you cannot talk your neighbor into socialism, why not get the Workers' Call to help you with the job?

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

After all it matters not so very much who has the best of the Sampson-Schley controversy. It matters not who fights battles of capitalism as long as the laboring man who produces all wealth is content to have the product of his toil appropriated by his masters and bartered throughout the world.

Endemic medical men from many lands are in session in an anti-tuberculosis congress in London this week. This gives us opportunity to repeat the wholesome old adage that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." Remove the environments which commercialism has inflicted upon society, and give each individual an opportunity to develop intellectually and physically into a healthy organism, and there will no longer be any occasion for anti-tuberculosis congresses.

In an editorial eulogizing Mr. Bryan on his strength in championing an impossible cause the Chicago Chronicle asks its readers to compare him "with any other populist, socialist or silver republican." This is deviltry with a vengeance. The socialists are accused neither to ask or expect quarter at the hands of the Chronicle. But when we are deliberately packed in between two such reactionary absurdities as populism and silver republicanism, we consider it apt to make, so matter how fruitless, some sort of a protest. Call us all the names you wish and kick us as hard as you like, but in mercy spare us this last humiliation.

Conservative leaders in Belgium assert that a parliamentary form of government in that country is rapidly becoming impossible because of the too rapid tactics of the socialist members. This only bears out the prediction of the socialist that when the ballot becomes dangerous in the hands of a class-conscious working class, the ruling class will take steps toward its restriction. Matters have come to that pass in Belgium, however, when it is doubtful if capitalism can enforce a retrenchment in the matter of suffrage. The very zealotry and self-assertiveness of the socialists only shows that they are confident of their ability to cope with all emergencies that may arise.

The growing solidarity of the proletariat in France is strongly evidenced by the construction by the labor unions of the country of a grand palace of labor. This building will be used for headquarters by the federated trades organizations of France, who now present a united and intelligent front, not to capital, as the press dispatches state, but to capitalism. The Associated Press correspondent also conveniently forgot to state that the project for building a palace of labor originated with and received its chief support from the socialist organizations of Paris. From the fact that the employers of labor refused to contribute a single centime towards its construction, it is to be inferred that they appreciate the part which the new palace of labor will play in the coming proletarian revolution.

The capitalist press has discovered a bugaboo which it is parading before the organized machinists in order to induce them to refrain from striking and remain good wage slaves. After exploiting the manner in which American capital is outstripping foreign competitors, the Record-Herald says: "But the paralysis of a war between capital and labor in this country, might enable our rivals to close up the gap. It is the one thing through which they may hope to regain their best markets, and it is a handicap which both American labor and American capital should avoid by every means in their power." This admonition will have a hollow sound to those members of organized labor who have come to regard the much vaunted supremacy of American trade as a product of their own exerted sweat and blood.

The situation in English politics presents a direct analogy to political conditions on this side of the pond. A despairing effort is being made to reorganize the non-descript English Liberal party, the exact counterpart of the American Democracy. Like the Democracy, the Liberal party has for the past few years been divided into reactionary, anti-imperialistic groups and it is now proposed, as in America, to reorganize on a mildly imperialistic basis. The most significant analogy, however, lies in the undisguised approval manifested by the organs of the Conservative party over the rehabilitation of Liberalism. All of which strongly substantiates the socialistic assertion that in all capitalist countries the tactics of the ruling class are to postpone the inevitable last stand between capitalism and socialism by keeping up the play between buffer parties and false issues as long as possible.

"Collectivism and Industrial Revolution," by Karl Vandervelde, is the latest volume issued from the press of Chas. H. Kerr & Co. It can be procured at their office, 54 Fifth avenue, paper, 25 cents; cloth, 35 cents. The book will be extensively reviewed in the next issue of this paper, as it deals exhaustively with every phase of the subject.

INSTRUCTION OF DELEGATES.

Minutes of special meeting of General Committee S. P. held at Assembly Hall, July 21st.

Comrade Stangland was elected chairman; thirty-nine delegates were present.

Comrade John E. Phelan was admitted as a delegate from 35th Ward Branch.

A committee consisting of Comrades Daniels, Kennedy, Leffingwell, Cook and Gustafson was elected to tabulate and count the votes on delegates to the National Convention.

It was moved and carried that all members of the party present be allowed a voice and vote in the proceedings of the meeting.

Comrades Richter, Lindgren and Morris were elected a committee to collect the credentials and place them in order to be presented by the delegates.

The following order was adopted for the discussion of the subjects before the meeting: 1st: communications; 2d: party name; 3d: platform; 4th: National headquarters; 5th: form of organization.

Resolutions from the 15th and 25th Ward Branches were received and laid on the table for discussion under appropriate order.

A resolution was passed declaring that it be the sense of the meeting that the delegates be instructed to work for the name SOCIALIST PARTY.

After a full discussion the following resolution, regarding the national platform was adopted:

Resolved, That the delegates be instructed to work and vote for a revolutionary platform with no immediate demands, and that we have prepared an address, which shall contain such preliminary measures as we favor and an explanation of our attitude toward the same.

The delegates were instructed to work and vote for Chicago as National Headquarters.

A resolution was passed that the delegates be instructed to vote for a National Executive Committee, and against paid organizers except in unorganized states for as complete state autonomy as is possible, and for a committee of one member from each state to deal only with national affairs. Also to vote against an official party organ.

A resolution was adopted declaring that it is the sense of the Socialist Party of Chicago that all independent delegates shall act in accord with the accredited delegates, which have been discussed at this meeting; that a caucus of all delegates from Chicago, to be held upon their arrival at Indianapolis; that in case any independent delegates do not so vote with the accredited delegates, announcement shall be made in the convention that such delegates are present only as individuals and not as representatives of the party.

It was declared to be the sense of the meeting that in case of charges against locals or individuals, such locals or individuals should be allowed to defend their actions and to vote on their expulsion or suspension.

The delegates were given authority to state to the convention that Local Chicago will accept the work of the convention as final.

The following resolution presented by the 21st Ward Branch was adopted:

WHEREAS, the organic unity of all socialist bodies believing in the class struggle is absolutely necessary, and in order to abolish capitalism and establish socialism a united organization of working-men is needed;

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED, that the first question that the convention should settle is whether or not a complete organic unity is to be accomplished, and that all other questions are minor and merely details of question of unity.

It was decided to send one hundred dollars, if possible, to pay expenses of the delegates, twenty dollars being allowed to each delegate and an itemized account of expenses being required from each.

The committee on count of vote reported the result as follows:

Names: Mr. of votes:

H. Richter.....304.

James S. Smith.....111

Thos. J. Morgan.....223

Chas. F. Lewis.....25

A. M. Simons.....380

J. W. Saunders.....10

Don't forget that in every workingman there is a socialist. It can be most speedily developed by putting the party press within his reach.

Socialist Pointers

Under socialism the poor-house would be wiped out the first day.

The main thing about the platform should be the word SOCIALISM in big letters.

The steel trust will probably make a few thousand socialists this summer without half trying.

As J. Pierpont Morgan has nothing to arbitrate, the steel workers might try him at the ballot box.

It seems that either Sampson or Schley whipped Carrara. The common seamen had nothing to do with it.

Even if the picnic was a success the Workers' Call needs all the hustling for it the party members can do.

Garment makers in New York are striking against the sweat shops. Some day they will strike for their entire product.

No reform police officer interfered with the rich gamblers in Washington Park race track during the recent race meeting.

The workman also should have nothing to arbitrate. He should be satisfied with nothing less than his entire product.

It appears that small boys can only go in swimming in vast Lake Michigan by the grace and with the consent of the capitalists.

Under socialism there will be no classes, but under the present condition the man who denies that there are classes cannot see.

Anyone who can afford it should send a small contribution to the Ohio campaign. Mark Hanna is not going to help the boys out.

Between the socialist candidate and the gold bug democrat in Ohio Mr. Bryan did not take more than a fraction of a second to choose.

The failure of the corn crop will only affect the producers. Their exploiters on the board of trade will manage to live through.

It would be a joke if the system of capitalism would fall in Chicago because its beneficiaries would refuse to pay the taxes to keep it up.

Just as the unity convention forms an organic union and lines up with the international socialist movement it does not matter much what else they do.

The workmen can read the capitalist papers to find out how prosperous they are, but it is the other fellows who are sitting in the draft of the electric fans.

The socialist platform should be short and should mean what it says. Let the old parties have a monopoly of the platforms that contain a mass of confusing words.

Whether union is accomplished at Indianapolis or not, the work of making socialists would go on. The times will make socialists if all of the organizations go to sleep.

One of the richest men in Southern Indiana died last week. He made his money owning and operating coal mines. The men who actually dig the coal generally die poor.

The only reason some workmen are opposed to socialism is that they do not know what socialism is. There is where the party papers can do a good work if widely circulated.

Only the well dressed and the polite are to be allowed to belong to the Carter Harrison League. The ragged and the poor may be forced to find a home in the socialist party.

The trust are not going to be bothered with union labor. They would rather have one big fight now than a smaller one every year. The bullet box is the only place where numbers can down money.

The capitalist goes to the mountains or the seaside to get away from the hot weather, while the workman has to stay and stand it the best he can. That is one of the things socialism will change.

Broadminded Comrade: No unscrupulous communication is ever published in these columns, therefore your letter cannot appear. However it can be answered. You are mistaken in supposing that the Workers' Call is or should be, a free forum in which "any individual of any school of Political Economy" can air his particular opinions at any time that he feels so disposed. The Workers' Call was established wholly and solely as an organ of Socialist propaganda, and as such it will remain. But this does not necessarily imply, as might be inferred from your letter, any reluctance upon its part to meet any and all opponents of socialism. You may perhaps have observed that a large portion of the matter it contains, deals with attacks upon Socialism. But were we to print the whole lot of such attacks, much less invite individuals to compose our pages with antagonistic articles, you can readily see that the paper would not only be diverted from its original purpose, but its usefulness seriously impaired. We do not invite chaos and do not intend to. We are "true" of course to enter a swamp, but don't care to exercise our "freedom" in this respect.

Socialism and Immediate Demands.

By Henry Stobodin.
(From The Worker.)

When first conceived and put into the Socialist platform, the "immediate demands" were considered as advocating such measures as are to be wrested from the working class from the capitalist class during the transition period from the capitalist state to Socialist society. We cannot now consider whether such step was prudent when first made. It is our purpose to consider whether or not it would be prudent for us to follow now in the same direction. It may be added that these measures of amelioration have never been considered of importance in Socialist propaganda and were never considered with the sole object of Socialist propaganda. Not because the Socialists regarded highly any step conducive to the alleviation of the misery of the working class; but because experience has taught them that such alleviation is much sooner secured by a threatening and militant attitude of the working class than by a temporizing and trucking method.

But there came the "practical" Socialist. He embraced the "immediate demands" as containing the alpha and omega of Socialism. He insisted and still insists that the tail of the Socialist platform is of infinitely more importance than its body. His loud pretensions caused the Socialists to examine again the relation of the "immediate demands" to Socialist propaganda. It is satisfactory to notice from the communications published in The Worker and the Workers' Call that the majority of the comrades have again found that the "immediate demands" are altogether superfluous appendage to the Socialist platform.

The opportunist Socialists speak in a much louder and more confident tone since they have found a leader in Bernstein. They declare the "immediate demands" to be the real Socialist program and the declaration of the scientific basis and the chief object of the Socialist party as so much "Utopian phrasology—a remnant of the French revolution. They discard the Marxist method of deducing from inquiry into social conditions the law of social tendencies. Theories they regard as the product of idle rationalization, and the PRESENT fact constitutes for them all in all, failing to notice that the present cannot be understood except in its relation to the past and the future.

Following in their wake, come the small but loud contingent of reform antecedents and of a decidedly "practical" bent in politics. They feel much happier in the Socialist party than they felt in the ranks of the old parties. They are persons of good heart, but timid constitutions, shrinking from anything that appears extreme. In the old parties they were dubbed as visionaries and radicals and they felt unhappy. So much more contented do they feel in the Socialist ranks where they can act the practical and the conservative. The gist of the argument of the "practical" Socialist is that nature does not act by leaps and bounds, that the capitalist state will gradually and imperceptibly grow into a Socialist society, that the action of individuals is of no weight in the evolutionary process; that the Socialists should devote their attention toward furthering such process and not to doubtful ultimate objects.

The last two classes are contradictory. This contradiction is inherent in the attitude of the "practicals." The following question naturally suggests itself: On what ground do these Socialists base the necessity of independent political action by the working class? Since the socialization of society is an automatic, evolutionary process, where is the good of the necessity of the individual meddling with such process. And since the tendencies of the process permeate every section of society, they must manifest themselves in any party, old or new. In fact, since the old parties constitute a larger section of society than the new, the process must be manifest in them stronger in proportion.

The conclusion that independent political action is not necessary for socialization of society has suggested itself, or has been suggested, to every Socialist who embraced the method of what may be called evolutionary opportunism. The Fabians point out that socialist measures were realized by both the conservative and the liberal parties of England. Lack of moral courage, coupled to past association, prevent Bernstein and some of his followers from taking this logical and consistent course. But they have passed already the crossing of the roads, and they have taken the old but what they consider right road. For them remains nothing but to either retrace their steps, or leave the realization of Socialism through independent political action by the working class to those whom they designate as "visionaries" and "utopians".

Many, even among those who advocate the retention of "immediate demands" as they now stand, are anxious to keep their skirts clear from all reform appearances. The revolutionary and clearly Socialist tendency must be kept in front. Hence we have an argument advanced from an authoritative source that the "immediate demands" cannot be realized by any party but the Social Democratic Party, when equipped with the power of government. The Fabians point out that socialist measures were realized by both the conservative and the liberal parties of England. Lack of moral courage, coupled to past association, prevent Bernstein and some of his followers from taking this logical and consistent course. But they have passed already the crossing of the roads, and they have taken the old but what they consider right road. For them remains nothing but to either retrace their steps, or leave the realization of Socialism through independent political action by the working class to those whom they designate as "visionaries" and "utopians".

ingmen may ask that if no ameliorative measures can be wrested from the capitalist government, what good for the working class can a Socialist MINORITY, however strong, achieve in the legislature? And if the object of the Socialists, when entrusted with the powers of government, is to introduce ameliorative measures, may we parry the workingman if he finds that the change is not worth while, since it will require a revolution to effect it.

Our national platform holds differently on the subject. The Social Democratic Party affirms its straight purpose to use those powers (of government) once achieved, to destroy wage slavery, abolish the institution of private property in the means of production and establish the Co-operative Commonwealth. "National Platform."

It, therefore, appears that the object of the Social Democratic Party, when entrusted with the powers of government, will be quite different than tinkering with "immediate demands".

As the industrial functions of society may be compared to the physiologic functions of an organism, so may its political life be regarded as the psychologic functions of the social organism. It would be insufficient merely to assert that the political life of society is determined by its economic conditions. For while it is true that the psychologic state is determined by physiologic conditions of the organism, it is also none the less true that these conditions may be changed by psychologic reaction. The higher the organism stands in the scale of culture, the more evident these characteristics become. They are more manifest in the social organism than in the animal. The scope of our ideas and desires is determined by the surrounding conditions, but ideas react consciously on these conditions and change their character. The Socialist movement presents the most palpable instance of conscious political determinism. This doctrine is quite different from and is opposed to the doctrine of evolutionary fatalism as advocated by the "practicals." The consciousness that our actions have, in a great measure, such effect on the economic conditions and our social life as we desire them to have, gains extreme ground. Under the pronoun "we" is not to be understood the mere legislator or promulgator, but those progressive elements in society the intensity of whose desire caused the promulgation of the measure. Certainly, these elements must constitute a numerically tangible factor before they can aspire to political influence—but the effect of their measures on the industrial life will be in proportion to the clearness of the aims of this minority.

It must not be forgotten that while measures of amelioration are being realized in the capitalist state, they are not exempt from the vicissitudes of other social phenomena. Around them as elsewhere rages the class struggle, and while the march of the revolution compels an extension of their functions, the capitalist state, in sheer self-defense, endeavors to limit or pervert them. The public school system, the introduction of militia system in place of conscription, are among the "immediate demands" of the Socialist of some countries. But we find how in this country these ameliorative measures were perverted to serve the interests of capitalism. It cannot be otherwise while capitalism lasts. The capitalist state must remain true to itself and production must be dominated by its interests. The capitalist class will resist the introduction of the "immediate demands": it will limit or prevent their application where it can no more resist their introduction; it will corrupt and pervert them when it can no more limit them. After it had secured favorable legislation, the working class finds that it has to contend with the judiciary which interprets the laws and then with the executive which applies them. There is no inherent virtue in legislative measures. The measures are good in so far as they are made good. What determines their merit and makes them good? Nothing but the revolutionary attitude of the working class. The Social Democratic Party and its platform go very far in determining such an attitude. While it must be a numerically tangible quantity in order to be a factor in politics, it represents far more than its mere numbers. It is an intense, compact force, fierce and irreconcilable in its aspiration to dominion. It stands as the conscious embodiment of the class struggle that rages all along the line, and its attitude goes far towards forcing concessions from the capitalist class. The more irreconcilable this attitude, the larger will be the concessions to the working class. Who doubts that 10,000 votes cast for our candidate for governor at the last November election would have brought about sooner something like a real employer's liability bill than 300,000 votes cast for a reform party with an "immediate demand" of an employer's liability law in its platform? Moreover, an ameliorative measure, introduced through the agitation of some reform party, would be allowed to fall into a state of innocuous disuse after elections. But if its introduction were due to an increase in the Socialist vote, such vote would stand as a permanent warning against any attempt to tamper with the execution of the measure. Hence the Socialists should secure ameliorative measures to face definitely and threateningly the powers of the present state. A Socialist party must always maintain the position that, though the working class may secure ameliorative measures through the present system, such results cannot last long. The capitalist class will ever seek to nullify, neutralize, or pervert any improvement in its conditions which the working class secures, after a long struggle, to have already attained. Public ownership, instead of being of present benefit to the toilers as a class and a step towards Socialism, may secure to the capitalist class a stronger hold in exploiting other industries and constitute an obstacle to the overthrow of capitalism. Shorter hours, instead of conserving a larger amount of energy to the workingman, may mean a greater outlay of energy without extension of the hours devoted to rest. The extension of the park area usually has as its concomitant the decrease of the dwelling area per capita of the laboring population. It occurs to me that the subject which I touch is of such momentous concern both to the working class and to the Socialist movement that it cannot be dismissed without a closer examination. I shall take some of the most prominent of the "immediate demands" and submit them to a test in the crucible of scientific Socialism.

LABOR ITEMS.

And Notes From Trade Union Journals and Magazines, Throughout the United States.

The only man who is quite guiltless of the infamies of capitalism is the man who is doing his best to abolish them.—The Worker.

The Federation of Metal Trades meets in Convention in St. Louis the last week of this month. Ways and means are to be devised to fight capitalism successfully.

The first Socialist has just been elected to the Legislature of Prussia. He won in the district of Lichternberg, and now something new will be heard in Kaiser Wilhelm's pet stronghold.

A dispatch from Denison, Texas, states that on July 14 every local minister prayed for rain in the morning. The rain came in the afternoon, and with it a storm which wrecked a new church that had cost $15,000.

Judge Tuley told the members of the Illinois State Bar that tax dodging was a "sin." He didn't say to whom, but then the lawyers know well enough that the disappearance of the little property owner is a mere matter of time.

The New York Central Federated Union unanimously voted to endorse John Harriman, late Social Democratic candidate for Vice President, as labor secretary, to attend to all legal matters in which unions or members thereof may be interested.

Six girls in Paterson, N. J., have been arrested for contempt of court, and if their fines are not paid will have to go to jail. They were ribbon weavers on strike—which probably explains the "contempt of court" part of the matter in this era of blanket injunctions.

Twelve of the chief vaudeville theatres of Chicago (McCormick, San Francisco, Los Angeles, New Orleans and Kansas City have been merged into one property, thus forming a western vaudeville trust, with a capitalization of $3,000,000.

Between fifty and sixty thousand sweatshop employes in New York and vicinity are now on strike against the intolerable conditions of their slavery. Just watch the vast amount of assistance they won't get from the "Consumers' League" throughout the country.

The Chinese Government has "bled a claim" at Washington for $500,000, as indemnity for the massacre of some of its subjects at Butte, Montana. And yet the Chinese are said to be an imitative people, besides having had recent ocular demonstration as to how "indemnities" are collected in the twentieth century.

One of the Tribune's "editorials by the fanny" is entitled "Marriage should be a business partnership." The capitalist view of marriage, announced by Marx over half a century is thus admitted to be correct. The strongest bond between man and woman is "business," just as the "cash nexus" is the only bond between man and man that is recognized under capitalism.

A growing agitation is reported from Great Britain in favor of railroad combination such as is now established in the United States. "Thoughtful men," it is stated, recognize the imperative necessity of this both for the shareholders and the nation. Wonder which of the two wants it most? Perhaps this information could be obtained by observing who it is that makes the most "agitation" about the matter.

A big cigar factory at New Orleans, which formerly employed 250 cigar makers, was recently absorbed by the American Tobacco trust. The 250 men were discharged and girls put in their places. These girls operate machines—the product of which is placed on the market as hand-made goods. The only guarantee against being cheated is to see that the union label is on the box when purchasing cigars.

Rev. Dr. W. A. Wright surprised the "best people" of Jamestown, N. Y., who had called a mass meeting to discuss the trusts, by declaring that "combination of capital is founded on strong economic law. I believe in combination of capital. As the immediate remedy for its wrongs, I believe in the organization of workmen. The final remedy is combination of both these forces. My solution is Socialism, and I believe in the steps that lead to Socialism." The leaves continue to work.

NO LONGER DEFIANT.

Shaffer Sends a "Supplicating" Letter to Morgan Asking that Strikers be "Fairy Treated."

The most remarkable incident in the progress of the great strike of employees of the steel trust during this week is doubtless the appeal sent by Shaffer to J. Pierpont Morgan, which has been published in the daily press. A few days before its appearance the attitude of the strikers and their leader was one of unqualified defiance. It was given out by both sides that the fight was to be fought to a finish and that a long and bitter struggle was expected. But now, signs of weakening are distinctly observable, and not upon the part of the capitalists either. It is the laborers, through their spokesman, who show the first symptoms of wavering. Their demands have now become an appeal.

This letter of Shaffer's is significant of many things. It shows clearly enough that the workmen have chosen as representative, one who sees and recognizes distinctly the power which ownership and control of the means of production gives one man to exercise hundreds of thousands of others to his will, and who at the same time has not the slightest conception of depriving him of his power. Outside of the strike and the boycott, he can see no weapon which the working class can possibly use in the struggle. If they fail, and the tone of the letter practically involves this admission, nothing remains but an appeal, a cry for quarter. Mr. Shaffer is seemingly unwilling to take the word of the capitalist for it, that there is no sentiment in business.

After stating the very evident fact that Morgan is a capitalist and his opponents are laborers, earning their bread by the sweat of their brows, Mr. Shaffer inquires whether Mr. Morgan thinks that the laborers who have made him rich are likely to quit before the words spoken by Morgan from his easy chair. Morgan might justly retort that they would very likely do so, particularly after Shaffer's letter was made public.

Then Shaffer attempts to show Morgan that he is not using "sound business judgment" in opposing the demands of the strikers. If Morgan designed to reply to this assertion he might call Mr. Shaffer's attention to the story of the ambitious infant who undertook to teach his grandmother how to suck eggs.

The letter then sinks to an impotent whine. "Why are you not fair to us Mr. Morgan? Do you not owe the men who created your wealth some consideration? Why do you not treat our demands as a business man should?"

To this Morgan might truthfully reply, that he is treating his employees fairly, that he gives them all the consideration to which he thinks that they are entitled, and that if Mr. Shaffer imagines that it is the first duty of a "business man" to concede the demands of his employees, he is woefully mistaken as to "business" methods.

Shaffer then proceeds: "You speak of calling out the militia. Is not this a threat to send us back to our meagerly furnished homes before the specter of the militiamen's guns?" Morgan might admit that it was, and ask in turn whether there was anything strange or unusual about such a proceeding. He might add that the militia exists principally for this purpose, that they are mostly composed of workmen who voluntarily place themselves at the disposal of the class to which he (Morgan) belongs; why then should they not be used when their owners determine that they are needed?

Then Shaffer concludes with a protest that the workmen are orderly and law-abiding citizens and a last appeal to Morgan not to intimidate them, all of which J. Pierpont will doubtless consider a preliminary towards throwing up the sponge on the part of the strikers.

The latter have little reason indeed to feel encouraged over this exhibition of the folly, ignorance and cowardice of their chosen leader. Capitalist journals whose favorite attitude is to pose as "friends of the working class" may perhaps try to conceal its real significance, by calling attention to its pathetic and eloquence and denouncing in meaningless language, the unrelenting stubbornness of the "great men" to whom it is addressed. But they will fail to point out that Shaffer's appeal is merely a confession of impotence which can only assist the capitalist Pharaoh in hardening his heart, and on the other hand unnerve the laborers to a corresponding extent. It is also an admission that the writer is absolutely ignorant of the nature of economic questions, that he is unable to see that he is in reality furnishing ammunition as well as instruction to those whom he hopes to move by his pitiful and ridiculous whining.

In attempting to win concessions through the medium of a strike the workmen deliberately place his powers of physical endurance against the desire for profits on the part of the capitalists. He knows that hunger and privation on his part and that of his family, is the price he must pay in victory or defeat, and he deliberately accepts the situation. He is also quite as well aware of the fact that the entire power of the state, legislative, executive, and judicial, is exerted on the side of his opponents, though in fairness it should be stated that he does not know the reason why. But nevertheless the conditions under which such conflicts must be fought out, he is well acquainted with through bitter experience. But it is certainly no compliment to the intelligence and courage of the workmen who chose Shaffer as their spokesman if they permit him to represent them as pleading for mercy, (that cannot be granted), before the battle has fairly begun.

This cowardly and ridiculous letter should be repudiated. The workmen should at least have manhood enough to disavow the "leader" who would transform them from combatants to supplicants, after having stated to the world through the same individual their unalterable determination to fight the matter to a finish. They knew the weapons which their opponents would use, and knew also their own strength upon the chosen battleground. If this pusillanimous letter is permitted to pass unchallenged, the capitalist class will be no justified in regarding their wage slaves not only as fools but as cowards likewise. This latter charge has never before been leveled at the trades union movement, the history of its previous struggles with employers being one long record of heroic (though too often useless), self sacrifice. If Shaffer sees fit to play the baby act in thus beseeching the enemy for consideration, the strikers can only escape the scorn and contempt of their capitalist masters by making it plain that their "leader" in this case is speaking for himself alone.

UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.

Belgian Socialists are Determined to Secure the Franchise for all the Workers.

Universal suffrage, the rallying cry of the Belgian socialists, and of all who desire the progress and enlightenment of mankind, forces the elements opposing them to confess openly that they wish to keep the upward surging mass of humanity in darkness for the special interest of the ruling class. Nowhere in the world does the class struggle split society so clearly in two, as it now does in Belgium. Whoever wishes to learn where to look for the allies of capitalism and the friends of the proletariat, should now avail himself of this opportunity.

The proposition to submit the question of universal suffrage to a referendum was defeated in the Chamber by a very close vote. The overwhelming majority of the population is in favor of universal suffrage, and even the capitalist press admits that this measure cannot be delayed much longer. A very significant proof of the socialist strength is the intention of the clericals to bestow the suffrage on women in the openly avowed expectation that by so doing they will be able to stay on the backs of the people 10 years longer. The socialists, however, are well aware that the suffrage will be an education for women as it was for men.

Moreover, socialist propaganda has permeated the standing army and militia. The socialists, confident of success, are determined to resort to force, if nothing else will prevail. A strenuous agitation for universal suffrage is carried on. Socialists, liberals and their friends are parading the streets and making inflammatory speeches that are received with wild enthusiasm. The police are powerless.

A proclamation of the Socialist Party, addressed "To the People," concludes in these words: "True to its tactics, the Parti Ouvrier will use all legal and peaceful means to obtain universal suffrage. When these means are exhausted, we shall not hesitate to use force. WE MUST HAVE UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE!"

Important to Branches.

The Women's Auxiliary of the Socialist party has already paid into the fund for delegates' expenses to the Indianapolis convention the sum of $2.75. Five dollars of this sum was subscribed out of the Auxiliary fund, the balance being raised by individual subscriptions of the members. AND THERE IS MORE IN FIGHT!

Inasmuch as the majority of the members of the Auxiliary are also affiliated with their respective ward clubs, and are there bearing their proportionate share of all financial obligations, we think this is a pretty good record. If every branch in the city will do but half as well as these ladies have done, our delegates will not have to count railroad tickets in order to attend the convention. In fact, they would be able to charter a palace car and put up at the best hotels.

Surely the branches will not suffer themselves to be outdone by "the women folks," but will send in such a response to the appeal for the delegates as will gladden the heart of every Socialist in the party.

Local Party Progress.

Reports of Organizers of the South, West and 4th District Divisions, on public meetings, party press, financial returns, and general agitation for the past week. A record of growing activity.

SOUTH SIDE.

South Side organizers are requested to meet at the house of Organizer G. Anderson, 713 E. Emerald avenue, on Sunday, July 28th at 9 a. m. Important business to be transacted. Don't fail to attend.

The Fife and Drum Corps is progressing finely. The children have a record now of 44 Call cards and 32 copies of the Pocket Library of Socialism sold. Esperance Saunders heads the list with 11 Call cards and 1 Pocket Library, but Nathan Berlyn is a close second, with 10 Pocket Libraries and 4 Call cards. Let us see who will be at the head of the list next week.

Quite a number of the children were at the thirty-third and Halsted meeting town and report good success. Others Saturday evening, and were of great service taking collections, etc. Some attend the State street meetings down were at Cottage Grove and Sixtieth street, but were disappointed in finding no meeting.

They meet for practice at the School of Music at the corner of Englewood avenue and Normal avenue twice a week, Monday and Friday at 1 p. m. Mr. Carlisle, the principal, has given the use of a room as his contribution to the cause of socialism. The drummers are getting along finely and will soon be ready for those drums we asked for last week. Comrade Forberg has offered the use of one drum. Who will be the next to make a similar offer? The fifeers all have their fife, and are working industriously at them. Two new members were added this week, Stella Nelson and Henry Kriva. Let us have more volunteers. Send your names on a postal to C. F. Lewis, 6851 Union avenue.

NORTH SIDE.

The Thursday evening meetings at Washington Square are a complete success. Over three hundred people listened attentively to Comrade A. M. Simons deliver a one-hour address, after which 100 Calls were sold and many questions answered. A good collection was taken.

The fife meeting at Drury and Racine avenue was held. Comrades Zimmermann and Sand addressed over 100 people. 50 Calls were sold. A collection was taken. Several subscriptions for the Call were taken. A new member was secured.

Wednesday a very good meeting was held at Oak and Sedgwick streets. Comrades Morris, Bauer and Sand. Fifty Calls were got rid of and a collection was taken.

Comrade Chas. Sand is a new speaker. This was his third time on the "box," and each time he has improved. In this he will hold the box down with anybody.

Comrade Bauer is also doing well. He has on three occasions spoken very well for about thirty minutes. He will improve.

A few more speakers are needed. Who is next?

Sunday at Center and North Clark a splendid meeting was held. Comrade Zimmermann again showed he was able to hold a crowd. Comrade Sand followed. A good collection was taken. Calls were sold out completely, and more could be gotten rid of if they were on hand. Two subs for The Call were taken.

Sunday evening at Sheffield and Wrightwood a moving good meeting was held. Comrades Bauer and Zimmermann again held the box down, as the speaker failed to show up. A good collection was taken, and 100 calls distributed.

On Tuesday at the corner of North Avenue and Clark street Comrades Kaplan, Zimmermann and Sand spoke to over one hundred and fifty persons, who listened attentively. Calls were distributed and the supply completely exhausted. In the future a larger supply will be on hand. A good collection was taken. Comrade Zimmermann is improving in his speaking, and the comrades on the North Side have in him a able speaker.

The comrades in the North Division should turn out to their agitation meetings in greater numbers. We need your help to bustle The Call, gather in the collection, and sell Workers' Call subscription cards.

A number of new speakers will be on the stand in a few weeks. We hope courage is all you need.

WEST SIDE.

There will be a general meeting of party members of the West Side Division at the Socialist Temple, Tuesday, August 6th, to hear the report of the delegates to the Indianapolis convention.

A debate will take place Sunday night, July 29, at the Socialist Temple, between M. Kaplan and John R. Peppin, on the "Tactics of the Socialist Party and the Socialist Labor Party." Kaplan defending the Socialist Party position and Peppin the De Leon side. This is the outcome of a challenge issued to Comrade Kaplan by a State of Peppin last Sunday night at State and Congress streets. Everybody should come.

We have now obtained a lease on the Temple and are assured of possession for a year.

The Ladies' Auxiliary is making arrangements for a reception and entertainment to be accorded the delegates to the convention on their return from Indianapolis, on the night of August 10. A fine program will be provided, and probably five or ten minute speeches by each of the delegates. Refreshments will be served. Admission free. As the ladies propose to give a number of entertainments in the future they are going to install a piano, as many vocalists who otherwise would be glad to appear will not do so without a piano accompaniment. We merely make this intimation so that the comrades may look forward with pleasurable anticipations to the presence of prima donnas and operatic stars of the first magnitude before Socialist audiences at the Temple on future occasions.

The Sunday evening meetings at the Temple will hereafter be advertised in the Daily News.

SOCIALIST BRICKLAYERS CLUB.

Meeting called to order at 8 p. m., Comrade Johnson in the chair. Minutes of previous meeting approved as read.

Comrade Hill announced that a special meeting had been called by the Union to consider revision of the by-laws on July 23rd, said meeting being in conflict with motion passed July 9th, via that business be expedited on July 23rd to permit socialist speaker to address the Union. Moved that S. B. E. C. insist on their prior right to that meeting, and endeavor to defer consideration of by-laws until July 30th. On motion it was ordered that we organize an S. B. E. C. in every bricklayers union in the United States and Canada. Comrade Catrell suggested that we write a letter showing need of class conscious political action, to the secretary of every local of the U. O. of A. S. B. M., secretaries to read the letter before the respective unions, also to send with each letter a bundle-order of the Workers' Call for distribution and further to notify the local of the Socialist Party in proximity to the union to use their utmost endeavors to organize an S. B. E. C. so that at the next international convention of the Bricklayers and Stone Masons, as many socialist delegates shall be present as possible.

On motion it was ordered that secretary write a sample letter and submit it to S. B. E. C. next meeting. Report of Committee. Comrade Catrell reported inability to see president Lillian.

Comrade Prince reported progress on book-keeping. Received for Buh. cards $6.00. For picnic tickets $1.00. Collections $1.50. Two new members admitted. At the close of our business meeting Comrade Berlyn, who was present, was invited to speak. As he stepped to the platform we noticed he had a box of cigars, and quick as a wink every one made a motion in the direction of their pockets. Tabbed it—and $2.75 and 10 cigars changed hands. Then sitting back to our chairs with a socialist 10 cent cigar between our teeth, and with countenance expressive of "solid comfort," we listened to a most interesting and interesting speech. Those members who were so unfortunate as to be absent have our sincere sympathy. Comrade Berlyn is liable to call any meeting night, so come early and avoid the rush.

Socialism and Immediate Demands.

By Henry Stodolka.
From The Worker.

Public Ownership.—No measure contained among the "immediate demands" commends itself more to the good will of the Socialists than the demand of public ownership of public franchises. It cannot be expected that all public franchises should be municipalized at once, hence stress is made on the municipalization of some railways. Now it is contended by those who desire that the Social Democratic Party make a special issue and campaign for the municipalization of the railways that the realization of this measure would—1. Through the improvement of the condition of the railway workers ameliorate the condition of the working class generally. 2. Be a concrete example of public ownership and make Socialism popular. All of which will, no doubt, be brought about by the municipalization of railways provided the revolutionary attitude of the working class as represented in a revolutionary Socialist party forces into the realization of this measure a truly progressive spirit. We have reason as well as precedent to prove that otherwise the municipalization of railways may constitute a reactionary measure wrought with danger for Socialism.

Should the Socialist party give its unreserved approval to the municipalization of railways, without making distinction of reserve, it will lose the right to protest against the corruption and speculation which must necessarily ensue upon the realization of any Socialistic measure within the present system. For our opponents will contend, as they do now, that official corruption is the inherent characteristic and unavoidable concomitant of all Socialistic measures, and that Socialism may be judged accordingly. "If you did not know," they will tell us, "that corruption must ensue upon the realization of your measure, then the events prove that you were ignorant; if you did not know they prove that you are bad public advisers."

But a far more formidable danger than official corruption lies in the entanglement of the railway workers, ensue upon the municipalization of railways, from the working class. It is natural that the workers on the railways are much susceptible to the Socialistic arguments and present a promising field for Socialist propaganda. Should the chief aim and object of the Socialist party—the overthrow of capitalism, the abolition of wage slavery and the establishing of a Socialist commonwealth—be relegated to the rear, or be used as rhetorical phrases on solemn occasions only; should the propaganda of the Socialist party resolve itself chiefly to dabbling in municipal ownership; should the character of our propaganda become "practical," "evolutionary," "constructive," and a whole lot of other abused words of supposedly smooth and "peaceful" import; then the state of mind of those whom such propaganda will convert to Socialism will also be of the eminently "practical," "evolutionary," "constructive" and "contented with a thing at a time" turn, and when we speak of the revolutionary character of the party and the militant attitude of the working class, it is the general state of mind of the workingmen that is meant. It needs no further proof that such propaganda of the "constructive," the cult of the "practical," is not calculated to awaken in the workingman the dormant class-consciousness to such a clearness of perception that he should continue to stand valiantly by the interests of his class, though his individual or trade interests are so more involved. No; such Socialists of the truly constructive type of undying devotion to the interests of working class, are not made by propaganda of the "practical." The result of such propaganda would be to create all around indolent content. The Socialists, or the "practicals" among them, would plume themselves upon the municipalization of railways as so much Socialism in case. The railway workers would feel contented that they are the chosen few, privileged to live in a Socialist world of their own, not to be confounded with the world of misery wherein the working class abides. Under such circumstances, the railway workers will be eliminated as a factor on the side of the working class in its struggle with the capitalist class. We have a striking example in the latter carriers. The example proves that the workers of the municipal railways will be used by the capitalist class in order to combat the working class and Socialism. For experience has taught the Socialists that those sections of society that have, or think they have, an interest in the conservation of the standing regime will not only not lend themselves to its overthrow, but will oppose such overthrow. Certainly in this case the overthrow of the regime of capitalism would not jeopardize the condition of the railway workers. But the example of the latter carriers proves amply that to understand this plain proposition requires a higher conception of class interests than a propaganda of "practical" Socialism is likely to lead to the workingmen. These cases later carriers trouble in sheer terror at the thought that the powers that be may suspect them of sympathy with the working class. Not only have they declined to join G. I. workingmen of New York in celebrating the May Day, but have even refused to send their brass band to the eight-hour May Day parade in New York. The "postoffice" is used by many Socialist speakers as an illustration of a Socialist institution, but it is well to reflect that this Socialist institution has deprived the working class of the intelligent co-operation of the latter carriers, and has lent them to the support of the exploiters. If the same system of extending Socialist institutions is pursued, private explanation may find itself all the more comfortably entrenched behind the bulwark of such institutions, and Socialism will find the most formidable foe in the ranks of these institutions. They will fill the ranks of the millions deserted by the workingmen and will in other ways lend themselves as instruments of oppression. Hence a mere propaganda of "practical" Socialism, a campaign of "immediate demands" will not only retard the realization of these demands, but upon realization will produce such a spectacle of bastard Socialism, which even the punitive parent will only be loath to disown. On the other hand, the propaganda of revolutionary and class-conscious Socialism that lays no stress on ameliorative measures, but demands the unconditional surrender of the capitalist class, will not only hasten the realization of such measures, but will result in a proud spirit of class-consciousness prevalent in the working class, that will preclude the possibility of any of its advance sections lending itself as an instrument of oppression, and in the belligerent attitude of the Socialist party that will not permit the capitalist class to tamper with the realization of the ameliorative measures.

Shorter Hours.—As there is no measure which is of such vital importance to the working class, so in these times which afford so many loopholes through which the capitalists can defeat, at least in a large part, the object of shorter hours—the intended respite for the workingman. The chief object of the capitalist lies not in long hours for his laborer, but in securing from him the largest amount of labor power. Should it be proven to him that he will be in a position to compensate himself for the shortening of the labor, he will be willing to join a philanthropic shorter hours league, and to vote for a platform containing such immediate demand. It may be that the motorman on the Broadway car works fifteen hours than the driver of the former Broadway horse line, but if the amount of energy spent by each driver a day could be compared, it would be proven that the motorman requires an appallingly greater amount of energy for his day's work than the former driver required for his. It would be instructive to compare the mortality among the motorman with that of the former drivers. It may not be well known that the motorman does not enjoy a long life, though it is well known that he does not enjoy his short one. It just happened that in the course of my perusal of the daily paper, after the above was written, I came across the following striking sub-editorial in the New York "Times" of July 11, 1901:

"Attention is called by one of the English trade papers to a new and peculiar trouble among the cotton operatives in Lancashire, a result of the shorter working day which the labor unions of the district have succeeded in establishing. A system of overdriving is said to be growing up, and according to the reports of the labor leaders it is fast becoming intolerable. The foremen, or 'overlookers,' receive a percentage on the earnings of the weavers under their control, and it is asserted that these overlookers go around the mills with a slate to note what each weaver has earned, and put in a conspicuous place on pay day the amount each operative has earned, on the boards. Opposite the names of those earning under the average, it is stated, is a cross in red ink or a ring around the amount earned in place, this being a warning that unless the average is kept up the weaver will lose his or her place. It is affirmed that this driving system has involved such a strain as to shake the lives of many factory workers miserable, and various meetings have been held, at which the practice has been condemned, and a strike at the mills where it prevails is talked of. The employers assert that the complaints are exaggerated. They say that the 'speeding' of machinery has been the inevitable outcome of the reduction of the hours of labor, and that competition compels them to secure weight of production in a given time. Somewhat similar complaints can be heard in this country by those who will question our skilled mechanics. A carpenter, for instance, said, the other day, that the supervision of the men in his trade is now vastly more rigorous than it used to be, and any relaxation of activity in working hours is instantly noticed and reprehended by the boss, who makes every effort to prevent the shortening of the day from increasing the expenses of production. As a consequence the added hours of leisure are gained at the cost of a weariness equal to, if not greater than, that which followed the long day's work of other times. These, of course, are effects to be expected in a period of transition, and may pass away in time, BUT THEY HAVE MADE SOME MECHANICAL DOUBT IF THE CHANGE FOR WHICH THEY HAVE FOUGHT SO HARD AND LONG IS YET A REAL ADVANTAGE TO THEM."

It speaks volumes for the progressive spirit of our "practicals" that it devolves on the New York "Times" to point out to them that one of their most important measures of amelioration secures no practical relief to the workingman, except so much of it as they moved in obtaining through their powers of resistance and spirit of aggressiveness.

But the increased intensity of labor is not the only way in which new burdens are imposed on the working class so as to compensate the capitalist class for the loss which it would have otherwise sustained through the shortening of the labor day, and which nullify the object of the shorter day—the conservation of the energy of the workingman. The growth of population and the introduction of newer machinery make the conditions of modern production ever more complex and impose ever new burdens on production. There are more than one way in which the capitalist manages to shift the burden on the workingman. When the workingman was living near the factory he required only a few minutes for going to and coming from work. But with the congregation of the industrial districts, and proportionate increase in rent, the workingman is forced to the suburbs situated at the great distance from his place of work. The result is that the going to and coming from work consumes nearly all of that time which may remain to the workingman from his work and sleep. A workingman of any large city will inform you that this loss of time is a problem of no small moment to him. It would be worse than mockery to consider such time as his own, and devoted to rest, as he has to travel in overcrowded cars that are suffocating in the summer and calculated to give rheumatism in the winter. Such are the hardships of reaching work and home for a worker residing in the suburbs that great numbers of workingmen prefer residence in overcrowded districts with all its concomitants of lack of air and light. No modern economist will contend that the modern workingman who works shorter hours parts, therefore, with less energy in order to secure his subsistence and it is this energy which is labor power, that the capitalist is after and not merely labor time.

Hence the propaganda of "practical" Socialism as expressed in a shorter hours "immediate demand" will not only retard the realization of such shorter hours, but by relaxing the defensive and aggressive powers of the workingman, will make him more tractable for a screwing up of the intensity of his labor and also open many leaks in the hours presumably devoted to the rest through which the capitalist may suck up additional labor power out of such hours. On the other hand a consciousness of its own powers in the working class cultivated by a revolutionary propaganda, that demands not an amelioration of the conditions of exploitation, but the abolition of such conditions, will not hasten the realization of shorter hours, but will be able to resist any attempt of the capitalist to compensate himself in any other way on account of the working class.

Parks, Playgrounds, Etc.—To no measure of amelioration are the old malfeas of both sexes as ready to give their support as to the extension of the area of parks and playgrounds. It tickles the vanity of the reforming fraternity to have their "goodness" perpetuated in such concrete evidence as parks and playgrounds. There is no doubt that it is a blessing, but being a capitalist blessing it bears on its brow the curse of Cain. The extension of park and playground area, though not the sole cause, nevertheless greatly contributes to testify one of the unmitigated curses that beset the workingman—the overcrowding of the dwelling area. During the last ten years I was a dweller of the tenements of the most unspeakable tenement district in the world. I saw old, rickety but roomy ramshackles give place to rickety tenements with "modern improvements," the improvement consisting in that the inside space was all walled up into closets, I saw these tenements teeming with families of laborers only. I saw parks introduced, and I saw the size of the closet rooms palpably dwindling in area. As the park area increases the dwelling area for laborer decreases. For the introduction of parks means increase in value of adjoining real estate. Had the landlords collected the additional increment of value by charging a higher rental only it would have constituted a smaller calamity. But aware of the rent-paying limitations of the workingmen, they continued subdividing the rooms into closets, closets into cells, cells that are nothing but families of workingmen, whose misery during the hot spell may be held as asserted not to have been palliated anywhere in the world. "Ah," exclaims the "practical" Socialist, "there is where building laws are necessary. Let us put them into our 'immediate demands'." Not necessary, my opportunistic friend; some such building laws were passed years ago, but the Tenement House Commission reported recently that a ridiculously insignificant per cent of the tenements built under these laws conformed to them. I think it was less than 10 per cent. What argument remains for the "practical" Socialist? Will he demand that Socialists be entrusted with the execution of these laws, which means with the powers of government? Now, should all the measures which he so ardently advocates as bearing from the outset his stamp of bona fide Socialism meet the fate of the building laws, Socialism will have fallen into such discredit and he will have lost so much of the confidence of his constituency, that he will find the moment hardly opportune for asking them to make a revolution in order to see how he would enforce the building laws. For entrusting the Socialists with the powers of government always the greatest revolution in the history of mankind. Now people are not likely to make this revolution for cleaner streets or better building laws merely. My "practical" friend will notice that during revolutions "practical" measures and "practical" men are relegated to the rear and principles and persons whom he would denounce as visionaries and utopians, but who really are the most practical men of their age, who see only so much further ahead than the rest of the race step to the front. They parley not with the evil that is rotten with time nor try they to ameliorate it; but they cut out its very heart, so that its friends in the after generations may weep over the rotten corpse, but the evil is dead. To the further embarrassment of the "practical" Socialist will be added the reproaches of the reformers, who will very logically argue that since he declared the "immediate demands" to be his chief object in Socialism, his standing aloof from them only aids the enemies of Socialism, and retards its specific realization.

We again come to the conclusion that the "practical" Socialist who regards the part of the platform declaring for the overthrow of the capitalist system and the establishing of the Socialist society as utopian pharisaism, and the "immediate demands" as containing the only Socialism worth talking about, may call himself a Socialist if he prefers so—we would not favor a law prohibiting him to do so—but his place is not in the ranks of the Socialist party. The reform parties will amply meet his aspirations.

A revolutionary Socialist who declares at the outset that the only way of mending the capitalist system is ending it, who declares that the Socialist party will end it at the first favorable opportunity and who pledges in the meanwhile to fight for the interest of the working class, this Socialist will not find himself the victim of his own arguments, the prey to contradictions and embarrassment. Besides that the very militant attitude of the Socialist party will be conducive towards securing greater benefits to the working class from the realization of measures of amelioration and giving it the ground for claiming the credit for such benefits. It will be in position, in case of the failure of these measures as they must in part, owing to capitalist perversion, to ruberize simply its warning to the working class not to repose too sanguine hopes in any measure of amelioration of their conditions while they leave the capitalist system intact; that true and permanent amelioration of their conditions can come only with abolition of wage slavery.

The length to which this article has grown compels me to put a period to further discussion of the problem. At some future time I will endeavor to prove the following two propositions:

1. That the tactics advocated by revolutionary Socialists are not only based on sound scientific Socialism, but constitute the best method for securing the largest Socialist vote and, what is of vastly greater importance, such vote once obtained will stay with the Socialist party; whereas the method pursued by our "practicals" is not only unsound in science, but such vote will be subject to be subtracted and dissipated by every reform side show.

2. That present society is honeycombed with socialist tendencies in true. But if historical precedents go for anything at all, the final overthrow of the capitalist state and the establishing of the Socialist society will be not an evolutionary-fatalistic process as the "practicals" contend, but of revolutionary-conscious act or series of acts, and to be an instrument of this revolution constitutes the chief historical function of a Socialist party.

BOOK REVIEW.

COLLECTIVISM AND INDUSTRIAL EVOLUTION. By Emil Vandervelde. Translated from the French by Chas. H. Kerr. Published by Chas. H. Kerr & Co., 54 Fifth Ave., Chicago. Paper 15 cents, cloth 30 cents.

Here we have at last what we have so often missed in our propaganda work: a concise and up-to-date summary of the whole socialist philosophy, in such clear language that even the untrained thinker can easily grasp and impart to others the important truths of economic evolution. Not only is this the book that you want to recommend to your neighbor who does not know what socialism means, but it is also excellent reading for advanced students, who will find new inspiration and fresh strength in the straightforward and logical arguments of Comrade Vandervelde.

In the first part, CAPITALIST CONCENTRATION, the author outlines how the decadence of personal property among peasant proprietors, artisans and small retailers is the natural corollary of the progress of capitalist property from agriculture, mines, forests to corporations and trusts. Chapter III of this part, "Objections," handles in a masterly style the seemingly profound, but in reality superficial, objections of bourgeois economists to the collectivist philosophy.

In the second part, THE SOCIALIZATION OF THE MEANS OF PRODUCTION AND EXCHANGE, we find the proofs of the advantages of social property and the administration of things over the old regime of rent, profit and interest upheld by the coercive government of the class state. The means of realizing the transition from capitalism to collectivism are thoroughly discussed. In conclusion, the old showmen objections, that there will be no individual incentive, liberty and high ideals under socialism are plucked to pieces. The book closes with the triumphant cry: ALL MUST GIVE WAY TO SOCIALISM!

The translation carefully avoids all heavy and foreign expressions and, therefore, makes easy and smooth reading, an advantage which few books of this class possess.

MARRIAGE RELATIONS.

Translated from Frederick Engels' "Origin of the Family".

The full freedom of marriage can become general only after all minor economic considerations, that still exert such a powerful influence on the choice of a mate for life, have been removed by the abolition of capitalist production and of the property relations created by it. Then no other motive will remain but mutual fondness.

Since sexlove is exclusive by its very nature—although this exclusiveness is at present realized for women alone—marriage founded on sexlove must be monogamous. Marriage is perfectly right in regarding the progress from group marriage to monogamy mainly as the work of women. Only the advance from the pairing family to monogamy must be charged to the account of men. This advance implied, historically, a deterioration in the position of women and a greater opportunity for men to be faithful. Remove the economic considerations that now force women to submit to the customary disloyalty of men, and you will place women on an equal footing with men. All present experience proves that this will tend much more strongly to make men truly monogamous, than to make women polyandrous.

However, these peculiarities that were stamped upon the face of monogamy by its rise through property relations will decidedly vanish, namely the supremacy of man and the indissolubility of marriage. The supremacy of man in marriage is simply the consequence of his economic superiority and will fall with the abolition of the latter. The indissolubility of marriage is partly the consequence of economic conditions, under which monogamy arose, partly tradition from the time where the connection between this economic situation and monogamy, not yet clearly understood, was carried to extremes by religion. To-day, it has been perforated a thousand times. IF MARRIAGE FOUNDED ON LOVE IS ALONE MORAL, THEN IT FOLLOWS, THAT MARRIAGE IS MORAL ONLY AS LONG AS LOVE LASTS. The duration of an attack of individual sexlove varies considerably according to individual disposition, especially in men. A positive cessation of fondness or its replacement by a new passionate love makes a separation a blessing for both parties and for society. But humanity will be spared the useless wading through the mire of a divorce case.

What we may anticipate about the adjustment of sexual relations after the impending downfall of capitalist production is mainly of a negative nature and mostly confined to elements that will disappear. But what will be added? That will be decided after a new generation has come to maturity, a race of men who never in their lives have had any occasion for buying with money or other economic means of power the surrender of a woman; a race of women who have never had any occasion for surrendering to any man for any other reason but love, or for refusing to surrender to their lover from fear of economic consequences. Once such people are in the world, they will not give a moment's thought to what we to-day believe should be their course. They will follow their own practice and fashion their own public opinion about the individual practice of every person—only this and nothing more.

BELGIAN LECTURER COMING.

Prominent Belgian Comrade Will Tour the United States.

Professor Emile Vinck will arrive in New York about the first of September with the purpose of making a lecture tour across the country as far west as arrangements can be made. Professor Vinck is a member of the faculty of the "New University" in Brussels, the most important socialist educational institution in the world. He is also the secretary of the Federation of Socialist Municipal Councilors of Belgium, and is without doubt the greatest living authority on socialist activity in municipalities. He speaks either French, English or German with equal ease, and is a fluent and eloquent speaker. He has made several short lecture tours throughout England, and the English comrades and the press agree in praising him as an instructive, enthusiastic speaker. We can say of our personal knowledge that there are few men in the socialist movement today who can speak in a more authoritative and interesting manner than Comrade Vinck. All that he asks is his expenses, including entertainment and railroad fare from the preceding town. He will certainly come as far west as Chicago, and as much farther as arrangements can be readily made. Until the party reorganization is completed and the proper officials elected to take charge of his tour, all arrangements can be made through the International Socialist Review. Any town where there is to be a municipal election should not miss this opportunity. Professor Vinck is accustomed to out-door propaganda in Belgium, and writes us that he is as willing to speak out of doors as in Socialist papers please copy.

Local Reports.

NORTH SIDE.

The Wednesday evening meeting at Oak and Franklin Streets was a complete success, about one hundred persons listened to the speakers. Seventy-five Calls were sold and a collection was taken.

Thursday evening meeting at Washington Square. Three hundred persons listened to Comrade Herlyn making a splendid address. One hundred Calls were distributed and a collection of one dollar and fifty cents was taken.

Friday evening the meeting at corner Irving and Broadway was addressed by Comrade Chas. Sand. A collection was taken and fifty Calls distributed. Two new members were secured.

Sunday at 4.30 p. m. the meeting at Center and N. Clark failed. The cable system broke down and the repairs working in that neighborhood with horses and teams caused such a noise and turmoil no one could listen so we were forced to adjourn until next Sunday.

The Sunday night meeting at Wrightwood and Sheffield was not held on account of the weather.

Tuesday evening a good crowd listened to Comrades Morris and Baur speaking at the corner of North Ave. and North Clark. A collection was taken and Calls distributed. Two subscriptions for the Call were taken.

Comrades in this division are notified that stamps can be bought from Secretary of division.

The General Committee meets next Saturday evening, Aug. 3rd, at Schiller Assembly Hall, 3rd floor, 8 p. m. Delegates should be present.

M. H. TAFT,
Gen. Sec'y.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Chicago, July 28th, 1901.

Editor Workers' Call:—Among the important items of business before the 15th Ward Branch business meeting, Friday evening, July 19, was a resolution to memorialize the Executive Committee to provide two plenaries every year, one for the north side and northern part of the west side, and the other for the south side and southern part of the west side. Enthusiastic appreciation was voiced for the late picnic, but it was thought best to shelve the proposition to divide the gathering as that those living at remote distances would be saved trouble and expense of a long trip.

A committee was appointed to consider the general welfare of the organization and to report at the Branch meetings from time to time plans and ideas for more efficient propaganda work. The committee was instructed to solicit opinions of other comrades, through the Workers' Call, of how best to promote Socialism and the work of the Ward organizations.

Information or suggestions may be sent to the Call or sent by mail to chairman of the committee, Comrade Wilnot L. Woodcock, 737 North Fairfield Avenue.

Though the weather on the night of last meeting was torrid, thirteen comrades were present at the home of Comrade Kellom. Here they being taken to provide a permanent home for the Branch. The battle cry is:

"A Thousand Socialist Votes in the Fifteenth Ward by 1891!"

Capitalist Literature.

The Associated Press does not waste cable tolls in telegraphing foreign matter of purely local interest to the United States and it is clear that the Bernstein revival is intended to sow seeds of discord not alone among the socialists of Germany, but of the United States as well.

This anti-socialist tone in the foreign dispatches may naturally be expected to characterize more and more the press utterances in the United States as the evidences of the socialist movement's growth become more apparent. Bearing in mind the intimate relation between newspaper and official and the fact that the official is a part of that state, which is the instrument of the capitalist class, it is not difficult to see how the alarm of the capitalists will be communicated to the press. Socialists cannot for long realize that they will not receive any aid from the press as it exists at present, and this fact cannot be too strongly emphasized. In some socialist quarters there has been a disposition to put some store by "socialistic" utterances in certain papers, but it is worse than folly to expect any permanent and unequivocal championship of the working class cause from this section of the press which entices the workers only to betray them. The newspapers are mere parasites of the capitalist order, basking in the capitalist order is strong and weak as that order is weak, and they may be depended on not to assist in killing the goose which lays for them the golden egg. While editorial writers are allowed wide discretion in their discussions, the counting room idea of "free press" is the idea that prevails when there is a conflict between counting room and editorial room. Let the counting room see the revenue decreasing as a result of editorial assaults on "business interests" and those assaults will cease instantly. If the editorial writers cannot harmonize their opinions with counting room opinions other editorial writers will not be so stiff-necked will be found. The only hope of an adequate representation of the socialist movement in the field of journalism is the establishment of a socialist press, frankly revolutionary, giving daily the news of the working-class movement in all its phases, exposing the shame and strategies of the enemy, exchanging blow for blow and standing ever as the unapproachable unfettered champion of an industrial democracy, the Co-operative Commonwealth.

—by—
EUGENE SUE,

PREFACE.

Eugene Sue wrote in French a monumental work: "The Mysteries of the People" or "History of a Proletarian Family." It is a "work of fiction," yet it is the best universal history extant; better than any work, avowedly on history, it graphically traces the "social features of the several systems of class-rule as they have succeeded each other from epoch to epoch, together with the nature of the struggle between the contending classes. The "Law," "Order," "Patriotism," "Religion," etc., etc., that each successive tyrant class, despite its change of form, hysterically sought refuge in to justify its criminal existence whenever threatened; the varying economic causes of the oppression of the toilers; the mistakes incurred by these in their struggles for redress; the varying fortunes of the conflict; all these social dramas are therein reproduced in a majestic series of "historic novels," covering leading and successive episodes in the history of the race.

The work here published in English garb is one of these historic novels. It is chosen because of its singular fitness to modern times in one important respect:—the unity of action of the oppressors, despite hostile politico-material interests and plashing religious views; the hyper-activity that

The ratification of the union of Socialist forces in the United States, was declared at Indianapolis on Thursday, August 1st, 1901, when the chairman's great fall for the last time in announcing that having completed its work, "this convention is now adjourned." With one final cheer the hundred and thirty odd delegates, who had for the preceding four days wrought so laboriously faithfully and successfully in carrying out the mandate of their constituents, rose from their seats, fled out of the hall, and a few hours later were speeding by rail. North, South, East and West, with the feeling that the jealousies, recriminations, and misunderstandings of the past had been removed, that a new era had arisen in the history of socialism and that henceforth the struggle against capitalism would be carried on throughout the land by an organized, harmonious party working for one common object and standing upon a common platform. They looked upon their work and saw that it was good. SOCIALIST UNITY had been realized.

General results.
With the general results of the convention, the readers of the Call are no doubt already familiar. The last issue contained the information that unity was practically certain, though not formally ratified as described above, that the name "SOCIALIST PARTY" had been chosen as the designation of the united forces, together with a notice of the discussion on the so called "immediate demands" and the position taken by the delegates thereon. It only remains to add that St. Louis was selected as the seat of the National Committee, and that Comrade Leon Greenbaum of the same city was elected National Secretary by acclamation, to complete the outline of the general results of the Convention.

Synopsis of Proceedings.
A brief synopsis of the daily proceedings of this body is all that can possibly be given in these columns, concluding with some general remarks and observations suggested by the composition and action of this representative body of socialists. Although a full stenographic report has been secured by the Chicago comrades in addition to the official stenographic report it is obviously impossible to present within the space limits of the Workers' Call, even a condensation of the mass of matter secured by the stenographers. This will be doubt eventually materialize in pamphlet form. Meanwhile the best that can possibly be given here is a brief notice of the most important proceedings at each day.

Capitalist Press Talebards.
With the preliminary work of the convention before it settling into permanent form, our readers are already familiar. The temporary chairman, Dr. Helton, was made permanent chairman for the remainder of the day, the report of the committee on credentials was read, of which the general results were given in last week's issue. Report of committee on rules dealing with limitation of speeches, roll calls, method of voting, etc., was made, times of sitting and recess ruled upon, provision made for special sessions, committees elected on Platform, Constitution and Resolutions, and other preliminaries were settled on the first day of the Convention. On Tuesday, owing to the fact that one of the local capitalist papers had falsely alleged the hostility of the Convention to Eugene V. Debs, late Presidential candidate of the S. D. P., it was ordered that a telegram assuring Comrade Debs of the warmest and cordial welcome of the Convention be sent. This was unanimously agreed to, and in addition a motion regarding the movement towards the "Bitter" question, was passed without a dissenting voice. It should have been previously stated that Comrade James Carey of Haverhill, Mass., was elected chairman for this day.

Reports of National Secretaries.
The National Secretaries of the Chicago and Springfield Boards made their reports of finances, membership, etc., showing the general standing of the respective divisions of the S. D. P. The Chicago Board had secured 1234 votes against the Debs.

Committee on Resolutions.
The report of the Committee on Resolutions was then heard. Resolutions on the attitude of the Convention towards Trade Unions, and on the negro question were referred back to the committee for further consideration. One concerning grievances and opinions of members to be expressed freely through the party press, was tabled, while another from the local Barbers' Union requesting support and endorsement was passed.

Next came the report on platform, and the minority report recommending that "immediate demands" be stricken from the party platform. Before the discussion commenced, Comrade Vahlreich, representing the Karl Marx Club of Chicago, read an excellent paper in English, dealing with the possibility of Socialist unity mainly from the standpoint of the question about to be discussed. It was received with hearty applause.

"Immediate Demands."
The important question of "immediate demands" was warmly opened, although the limits of good order and courtesy were never overstepped. Amongst those who spoke in favor of the minority report were Delegates Simons, Wilshire, Murphy, Clements, and Mcweeney, while on the other side, Haehn, Hillquit, Berger, Hartman, Silverman and Goebel were the most exhaustive speakers. As it was evident that the matter could not be settled in the prescribed limits of this day, a special 3 o'clock session was passed. Comrade Herron read and moved a substitute amending the majority report on immediate demands so as to clearly express the distinction between capitalist and socialist interpretations of these demands, and expressing the distinct class interests of the worker in each one of them. This substitute was accepted. More discussion then ensued, Delegates Klenke, Ryan and Hayes declaring opposition to immediate demands as amended. The time limit of the special session expired, leaving the matter still open, several delegates insisting on their determination to be heard on the question.

On Wednesday morning with Max Hayes of Cleveland as chairman, the debate continued. Delegates Spring, Carey, Costly, Wanhope, Hedrick and Hamilton speaking against the demands. It being evident, however, that the insistence upon their abolition might possibly defeat the main object of the assembly, names of delegates were asked for withdrawal of opposition, and many were so given. When the vote was finally taken it was announced that the majority report on "immediate demands" as amended, was carried by a roll call majority of 421, showing that 1334 votes had been cast for their retention and 122 against. The names of the Chicago delegates who voted upon this question and the position taken by them, have been published in the preceding issue of this paper.

Platform discussed.
The report of the Committee on Platform was then taken up by paragraphs. The entire platform was adopted with several slight amendments which in the opinion of the Convention more clearly expressed its meaning. The "farmers' plank," however, was stricken out and finally referred to a Special Committee on Resolutions, not however before a long and exhaustive discussion had taken place on the question in which Delegates Simons, Haehn, Hillquit, Spring, Mills, Berger, Carey, Origo, Silverman, Hartman and Gladman were the principal speakers. It should have been stated that "immediate demand" No. 2, referring to the same subject, was stricken out and referred to the special committee on Resolutions.

As a conclusion to the demands, a clause, warning the working class against fraudulent limitations designed to perpetuate capitalism, was carried after an animated discussion. The platform as a whole was then adopted.

Name Socialist Party adopted.
Then came the report of the Committee on Constitution, the name of the party being the first matter to be decided. As it was growing late a motion for a special session from 3 P. M. was carried. Finally the name SOCIALIST PARTY was adopted by a vote of 75 to 13. The minority demanded a roll call which showed 1234 votes against the Debs.

ceeded for a short time and then the secretaries were instructed to prepare a copy of the Constitution so far as it had been adopted, the Convention turning its attention to the meantime to the resolutions. A resolution of sympathy with the striking steel workers was unanimously adopted and ordered telegraphed.

A resolution defining the attitude of Socialists towards the Trades Unions was adopted.
A resolution debaring members of the party from accepting appointive positions from the hands of the capitalist class was referred to the Committee on Constitution. A resolution debaring party members from joining the state militia took the same course. The following resolutions were adopted: One to establish a permanent committee on municipal affairs, said committee to be composed of 5 members of the Convention. One to provide a Spanish speaking Socialist organizer for Porto Rico, $300 to be applied to this purpose. This resolution was first tabled, then reconsidered and adopted. One on the negro question was referred to a committee for amendment and adopted as amended.

Several other minor resolutions were tabled.
The city of St. Louis, Mo., was chosen as National Headquarters, as against Chicago. On roll call the vote showed St. Louis, 217, Chicago 204. The names of Cleveland, O., Indianapolis, Ind., and Davenport, Ia., were also placed in nomination, but were afterwards withdrawn.
A resolution defining the position of Socialists towards the farmers and general agricultural population, was adopted. A resolution on injunctions was also carried.
The resolutions referred to the Committee on Constitution took the following course. The one dealing with "appointive officials, etc." was referred to the National Committee to be sent to a referendum. The other dealing with party members joining the militia, was amended to read: "No member, etc., to enter the armed service of the capitalist class," and was adopted.

Debate on Constitution.
It would be impossible to give in the columns of this paper any account of the debate on constitution. So long, voluminous and protracted was the debate which centered around "state autonomy" that we must refer our readers to the full stenographic report which will doubtless shortly appear. All these questions, which included Duties and Powers of National Committee; Organization of States and Territories; basis of representation; payment of dues, etc., were discussed in a manner which showed strikingly the constructive ability, forethought and keenness of the delegates who took the most prominent part in these discussions, but unfortunately are too long for publication, and could not be done justice to within the limits of our space.

After the Constitution had been adopted as amended several resolutions, some of which were referred to various quarters at Chicago. After several further felicitous and congratulatory remarks, and sanguine forecasts for the future of socialism, the speaker resumed his seat amidst loud and repeated cheers from all present.

Once more the chairman asked if there was any further business before the convention. This time the reply came in the shape of a motion that "this Convention do now adjourn." The motion was seconded, put and carried, and with the final stroke of the chairman's gavel, the Indianapolis convention passed into history, and the SOCIALIST PARTY, united, organized and equipped for the struggle with capitalism and the emancipation of the working class, issued forth, strong and confident in the vigorous life and energy with which the Convention in its own dissolution had endowed it.

Concluding remarks.
Little more remains to be said which might properly come under the head of a report of this Convention. The SOCIALIST PARTY starts its career with many advantages which were impossible of attainment by earlier organizations carrying on the labor movement. Besides it has the inestimable advantage of the experience of its predecessors, and if wisely conducted should be able to avoid their mistakes. Judging from the proceedings of the Convention it may be reasonably inferred that this experience will not be wasted. The conduct of the delegates, above all, shows that not only has the stock of economic knowledge possessed by Socialists increased remarkably, but only has their constructive and organizing ability shown a striking development, but the spirit of stupid intolerance, which has been largely eradicated, while not an atom of the revolutionary position has been abandoned. Disruption, based upon personalities and misunderstandings which accumulate in intensity as the opponents obstinately refuse to be understood or make reasonable allowance for each other's position, will never again be permitted to occur. These, in reality, material differences, though some of them yet undoubtedly exist to various extents, are in the opinion of this convention no bar to unity. Disruption can only come in the future when fundamental principles are threatened. In such cases it seems unavoidable, and on the whole perhaps it is best that this should be so. If there is any tendency in the future which will bring fundamental differences of principle into the Socialist ranks (and we think there is little or no reason for believing that such a tendency exists), then internal struggles will break forth anew despite our efforts, but if not, it devolves upon us entirely, to see that minor questions and disputes and misunderstandings are not permitted to produce an effect that can only be reasonably caused by divergence of essential principles.

We have one particular safeguard against this condition of affairs; a greater and stronger bond than can be furnished by adulations for mutual concessions, forbearance, and sentimental brotherhood. Let us never forget the nature of the struggle in which we are engaged. In the midst of our petty internal frictions let us never lose sight of the fact that the enemy is CAPITALISM, that while we may even have just ground for complaint against another comrade of that we occupy an impregnable position against some minor measure which though adopted by the party, seems to us unwarrantable, let us never forget that while we expend energy in asserting ourselves upon these petty grievances and attracting the attention of other comrades to them, the exploitation, which it is our chief object to abolish, still goes on strengthening and fortifying

Final Resolutions.
It was resolved that the parties to the Convention, merge and amalgamate into one party. Carried unanimously. A resolution that the new SOCIALIST PARTY assume the debts of the parties to the Convention also went through as did another instructing the N. E. C. to compile and publish a report of the proceedings of the Convention.

Electoral of National Secretaries.
The Committee on Arrangements then reported, and a collection (in cash and personal pledges) was taken up to defray present expenses.
Comrade Leon Greenbaum of St. Louis was then elected National Secretary, and a resolution recognizing the services of the retiring secretaries, Comrades Theodore Debs and William Butcher, was adopted.

A local quorum of five was elected to act as Provisional Committee with power to fill their own vacancies. It was moved that this quorum should also act as a literary revision committee on Platform, Constitution, etc., which motion was concurred in.

Convention adjourns.
It was now growing late and the chairman had reached the point where the question as to whether there was any more business to be brought before the Convention was in order. There was no answer to the query, but Delegate Herron of Milwaukee took the floor, and in a short address accepted the proceedings of the Convention as final, subject to the referendum of the membership of S. D. P. with head-

measures against the licentious insolence of the Jews:
1. Increase of the penalties for insults committed by Jews against military
2. Change in the manner of instituting such processes so that they must be treated independently of the charges of the injured, and cannot end in a compromise.
3. Investigation by court martial of processes against Jews who are charged with insulting or assaulting military persons, in special cases at the request of the military commander of the troops in the military districts and with the permission and mutual consent of the minister of the interior, of justice and of war. In especially important cases application of martial laws against the guilty.
The minister of war suggested in his letter recommending the above named propositions to the consideration of the ministers of the interior and of justice, to leave to the discretion of the government general the right of handing over to a court martial such processes against Jews. He also found it necessary to formulate measures of an administrative nature against guilty Jews, viz.:
1. To leave to the discretion of government general the expulsion of such Jews from their domiciles.
2. To impose a money fine on the Jewish congregation of that place, where a collision between the people and the military had taken place.
3. To perform executions by military at such places.
The ministers of the interior and of justice, however, strongly protested against the last three propositions. It is their opinion that administrative measures should be taken only in a special session of the ministry of the interior as provided by sections 32 to 34 of the Rules for providing measures of safety. But the said ministers do not object to the participation of a director of the ministry of war in the proceedings of such processes against Jews, for the purpose of taking better care of the interests of the military. As to the question of fines and executions, the ministers of the interior and of justice hold that these measures are in contradiction with the fundamental provisions of criminal law, according to which every one is responsible for himself alone. In applying such measures innocent people would suffer. To regard to assigning such processes to a court martial the minister of the interior is willing to accept this measure but only for the reasons given in the draft of the commission bill. The minister of justice, however, wholly rejects this measure, because the court martial, in having judgment by general law, has no privileges over the civil court. Judgement by court martial is admissible only in the cases enumerated by the rules for providing measures of safety. As to the other suggestions of the commission the two ministers agree with the minister of war that the increase of the penalties for insulting military persons must be realized by general measures. But they must not be confined to Jews alone. As in the provisions of the criminal code the penalties for insults have been considerably increased and extra penalties for insulting military authorities have been inserted, with a special consideration of the wishes of the minister of war, the minister of justice does not see any sufficient reasons for further advocating a special increase of penalties for insulting military persons. As regards the necessity of changing the mode of instituting the process for such insults the minister of war points out that a project for the revision of the statute of criminal prosecution is under consideration.

It being considered absolutely impossible to rest content with the above named results of these proceedings, the minister of war is inclined to insist on the necessity of obtaining better safeguards for military persons against the insolence of the Jews. The commander of the district troops therefore requests the corps commander to give his opinion about the propositions in question: a) in regard to handing over the processes against the Jews to a court martial, and b) in regard to administrative measures.
Furthermore, information about several hundred cases of insults against Jews and military persons since 1871 is being collected.

The Jews are the backbone of the Russian labor movement. The attacks of the military authorities are, therefore, really directed against the Russian proletariat.

Capitalism and Militarism are closely related. One takes the part of the other. In order to protect profit, the soldier must shoot his friends and relatives. And when the latter defend themselves, even though only in words, then this "insolence" is punished by the lawless laws of war.

The "insolence of Jews" serves as a pretext for the suppression of the labor movement behind it. But this tyrannical and criminal aggression will be wrecked on the heroic bravery of the awakening proletariat—From "Vorwärts."

Important Notice.
A meeting will be held on Friday, Aug. 11th at 3 P. M. in Ullrichs Hall, 37 E. Clark St., to hear report of Delegates to the Socialist Party of Chicago to the Indianapolis Convention. Members of the Party alone admitted. Membership Cards must be shown at door. All members are requested to be present, by Order of General Committee, Socialist Party.

CLASS STRUGGLE IN RUSSIA.
Government Strikes at the Proletariat Movement Under the Mask of "Anti-Semitism."

The Central Committee of the "General Jewish Workingmen's Federation of Russia and Poland" publishes the following SECRET DOCUMENT addressed to the Government of St. Petersburg.
The chief of the military supreme court gave notice that the following propositions were discussed in the commission entrusted by his majesty the czar for the purpose of taking measures against the licentious insolence of the Jews:

1. Increase of the penalties for insults committed by Jews against military

2. Change in the manner of instituting such processes so that they must be treated independently of the charges of the injured, and cannot end in a compromise.

Editor of Religious Journal Gets Lost in Economic Fog.

A SELF DESTRUCTIVE PLEA.

Says Workingmen Have no Concern with the Employer's Profit, but "the Public" Has.

In commenting upon the strike of the steel-workers, the editor of the New World, the official organ of the Catholic Church in the archdiocese of Chicago, says that in substance the masters' claim is, that if a man gets such wages as the conditions of the labor-market force him to accept, he gets all he is entitled to, and it is none of his business if his employers are making 300 percent on their investment. He continues, "If that were indeed the last word to be said for capitalism, it would be hard to answer the socialist. But this is not the last word that can be said for capitalism. There is such a thing as a just rate of wages, but that rate of wages can not be determined until the men and the public know certain things which, for the present, the employers seem determined they shall not know." Here then is an "answer" to the socialists, who otherwise would be hard to answer. This champion of capitalism comes forward to say that if certain questions, which can only be answered by the employers, were publicly answered, a "just wage" could be determined, but he says they refuse to answer, saying, "It is none of your business." Notwithstanding this statement he goes on and says that the strongest argument in favor of the consolidation of the instruments of production is that the public have better grounds for insisting on the publicity which he places so much faith in. "This claim will have to be conceded if our present system is to last," in his windup. Now, if the steel magnates were only as wise as this editor, would not the present "beloved" system run smoothly? The question, which only the employers can answer, but which is "none of the public's business," but which the public, on account of the consolidation of industries, have a better ground for insisting upon being answered, is, "what is the business making; what is the real value of the services rendered, as measured by the price of the finished product; after making all fair deductions; what is the amount of capital really invested; what rate of interest ought, in justice, to be allowed on that capital, taking into account the element of risk; what is a fair compensation to the owner for his time, capacity, and anxiety in supervising the business?" If these questions were answered publicly and considered intelligently, instead of leading to make the present system lasting they would hasten its end, and as under the present system, "it is none of the public's business," the learned editor may be sure that the employers will not concede that it is, especially as the strikers themselves and their leaders back up with their votes the very employers by continuing in existence the only system under which the present attitude of the masters is enable. Think of the workers being given a statement of the amount extracted from their hides, and then being told what the real value of their sweat and blood is, by their own consent! Think of them consenting to give up, as a natural part of this value to those who have kept them in the sweat and blood, and simply because of their foolishness in previously so giving it up! Think of them considering how much of the product of their flesh and blood ought to be given to the master they had selected to remunerate him for his "time, capacity and anxiety" in so taking unto himself the result of their labor, while he does nothing in return! Yet these things this editor would have the employers present to their slaves for consideration! How vague a conception he must have of business as it really is, if he is sincere, and how mighty must be his ideas of socialism, which he considers would be hard to answer were it not for his "easy" answer!

Yet the religious journal must attempt to treat the economic problem as an assurance to the religious workingman that his interests are being considered by his church, and if this editor's whole mass of rubbish indicates a mind more suited to economic theories of fifty years ago, the condition of the minds of workingmen who are led by it, must indeed be sorry, for they are confronted by hard conditions, while his point of view is that produced by a teacher at the cradle of capitalism, whose theories are hatched out amid the surroundings of the fortunes who prey on the minds of the dupes who feed them while they are being betrayed.

The Workers' Call of Saturday August 11th will be a Special Labor Day issue. It will contain many suitable articles from well known socialist writers, dealing with subjects in which organized labor is directly interested. Send orders early as possible. Usual prices.

The Chief of Police of Cleveland, Ky., was killed the other day at a crap game in a saloon at Cincinnati, O., according to the daily press.

One might suppose in view of the rumors raised over the "history" written by MacKay as the champion-scholar of the day, that it was the first and only realization that capitalist political expediency had ever been guilty of.

It is a significant testimony to the growing solidarity of organized labor in Chicago that a bonus of $2 per day offered for "beats" by the National Foundry Association, for the purpose of breaking the Molder's strike, has failed to bring the expected results.

It is stated that the 8,000 members of the Bookbinders' union will "go into politics" in order to secure the passage of an eight-hour law for all occupations. They will discover in time that they cannot use capitalist politics against the interests of capitalism, and that a law and its enforcement are two very different things.

On last Wednesday the Billion dollar Steel Trust distributed $9,000,000 as dividends amongst its stockholders. This sum represented the "earnings" of three months, and will probably enable the recipients to get along without "relief" until such time as the strikers are willing to come back to work and prevent them with a similar sum again.

The Mayor of McKeesport threatens to arrest "beats" who may take the places of union men on strike against the steel trust, in that city. These "beats" are, in fact, the "beats" of the Mayor, but he is a Republican elected by "democracy" and it is not likely that the capitalist will take his threats seriously.

THE SILVER CROSS

—or—
The Carpenter of Nazareth
—by—
EUGENE SUE.

PREFACE.
Eugene Sue wrote in French a monumental work, "The Mysteries of the People," or "History of a Proletarian Family." It is a "work of fiction," yet it is the best universal history extant: better than any work, avowedly on history, it graphically traces the special features of the several systems of class-rule as they have succeeded each other from epoch to epoch, together with the nature of the struggle between the contending classes. The "Law," "Order," "Patriotism," "Religion," etc., etc., that each successive tyrant class, despite its change of form, hysterically sought refuge in to justify its criminal existence whenever threatened; the varying economic causes of the oppression of the toilers; the mistakes incurred by these in their struggles for redress; the varying fortunes of the conflict; all these social dramas are there reproduced in a majestic series of "historic novels," covering leading and successive episodes in the history of the race.

The work here published in English garb is one of these historic novels. It is chosen because of its singular fitness to modern times in one important respect:—the unity of action of the oppressor, despite hostile politico-material interests and clashing religious views; the hyper-erotic that typifies them all; the oneness of fundamental purpose that animates pulp, professional chair or public office in possession of a plundering class; and, last not least, the identity of the methods pursued and the pretences seized by the plundering and ruling class, at that long ago critical period in the history of the human race, when the pre-federal colonies of the Roman Empire was by force of its own power, beginning to strangle itself; and, at the present or third critical period, when the grand-child of that Roman System and child of Feudalism, Capitalism, is now in turn, likewise by virtue of its own ripened colossal power, throttling itself to death, and, with its death throes, heralding the advent of a new civilization—the Socialist Social System.

"The Silver Cross," or "The Carpenter of Nazareth," is a pathetic page from history that holds the mirror up to the Capitalist Class: orators, pulpites, politicians, lawyers, together with all its other manials of high and low degree,—and, by the reflection cast, enlightens and warns.

251 pages, cloth, with or without silver cross decoration, price 50 cents.

- 1.—Woman and the Social Problem. By May Wood Simons. Shows that the emancipation of woman will only come with the emancipation of man through socialism.
- 2.—The Evolution of the Class Struggle. By William H. Noyes. A historical study showing how socialism is coming.
- 3.—Imprudent Marriages. By Robert Blatchford. A masterly answer to the argument that "prudence" would help the laborer.
- 4.—Packington's. By A. M. Simons. A study of the Union Stock Yards, Chicago; how nature and man are alike scientifically exploited.
- 5.—Realism in Literature and Art. By Clarence A. Darrow.
- 6.—Single Tax vs. Socialism. By A. M. Simons. Shows the inadequacy of the single tax as a remedy for the evils pointed out by Henry George.
- 7.—Wage-Labor and Capital. By Karl Marx. The essence of the great philosopher's theory, in his own words.
- 8.—The Man Under the Machine. By A. M. Simons. A concise summary of the argument for socialism in simple language.
- 9.—The Mission of the Working Class. By Rev. Charles H. Vall, author of "Modern Socialism."
- 10.—MORALS and SOCIALISM. By Charles H. Kerr. Shows how popular ideas of morals are manipulated in the interest of the Capitalist Class.
- 11.—Socialist Songs. By William Morris and others. Printed without music, but adapted to familiar tunes.
- 12.—After Capitalism, What? By Rev. Wm. T. Brown. A striking demonstration of the fact that socialism is the necessary outcome of present conditions.
- 13.—A Political Quack Doctor. By W. A. Corey. A socialist view of the problem of dealing with the liquor traffic.
- 14.—Socialism and Farmers. By A. M. Simons. Shows how the farmer is virtually a wage-slave and that his interests lead him into socialism.
- 15.—How I Acquired My Millions. By W. A. Corey. A revised edition of this brilliant satire.
- 16.—Socialists in French Municipalities. A compilation from official reports, showing what has been accomplished by the socialists who control most of the cities of France.
- 17.—Socialism and Trade Unionism. By Daniel Lynch. With this is printed "Trades Unionism and Socialism," by Max S. Hayes.
- 18.—Plutocracy or Nationalism, Which? An address delivered by Edward Bellamy in 1899, remarkable for its forecast of actual industrial developments and of the coming social order.
- 19.—The Real Religion of Today. By Rev. Wm. Thurston Brown. Shows how the socialist movement embodies all that has been vital in religion.
- 20.—Why I Am a Socialist. An address delivered by Prof. George D. Herron at a Social Democratic mass meeting in Chicago, September 23, 1900.
- 21.—The Trust Question. Its economic and political aspect. By Rev. Chas. H. Vall.
- 22.—How to Work for Socialism. A manual of practical suggestions. By Walter Thomas Mills.
- 23.—The Axe at the Root. By Rev. Wm. T. Brown. A sermon showing that socialism embodies the principles of early Christianity.
- 24.—What the Socialists Would Do if Elected to this City. By A. M. Simons.
- 25.—The Folly of Being "Good." Capitalist Ethics and Socialist Ethics Contrasted. By Charles H. Kerr.
- 26.—INTemperance and POVERTY. By T. Twining. Disposes thoroughly of the assertion that the laborers' troubles are mainly due to drink.
- 27.—THE RELATION OF RELIGION TO SOCIAL ETHICS. By Rev. Wm. T. Brown.

PLATFORM AND CONSTITUTION

Adopted by THE SOCIALIST PARTY at the Convention held at Indianapolis, Ind., July 29 to Aug. 3, 1901.

PLATFORM.

The Socialist Party of America, in National Convention assembled, reaffirms its adherence to the principles of International Socialism, and declares its aim to be the organization of the working class, and those in sympathy with it, into a political party, with the object of conquering the powers of government and using them for the purpose of transforming the present system of private ownership of the means of production and distribution into collective ownership by the entire people.

Formerly the tools of production were simple and owned by the individual worker. Today the machine, which is but an improved and more developed tool of production, is owned by the capitalists and not by the workers. This ownership enables the capitalists to control the product and keep the workers dependent upon them.

Private ownership of the means of production and distribution is responsible for the ever increasing uncertainty of livelihood and the poverty and misery of the working class, and it divides society into two hostile classes—the capitalists and wage-workers. The once powerful middle class is rapidly disappearing in the mill of competition. The struggle is now between the capitalist class and the working class. The possession of the means of livelihood gives to the capitalists the control of the government, the press, the pulpit and the schools, and enables them to reduce the workingmen to a state of intellectual, physical and social inferiority, political subservience and virtual slavery.

The economic interests of the capitalist class dominate our entire social system: the lives of the working class are recklessly sacrificed for profit, wars are fomented between nations, indiscriminate slaughter is encouraged and the destruction of whole races is sanctioned in order that the capitalists may extend their commercial dominion abroad and enhance their supremacy at home.

But the same economic causes which developed capitalism are leading to socialism, which will abolish both the capitalist class and the class of wage-workers. Add the active force in bringing about this new and higher order of society is the working class. All other classes, despite their apparent or actual conflicts, are alike interested in the upholding of the system of private ownership of the instruments of wealth production. The Democratic, Republican, and all other parties which do not stand for the complete overthrow of the capitalist system of production, are alike political representatives of the capitalist class.

The workers can most effectively act as a class in their struggle against the collective powers of capitalism, by constituting themselves into a political party, distinct from and opposed to all parties formed by the propertied classes.

While we declare that development of economic conditions tends to the overthrow of the capitalist system, we recognize that the time and manner of the transition to socialism also depend upon the stage of development reached by the proletariat. We, therefore, consider it of the utmost importance for the S. P. to support all active efforts of the working class to better its condition and to elect Socialists to political offices, in order to facilitate the attainment of this end.

AS SUCH MEANS WE ADVOCATE:

1. The collective ownership of all means of transportation and communication and all other public utilities, as well as of all industries controlled by monopolies, trusts and combines. No part of the revenue of such industries to be applied to the reduction of taxes on property of the capitalist class, but to be applied wholly to the increase of wages and shortening of the hours of labor of the employees, to the improvement of the service and diminishing the rates to the consumers.

2. The progressive reduction of the hours of labor and the increase of wages in order to decrease the share of the capitalist and increase the share of the worker in the product of labor.

3. State or national insurance of working people in case of accidents, lack of employment, sickness and want in old age; the funds for this purpose to be collected by the government and to be administered under the control of the working class.

4. The inauguration of a system of public industries, public credit to be used for that purpose, in order that the workers be assured the full product of their labor.

5. The education of all children up to the age of eighteen years, and state and municipal aid for books, clothing and food.

6. Equal civil and political rights for men and women.

7. The initiative and referendum, proportional representation and the right of recall of representatives by their constituents.

But in making these demands we stand in the overthrow of capitalism.

and in the establishment of the co-operative commonwealth, we would warn the people against the public ownership demands made by capitalist political parties, which always result in perpetuating the capitalist system through the compromise or defeat of the socialist revolution.

CONSTITUTION.

The name of this organization shall be the Socialist Party, except in states where a different name has or may become a legal requirement.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE.

There shall be a National Committee composed of one member from each organized state or territory, and a quorum of five to be elected from the membership of the locality of the seat of the committee.

The members of this committee shall be elected by and from the membership of the states or territories which they respectively represent, by referendum vote. Their term of office shall not be more than two years, and they shall take their seats in the month of January.

This committee shall meet in regular session not oftener than once a year. Special meetings shall be called at the request of a majority of the members of such committee.

DUTIES AND POWERS.

The duties of this committee shall be to supervise and direct work of the National Secretary; to represent the party in all national and international affairs; to organize unorganized states and territories; to call national nominating conventions, and special conventions called by a referendum of the party, and to submit questions to referendum; to receive semi-annual reports from the state committees and to make reports to the national conventions.

Any member of the National Committee, not a member of the local quorum, may require the Secretary to submit to a vote of the whole National Committee questions as to the removal of the local committee or Secretary; also for its consideration any part of the work of the Secretary or of the local committee, or any business belonging to the National Committee.

The National Committee shall elect a committee of five from the party membership of the locality selected for the party headquarters, to supervise and assist the Secretary as the National Committee shall require and direct. Said committee of five shall form part of and be a quorum of the National Committee. On the question of removal, said local quorum shall not

This committee shall neither publish nor designate any official organ.

The National Secretary shall be elected by the National Committee, and shall be subject to removal at its discretion.

In states and territories in which there is one central organization affiliated with the party and representing at least ten local organizations in different parts of such state or territory respectively, the state or territorial organization shall have the sole jurisdiction of the members residing within their respective territories and the sole jurisdiction of all matters pertaining to the propaganda, organization and financial affairs within such state or territory, and the National Executive Committee and sub-committees or officers shall have no right to interfere in such matters without the consent of the respective state or territorial organizations.

Expenses of the National Committee in attending meetings shall be paid from the National Treasury.

NATIONAL SECRETARY.

The National Secretary shall be in communication with the members of the National Committee, the officers of the organized states and territories, and with members of unorganized states and territories. The Secretary shall receive as compensation the sum of $1,000.

HEADQUARTERS.

Headquarters shall be located at St. Louis, Missouri, until such headquarters may be changed by the National Committee, subject to a referendum of the party.

ORGANIZATION OF STATES AND TERRITORIES.

In each state or territory, and under such rules and regulations, as it may determine, but not in conflict with the provisions of the constitution.

REPRESENTATION OF STATES AND TERRITORIES.

A state or territory shall be deemed organized and shall have a right to affiliate upon the organization of not less than four branches, each branch to consist of not less than five members.

Each state or territory so organized shall receive a charter.

The platform of the Socialist Party adopted in convention or by referendum vote shall be the supreme declaration of the party, and all state and municipal organizations shall, in the adoption of their platform, conform thereto.

REVENUE.

Each state or territory shall pay in to the National Committee every month a sum equal to five cents for every member in good standing within the respective state or territory.

REPORTS.

The secretary shall prepare a monthly statement of the financial and other business of his office, and when approved by the local quorum of five shall issue the same to all party organizations, in such way as the National Committee shall direct.

The National Committee shall prepare a semi-annual report of all financial and other business of the party, and issue the same to all state and territorial organizations.

State Committees shall make semi-annual reports to the National Committee concerning their membership and financial condition and general standing of the party.

The National Committee shall arrange a set of Financial Secretaries' and Treasurers' books for locals, the same to be furnished to the locals on application.

A VETERAN'S SPEECH

Address of Comrade Yablitch at the Indianapolis Convention.

POWERFUL APPEAL FOR UNITY

Speaker Draws on Long Experience in German Movement as Example to American Socialists.

Comrades—After having delivered thousands of speeches in German for the cause of Socialism, it is today for the first time that I attempt to speak in English in order to do my part in perfecting a union of socialists for the common struggle against their enemies and the cessation of fighting between themselves.

It is difficult for me to give expression to my thoughts in English, and I would rather have refrained from making this speech but I am an old man dexterity to advance with giant strides. I do not deny, but on the contrary, know very well that in the whole socialist world, among hundreds of minor variations there are two principal views which struggle with each other. The advocates of one of these views proclaim themselves as loudly as possible to be revolutionists. They live in constant fear that socialism can be stolen from them or "watered" like stocks, or fall a victim to corruption. They therefore speak warmly against compromise, and would like to see the socialist army corps guarded against every touch of the non-socialists. They have a keen scent for traitors in their own ranks, mistrust all who are not toilers, and are impatient to deliver the last deciding stroke for the foundation of socialist society.

The representatives of the other tendency also call themselves revolutionists though not so frequently or loudly. They do not believe in the theory of a catastrophe, but rather in the organic growth of the old society into the new one. Their fighting tactics must therefore necessarily differ from those of the other belief. They do not fear "watering" or corruption of socialism, considering it an economic necessity which Socialists all over the world, in the interests of the human race.

But perhaps one or other among you may say: "These are but words, phrases which cannot stand before the real facts as they exist."

In answer I need only point to the rich experiences in party life of our German comrades, to prove to you that the performance of the duty I request of you is quite within your power. What your German comrades have done, you also can do.

When I as a 17 year old journeyman in the year 1877 began to wander through Germany, I had my Weltling in my knapsack, and with other, was of the opinion that upon his Weltling—communist system was based the salvation of humanity.

Now comrades, did this belief prevent us from gathering around the banner held up by Lassalle in 1863, although upon it stood mottoes quite different from those expressed in Weltling's works?

Not there was a movement in favor of the world's disinherited, and we followed, not with grumbling and fault-finding but with enthusiasm.

And afterwards when differences of opinion could no more be bridged over, because Lassalle's propositions proved impracticable, in face of the actual conditions a fight broke out, much more passionate and malignant than the one we are now engaged in. This fight lasted ten years amongst the German Socialists, but the end was that we united and built up THE PARTY, as we are now about to do in this country.

Do you believe that this was easy after a bitter fight lasting ten years? It was a difficult task. But we performed it, taking consideration of our weakness and prejudices and making mutual concessions.

We were scoffed at by Marx, the great representative of scientific socialism, on account of the compromising program, which obeying the necessity of circumstances it had formulated, but we stood upon this platform united, and could and did work ourselves up to higher and higher supremacy of power.

Nothing can be more instructive than this historical example.

Marx was right, when he declared that program of coalition of which I am speaking, scientifically untenable—but we were still more right when we made it; for without it the agreement necessary before everything else, would not have been brought about.

From that time on since 1875, our German comrades have not rested in bringing this party program into harmony with scientific socialism.

There have been controversies and differences of opinion and they exist today more than ever, but never since 1875 have the German socialists given to the world the disgraceful spectacle of political disruption in the fight against the common foe.

I repeat, that what the Germans have been able to do, we are also able to do, if we really want it. The road before us is long and full of obstacles. We must gather our whole strength for the struggle before us, and must not rest till we reach our destination.

Our program is an earnest, mighty world meaning one. Let us prove worthy of it.

Enter "The Comrade".

The first number of a new illustrated Socialist monthly journal to be called "The Comrade" will make its appearance on September 15th. It will be published at 124 William St., New York City, at a subscription price of $1.00 per year, single copies ten cents. A very attractive poster announcing the arrival of the new paper has reached this office, where it will be hung in a conspicuous place. "The Comrade" as the poster says, "will be the journal of the Socialist spirit, and will contain pictures, poems, stories, satires, descriptive articles, and biographical and historical sketches." There is plenty of room for a publication of this description, and we look upon the appearance of the new journal at this time as a satisfactory indication of the growth of Socialist thought throughout the country. Move that the "Comrade" be given the floor.

Comrade Mills will be able to attend the Night School in the Schiller Bldg only twice more, Aug. 20 and Aug. 27. Subject for these evenings "How to prepare a speech". All socialists invited to attend these last sessions of lesson course. Admission Free. Thursday 8 p. m., Schiller Bldg 105 E. Randolph st., 2d floor.

The workmen who wrested with dynamite a labor saving smoothing machine at a south side stone yard, which had been the cause of their discharge, evidently have not learned the futility of opposition to economic progress. These stone workers could learn a thing or two from the history of the English weavers of nearly a century ago. It would be much better if all hands would get into the column of progress and work for the advent of socialism, under which labor saving machinery, instead of being a curse and an instrument of starvation, will be a blessing and a means for universal plenty.

THE "UNITY" PICNIC

West Side Comrades Give Notice of Their Intentions.

PRELIMINARY ANNOUNCEMENT

Fishing Facilities of all Sorts Provided. Unique Attractions in Athletic Events.

The West Side comrades will give a picnic to celebrate the unification of the socialist forces of Chicago, at Bergman's Grove in Riverside, on Sunday, Sept. 8, 1901.

No effort or expense will be spared by the committee in charge to make this picnic a worthy successor to the one given for the benefit of the Workers' Call. The grounds are located on the beautiful Desplaines river, which will afford those attending an opportunity for boating and fishing. Comrade Collins who will have charge of the fishing requests us to announce that he has made arrangements for large schools of enormous fish to plow the limpid waters of the beautiful Desplaines from 10 A. M. until 11 P. M. and also that a large force of photographers will be on hand to take pictures of the fish caught and enlarge them to any desired extent.

The grove also boasts of an excellent base-ball diamond upon which a game will be played between the "West Side Socialist B. B. Club" who are the amateur champions of the city, having already won 1,466 per cent of the games they have played, and any club as clubs that can be induced to risk their reputation by playing against them. Comrade Basilek who is captain of the club has had his men out for practice every night for the past three weeks so that they may be in the best possible condition for the event, and reports that they expect to have a walk over their opponents wherever they may be. Comrade Saunders who claims to be the champion bowler of Cook County announces that he will be on hand to defend his title against all comers.

It is stated that the same applies to basketball and to the shooting gallery. An interesting match may be looked for between comrades Brennan and Collins at the target.

Another interesting feature will be a tug of war between two teams led by Comrades Kienke and Jan. S. Smith respectively. Comrade Kienke has a gymnasium fitted up in the basement of his residence where he trains faithfully every day for this event, while Comrade Smith is taking long runs each morning and reports that he will soon be in good condition for a hard contest. Disparaging remarks regarding each others ability as athletes have already been passed between these comrades, so a fierce contest may be looked for.

The committee on dancing have been practicing fancy steps for several weeks, and expect to give us up to the hour of the picnic. Their graceful steps will undoubtedly prove a source of much joy to all who have the pleasure of watching them.

Comrades Daly and Anderson who will have charge of the catfish report that they have made arrangements with the leading caterers of the city to supply a liberal amount of sandwiches, coffee and ice cream so that no one may go hungry.

The Workers' Call will receive 99 per cent of the net proceeds of the picnic. Among the speakers who will be present and address the picnic are comrades Steadman, Brown, Morgan, Basilek, Collins, Wanhope, Simons, Cusley, Baird, Mills, McSwamy and Kienke.

The grounds may be reached by taking the Garfield Park car on the Metropolitan L. to W. 45th St., and the La Grange car from there to the grounds. Tickets may be obtained from party members, at the Workers' Call office or at the Socialist Temple for 15 cents.

PER COMMITTEE.

A Capitalist Disease.

British Socialists have taken up Professor Koch's Report on Tuberculosis at the recent International Medical Congress as showing beyond the possibility of a doubt that the continuance of the disease is mainly due to the miserable conditions and surroundings of the working class imposed upon them by the capitalist system. There would be little difficulty in demonstrating that tuberculosis is not the only disease which finds a favorable environment in the localities where capitalism forces its wage slaves to herd, neither is there much doubt as to the veridical of the medical science of the future upon the connection of disease and capitalism though its voice may be now drowned in the interest of the ruling class.

The Workers' Call of Saturday August 11st will be a Special Labor Day issue. It will contain many outlandish articles from well known socialist writers, dealing with subjects in which organized labor is directly interested. Send orders early, as possible. Usual postage

AMENDMENTS.

This Constitution may be amended by a National Convention, subject to a majority referendum vote of the party or by a referendum without the action of such convention, and it shall be the duty of the National Committee to submit such amendment to a referendum vote within thirty days after being requested to do so by five locals in three different states.

INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM IN OTHER MATTERS.

All acts of the National Committee shall be subject to referendum vote after the same manner as provided in the preceding section.

All propositions or other matters submitted for the referendum of the party shall be presented without comment.

BASES OF REPRESENTATION.

The basis of representation in any National Convention shall be by states, each state being entitled to one delegate at large and one additional delegate for every 100 members in good standing.

YOUR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDS THAT the present convention elect a Secretary and locate headquarters, and that when the states have elected their National Committees the National Committee shall be considered formed, but no state shall elect its Committeeman before the 1st of September, 1901.

Resolved, that the Social Democratic Party with headquarters at Springfield, Mass., the Social Democratic Party with headquarters at Chicago, Ill., the Socialist Party of Texas, and the Social Democratic Party of the states of Kentucky, Kansas and Nebraska, heretofore their separate and independent existence and merge and amalgamate into one organization, this organization to be known as the Socialist Party; this action to take effect together with the whole Constitution.

a veteran of the Social Democracy, and I tremble at the thought that the work of unity here may fail.

I thought, that perhaps in consideration of 44 years of service in the socialist army which he behind me, you might attribute some value to my words, and I consider it my duty to-at least attempt to bring to bear my influence on the hot-headed in our camp, inasmuch that they learn to know and appreciate the first duty of every soldier of the Revolution—the subordination of personal interests, personal feelings and thoughts to the common interest of all.

This subordination cannot be extended to the suppression of any personal opinion; it must not have as a sequence the suppression of truth or the liberty to investigate, but it can very well be made perfectly compatible with closed ranks, in the presence of the common enemy.

As an illustration let me call your attention to the example of our German comrades.

Moreover would not the excessive great liberty of the individual lead us to the point where every single one would want to form his own party?

We have one, truth, which we all without exception recognize; one aim toward which we all strive; one banner which we all follow. We all recognize that the release of mankind from the chains of intellectual and material slavery, its liberation from the claws of the capitalist vampire, the removal of religious and political superstitions, can be accomplished only by an organization of society in which the means of production shall be common property, a society which offers for uniform employment the rich blessing of the work of all to all.

Of course every one would like to realize this condition as quickly as possible, and therefore every one offers his own prescription in the full belief that its acceptance will give us strength and will find its way ultimately with irresistible force, and therefore want to grasp every occasion to advance step by step. They do not fear compromises or temporary companionship with non-socialist parties. They do not want to restrict their activity to participation in elections, but also seek to influence the people in an educational way, especially by furthering the co-operative work.

Will we in spite of this difference of opinion in regard to tactics, make socialist unity in this country a fact?

I say, Yes.

Let it be understood that I do not imagine that we can succeed in preventing the existence of 4 or 5 sects, but we can, with some good will, have THE PARTY which will be recognized as the representation of socialists.

It is necessary that we at this convention, reduce to silence by an overwhelming vote, those who so far have prevented union, and who at the same time have acted as if they had all the comrades in their pockets.

Do not be deterred from your intentions by the fact that this or that majority resolution does not suit you. Such resolutions may be altered in the course of time. But the danger of separating here without accomplishing any results can never be blotted out; should such happen it would be equal to a crime against our cause which is the cause of the whole people.

But the form can be found in which minor differences of opinion can be resolved into that harmony, which the striving for a higher universally acknowledged ideal, common to all of us, demands.

Now comrades, our sense of duty, must be stronger than our self will, our love for the cause, must make us forget personal injustices we may have suffered, our entire thinking, feeling and wishing must be consumed by enthusiasm for the work of rescue, which we have to perform in common with plan of federal society. This new Jacobin club, on the brink of a new revolution whose mission it is to set up socialism over capitalism, seeks to patch up the old decaying system and postpone the new era. The old club was composed of progressive revolutionaries, the new one of reactionary fossils. How great the fall!

Speaking of the promise of "moral aid" given by the Federation of Labor to the striking steel employees, The Tribune ironically asks, "what is the moral aid to be?" and concludes correctly enough that it is an unsubstantial, shadowy thing that cannot be estimated, although Mr. Shaffer holds the opposite opinion that "morally" means a great deal. This is a rather dangerous subject for a capitalist journal to handle. Once let the working class get the idea that "moral aid" is composed of the same stuff as "public opinion" and "public sympathy" and other phantasms of capitalist journalism, and they will turn their attention to material things in a manner that the ruling classes won't like. It is bad policy to sneer at the other fellows' bogies, Brothers Tribune; it may bring your own into discredit. Better let Shaffer remain joined to his idols. As an iconoclast he might prove troublesome by "going too far."

EUROPEAN TARIFF ALLIANCE

It will be noticed that the capitalist press of this country is not showing any symptoms of alarm over the proposed European tariff alliance against American products, which M. Leroy-Rogues declares will shortly be established.

High tariff of course operates differently in different countries according to current capitalist logic. For years it was regarded as the only "protection" of the American wage slave against the competition of foreign "pauper" labor and this doctrine was assiduously preached by the political tools of the great capitalist class. Now however when the "foreigner" threatens to adopt the same tactics as a shield against the influx of cheap American products, the capitalist press at once reverses its former position by declaring that the proposed alliance is not only impracticable but that even if it were adopted it would fail of its object, viz. the "protection" of the European laborer, which is only another way of saying that the entire "tariff question" is merely a device to gull the working class into perpetuating the capitalist system through their votes.

High tariff, low tariff, or no tariff, none know better than the capitalist class that the conquest of the world's markets depends primarily upon the cheapness with which commodities can be produced, which in itself involves the cheapening of the commodity labor power.

MAYOR ELLIS AND THE TARIFF

Isn't it a good thing to have a Mayor like Mr. Black of McKeesport, Pa., who threatens to arrest any non-union man whom the Steel Trust might bring into that town to take the place of the strikers? Was it not because of this threat that the Trust determined to dismantle its McKeesport plant and move into a "less hostile district"? Whether these two incidents have any connection or not may be left to the intelligence of the reader, but it is a fact nevertheless that two very important lessons for workingmen may be deduced from them.

In the first place the capitalist press, pretending to take the Mayor's threat seriously, took occasion to remind him editorially that he didn't amount to much. "Happily" says one well known journalistic champion of capitalism, "a Mayor is not a supreme being. There are Sheriffs, Judges, and Governors to outrank him. If the Mayor of McKeesport tries to carry out his program he will learn speedily that his powers are limited."

Just so. And the lesson may well be considered not only by workingmen outside, but also by many inside the Socialist ranks. To strike a really effective blow at the exploitation of labor, political power far greater than that wielded by a Mayor is necessary. And in pointing this out, the press is merely telling the working class that their emancipation depends upon their acquiring power not only in the city, but also in the state and nation. Capitalism is entrenched in Washington and so long as the citadel remains untaken the capture of outposts here and there is of little importance in effecting immediate changes in the economic relations of capitalist and laborer, whatever value it may have in acting as an incentive towards further conquests.

Secondly, the Trust in deciding to dismantle its McKeesport plant has given the workers an object lesson on the futility of their struggle in the economic field. Here, with the concentration of means of production comes an added power, where which the union stands utterly impotent. The means of livelihood of hundreds and perhaps thousands of working men can be permanently removed from any given location at the attitude of the wage slaves meet with the disapproval of the masters. This was not possible under separate capitalist ownership. With the Trust it is but a mere incident which in no way affects the productive capacity of the combined plants under its control. This fact is merely one of many proofs of the tendencies which increase the economic power of the capitalists and diminish that of the workers. It is but one further cog in the growing insolvency of Trade Union tactics to win anything for the workers.

It is likely that many of the workers will emerge from this strike with a knowledge of the conditions of combat which may prove useful in future struggles, and McKeesport, Pa., has already contributed its quota to the common stock.

SOLIDARITY WEAKENED

If the events which have occurred in the great conflict now being waged between the steel trust and its employees during the past week be carefully considered, it will be found that they tend without exception to exhibit the increasing inadequacy of the labor organizations to enforce their demands on the possessing classes, and the growing economic power of the latter through the constant concentration of the means of production.

Beyond all doubt the refusal of the many thousands of workers in the western plants of the Steel Trust, to obey the strike order of President Shaffer, is the most significant event that has yet occurred in the progress of the struggle. That it will have an important effect upon the ultimate outcome is certain, and that this effect will be all in favor of the employees is equally obvious. So far, President Shaffer has not expressed any opinion on those who disregarded his order, although the reasons which induced them to take this course must command the attention and investigation of all who would undertake the struggle against capitalism on purely economic lines.

Here we have perhaps, the most numerically powerful and certainly the wealthiest labor organization in the country, displaying a lack of cohesion in the face of the enemy which imperils if it does not destroy the small chance of ultimate success yet remaining.

Various reasons for this action are given. The capitalist press sees in it a tendency to recognize the binding force of contract, an indication that the men who refused to obey the order know their own interests better than Shaffer does, and that their action will save the Amalgamated Association from total extinction. In this latter aspect the press feels considerable satisfaction and expresses the same without reserve. They see the Union emerge from the struggle, nominally intact, but really enucleated and shorn of its power for future trouble, and congratulate the "conservative" element on having "saved" the organization, knowing well that its mere skeleton is all that survives.

Whatever may be thought of these explanations, it is apparent enough to any one that has followed the struggle from its inception that the fact that the relative positions of the combatants had changed to the disadvantage of the workers and its perception by the latter, has been the main factor which influenced the decision of the employees of the Western plants.

From the very beginning of the conflict the Union has, although apparently aggressive, in reality maintained a defensive position. The utterances of Shaffer, his appeals to Morgan, his renewed proposals amounting almost to pleas, for arbitration, the confident stubbornness of the trust representatives, and their refusal to consider the strike as a matter of vital importance, all these and many other similar displays of weakness upon one side and strength on the other, cannot have failed to produce uncertainty on the minds of the workers still employed, undermine their confidence in the ability of the Amalgamated Association to carry out successfully the task it had undertaken, and impair the semblance of solidarity which existed before the struggle had commenced.

The reports of the power of the Trusts which have appeared almost daily in the press for the last two years, the futility of legislation against it, the defeat and disruption of the capitalist political party which had undertaken the fight against it also contributed to weaken the faith of the workers in their organization, and mistrust their ability to cope with their gigantic adversary.

This fact was well founded. From the day that the subsidiary companies and corporations merged their interests in the United States Steel Trust, the Amalgamated Association became an anachronism.

Something perhaps may be saved from the wreckage. Some trifling concessions may here and there be gained by the workers at present on strike, sufficient to apparently warrant the continuance of the organization, but to all intents and purposes the battle is practically lost.

The next real fight on the Steel Trust will see the battle ground shifted to the political field, the conflict conducted by workers who recognize the central truth of the class struggle, and under the banner of the Socialist Party.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE

The capitalist press is unanimous in asserting that President Shaffer has forfeited "public sympathy" by advising the employees of the steel trust to disregard their contracts. However as the Federation of Labor has pledged its "moral support" to the strikers, it may be fairly assumed that these two powerful factors mutually negate each other.

Our capitalists are jubilant over the partial failure of the wheat crop in France. They will be able to dispense philanthropy to the amount of 40 million bushels, to the prospective starving inhabitants of that country, and their agricultural slaves are now reaping the grain for that purpose. Of course no one in this country will go without bread in the meantime.

The prevailing high price of food stuffs besides increasing the privations of the dispossessed class, has been incidental to the failure of a large number of small grocers. The fast disappearing middle class must bear the brunt of every commercial flurry. The small business man must inevitably come down into the ranks of the working class. They are hanging ripe and rotten upon the tree of commercialism, and every passing gust brings down a shower.

Thomas M. Robertson, expert from the U. S. Department of Labor, in a report upon the living conditions of New York working people states that New York is a city without homes; that the working class there have no homes, but simply a place to go. What's the matter with New York anyway? Haven't they got capitalism in that city? And isn't capitalism the special guardian and protector of the "home"? Or is it possible that Socialism is so far advanced in New York that the "home" is being destroyed in code-quantos?

Consuelo, Duchess of Marlborough and daughter of old Vanderbilt, is creating quite a rumpus in English politics. Last Saturday she tendered a banquet to 1,500 members of the Tory party. This makes the American workingman, who helped to make the Vanderbilt fortune, proud to think what a noble usage that fortune is being put. What an honor it is to be able to spread a banquet to a company of English princes, dukes, earls, lords, barons and viscounts.

Dispatches from Paris state: "The Radical (reform) party has made no progress. The leaders blame the socialists for this and demand that the latter sacrifice themselves by throwing their votes to the radical candidate when there is a chance of a liberal or a republican pairing. This the socialists refuse to consent to, and maintain their candor." It seems that the radicals of France and the reform forces of America are very tardy about learning that the policy of all militant socialists is "no compromise." Their words of veneration and astonishment when they stumbled over this last are nevertheless, very pleasant to the socialist ear.

If a gigantic trust succeeds in getting control of the Missouri apple market, it may result in the making of a few more socialists among the farmers of that state. The farmer at the present stage of capitalist development does not feel the pressure of a society cramped by an obsolete system of appropriation of the fruits of toil as does the city proletarian. However, his keenness of perception and superior education here in America seem to more than make up for the economic difference. The Missouri farmer is fully up to this standard of progressiveness. He "has to be shown." It is true; but this time, he does not even forget the lesson.

The management of a London daily paper has decreed that its reporters shall wear silk hats and frock coats while on duty. We wonder if the time is near at hand when the reporter, like the waiter and the coachman, will be compelled to wear the livery of his servility. It is just. If there is one class of men who deserve to be known as servile hangers-on of the present system of society, it is the newspaper reporters. The ordinary laborer only sells his body to his masters for hire. The newspaper man sells not only his body but his mind and conscience likewise. He is a servant to capitalism of the most abject kind. The only redeeming feature is that it is not him who is to blame, but the system under which he lives.

Dispatches from Antwerp say that glass manufacturers of Belgium are about to sell out their works to American hands.

John. They continue: The Belgian manufacturers are greatly discouraged by the persistent labor troubles and the exorbitant demands of the men. Selling out to the yankees will be a new blow to the national pride. There now, socialist glass blowers of Belgium, see the result of your over zealousness. You struck for higher wages, you country's army, being composed of socialists like yourselves, could not be used to put you down, and you took a mean advantage of your good employers, who doubtless only wanted a legitimate profit on their investment. The result is that your masters are going to sell you to a foreigner. See how you have humiliated your "national pride." Your American masters, if you let too impertinent, may have a gun boat or two sent across the pond to "protect American interests," which will be a further humiliation of your national pride. In such an event your brothers over here, who are possibly not so far advanced as you are, will cheerfully pay the cost of the expedition.

REPORT OF DELEGATES.

Sunday Meeting in Uchich's Hall Across the Results of Unity

Minutes of General Party meeting held at Uchich's Hall Aug. 15th. The meeting was called to order at 8:30 p. m. and Comrade Smiley elected chairman. About two hundred and fifty members of the party were present. The object of the meeting was the hearing of reports from the five delegates representing Chicago in the National Convention. Oral reports were made by Comrades Mills, Morgan, Collins and Richter and a report was read from Comrade Simmons who was absent from the city. Comrade Klenke, who represented the state, by request, also addressed the meeting regarding the work of the Convention.

The following resolution was introduced by Comrade Kaplan and unanimously adopted: Whereas—At the Socialist Convention, held at Indianapolis July 29th to Aug. 3rd, 1931, at which Convention the S. D. P., with headquarters at Chicago, Ill., and the S. D. P. with headquarters at Springfield, Mass., and several independent Socialist state organizations were represented through accredited official delegates, and Whereas—As a result of the deliberations of the different party organizations through their accredited delegates, a declaration of principles, resolutions, constitution and by laws were adopted and accepted by all the delegates representing the different organizations, and Whereas—The results of that Convention and the action of the delegates as to new reorganization and endorsement of the mass membership to make unity of Socialist forces in the United States an accomplished fact;

Be it therefore resolved that we, the members of the Socialist party of Chicago in a mass-meeting assembled, do accept the result of such convention as the expression of the majority sentiment of the United Socialist of America;

Be it further resolved, that we accept the decrees of the Indianapolis convention as binding upon each and every member of the Socialist Party of Chicago and Be it also resolved, that we call upon the unorganized socialists to enroll themselves as members of the Socialist Party of America and co-operate with us for the abolition of the wage system and the inauguration of the Co-operative Commonwealth.

It was ordered that the resolutions be published in the Workers' Call and that copies be sent to all socialist papers. A resolution was passed calling for the appointment of a committee to confer with a similar committee of the former Social Democratic Party for the purpose of effecting an amalgamation of the two parties. The following comrades were elected as a committee for this purpose: Collins, Kaplan, Belyin, Stangor, Morgan, Sindler, Richter, Joergensen, Smiley, Klenke and Sanders.

A collection was taken which amounted to $12.15.

The meeting then adjourned.

M. H. TAFT, Secretary.

An Effective Propagandist

A Los Angeles correspondent sends us a glowing report of the propaganda work which Comrade J. Blitt Wilson is doing in Southern California, which we regret to say, through lack of space we are unable to publish in full. After paying a well deserved tribute to Comrade Wilson's all round ability as a speaker and debater our correspondent states that during the last month Comrade Wilson has spoken as few as twenty-seven times in Los Angeles and vicinity under the auspices of the Social Democratic Section in that city besides making trips in the interior to San Bernardino, Redlands and Pasadena, speaking to audiences which constantly increased in numbers and enthusiasm.

On the 6th of July Comrade Wilson attended the Socialist picnic at Long Beach, and gave an address on "Patriotism" that was an eye opener to many of the "representative people of the county" who as our correspondent states were present.

The above is but a small portion of the report received regarding the activity of Comrade Wilson who seems to have found a most fertile field for his energies in Southern California. We can well believe that his work is thoroughly appreciated by the comrades and those who have listened to his addresses, for his ability and talent as a speaker has long been recognized by the Chicago Socialists with whom he has wrought in the common cause for many years past.

CORRESPONDENCE

To Indiana Socialists

Comrades, the Indiana delegates to the national convention held a conference on the afternoon of Thursday, Aug. 1, at which a committee of seven members was elected to submit plans for reorganization of the state. Following is the committee:

Hamilton, Indianapolis; Adams, Brazil; Skuta, Evansville; Benko, Kokomo; Kessler, Richmond; Weir, Ft. Wayne and O'Neal, Terre Haute.

Comrade O'Neal was elected secretary of the committee.

It was decided that the present state committee be continued until their successors are elected.

The branches of the S. D. P. (Chicago board and Springfield locals) are urged immediately to take up the question of reorganization of the state and suggestions and recommendations, to be submitted to the secretary of reorganization committee at the earliest possible moment so that said committee may submit to a referendum vote of branches and locals a plan of state organization based on the suggestions made.

Comrades, you are urged to take this matter up immediately in order that systematic agitation and propaganda may be secured as soon as possible. There are thirty branches and locals in the state and many cities and towns yet to be organized before the winter months.

All communications regarding state organization should be addressed to James O'Neal, 321 N. 3rd St., Terre Haute, Ind.

Fraternally yours, James O'Neal, Sec.

Call for State Convention

Davenport, Iowa, Aug. 8, '31.

COMRADES: You are hereby notified that a convention of the Social Democratic Party of Iowa is called to meet in the city of Des Moines, Iowa, on Thursday, September 3, 1931. The following organizations are entitled to representation at said convention:

All local branches of the Social Democratic Party of Iowa.

All unaffiliated social organizations in the State of Iowa recognizing the class struggle and the necessity of independent political action.

The basis of representation at the convention will be as follows: All local organizations will be entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members of fractional part thereof. Unorganized counties as per statement above.

The business to be considered by the convention will be:

1. Perfecting a unified socialist organization in the State of Iowa.

2. Nominating candidates for State Uicket.

3. Transacting such other business as may be properly brought before the convention.

It is sincerely hoped that every socialist organization in the State of Iowa will be represented at the convention, as we desire to make the convention a most successful one, and we therefore call on all organizations and individuals to help us in our efforts. Correspondence is solicited.

THE STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE, Social Democratic Party of Iowa, W. A. JACOBS, State Secretary.

BOOK REVIEW.

SOCIALISM AND THE HOME, by May

Walden Kerr. Pocket Library of Socialism. Price 5 cents. Chas. H. Kerr & Co., 54-56th Ave., Chicago, Ill.

The latest number of the well known Pocket Library, which bears the above title, comes at an opportune moment when a considerable number of women are becoming interested in the Socialist movement and joining the branches and local Socialist organizations. Until now there has been very little socialist literature written for women by women, and this pamphlet will go far to remedy this serious deficiency. Most of the literature which has already appeared upon this subject has been of a character more fitted for the student of broad economic problems, than the ordinary wage working or home keeping women whose environment has been in no sense favorable towards acquiring a knowledge of socialism in this manner. But the writer of this pamphlet has taken a very different and we think, more effective method of introducing the subject. The details of housekeeping and things pertaining thereto, such as food, clothing, wages, etc., which come under the personal supervision of women, and in which at least the wives of the working class are perforce interested, are used as a starting point wherewith to attract the attention of the woman reader. The deductions from the observations thereon, inevitably lead up to socialism, and in such an easy simple manner as to be

Reports of Organizers of the South, West and 5th District Divisions, on public meetings, party press, financial returns, and general agitation for the past week.

A record of growing activity.

NORTH SIDE.

Wednesday eve at Oak and Franklin Streets Comrades Baur, Sand and Roland spoke to a good sized crowd—100 to 150 persons.

75 Calls were distributed and a collection of one dollar and twenty-seven cents was taken.

Thursday evening at Walton Place and North Clark Street the usual good crowd assembled to listen to the speakers. Comrade Davies disappointed us but Comrades Sand and Collins both gave interesting talks.

100 Calls were distributed and a collection was taken.

Friday evening at Roscoe and Diversey Comrade Klenke, who was to speak failed to appear.

The meeting was called off, a short discussion then took place. Calls were distributed and two new members secured.

In the future the 24th Ward comrades will speak themselves. They know that to be successful, they must rely on no one but themselves.

The meetings at N. Clark and Center Streets and Sheffield and Wrightwood Avenues were postponed on account of the picnic at Manila Grove.

The largest and most interested crowd of listeners heard Com. Ryan of California and Comrade J. Wanhope speak at the corner of North Clark St. and North Ave. last Tuesday evening. Comrade Ryan is a splendid speaker and was ably assisted by Com. Wanhope, whose ability is also known.

One hundred Calls were distributed and a collection taken.

The picnic at Manila Grove, given by the 24th Ward Branch, was a complete success.

Despite of some drawback (a party meeting to hear report of delegates), it seemed as if the enthusiasm and energy of the 24th Ward Branch proves itself capable of overcoming all obstacles and carrying the affair on to success.

About 300 persons, men, women and children, were in the park at 6 p. m. and quite a few came in later.

Comrade Knox and Morris spoke for about 30 minutes each. Socialism was their subject. The fun lasted until after 10 p. m. when all adjourned feeling they had a good time at that picnic at least.

It is reported a good round sum was realized of which the Call will get a good part. Good luck to the 24th Ward Branch. I forgot to say 100 Calls were distributed.

WEST SIDE.

The west side organizers held their regular meeting last Sunday, 10 p. m., at the Temple. About 100, 10th, 11th, 12th and 13th Wards. Final vote was taken in regard to the abolition of the division organization with the following results, ayes: 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, 24th, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th, 30th, total 3. After the motion had been declared lost by the chairman Comrade G. Evans presented a draft for By-laws, which was ordered in the Workers' Call. The picnic Committee reported having secured Bergman's Grove for September 15th and presented the tickets to each organizer. On motion it was decided to give the Workers' Call 50 per cent of the net proceeds.

The division organizer reported having held 16 open air meetings during the week and having made arrangements to reorganize the 20th Ward.

SOUTH SIDE.

After three or four weeks of idleness on the south side the comrades are now actively engaged in fighting capitalism. Six meetings (out door) were held last week all being well attended. A good number of Call cards, Literature and Workers' Call were sold; twice the number of meetings have been arranged for the coming week. At the 3rd and Halsted Street meeting last Saturday night, where Comrade Saunders spoke, great interest was aroused through the attempts of a Republican politician to show that capitalism was the only salvation for the workingman and that Socialism only aimed at breaking up the home, killing off "incentive" and at best was only an expression of a few dissatisfied people who wished to divide the wealth that others had created. As a result of the discussion, every copy of the Workers' Call sold besides a large amount of literature. Three applications for membership, 9 or 10 Workers' Call cards and the speaker touching on trade unions as pleased the audience that one trade unionist showed his way to the front and stated that heretofore he had always opposed discussing politics in the unions but had now changed his mind and gave the speaker an earnest invitation to speak the following Sunday at the Peoples' Picnic of local union No. 1—Cabinet Opera, Blue Island. Great interest in being displayed in the Socialist Rifle and Drum Corps, three new recruits were added this week—Oiga Horvath, Alma Horvath, and May Boyie, making a total of 20 active members. The following donations were received: Comrade Mat Whalen, 9th Ward, $1.00 Comrade M. Hirsch......50 Comrade Saunders 30 copies Pocket Library of Socialism.

Socialist Temple Notes.

The reception given by the Ladies Auxiliary to the delegates from the "Unity Convention" at the Temple last Saturday evening, was a huge success, over 700 being in attendance. An excellent program was rendered consisting of vocal and instrumental music and elocution after which refreshments were served.

Comrade B. Berlyn delivered an excellent address on the present aspect of the development of the class struggle. He was listened to by a large audience who manifested their approval by bursts of applause.

Next Sunday Comrade Philip Brown of the Chicago N. E. B. will speak at the Temple. As this is the first time any of the S. D. P. speakers have been heard at the Temple we hope for a large attendance.

Socialist Co-operative.

Pursuant to call, the board of directors of the Socialist Co-operative met at 10 A. M., Sunday, August 11th, in the Socialist Temple, 129 South Western Avenue. Present: Kerr, Huggins, Wochinsky, Petersen, Kracht, Untermann. Absent: Buehlin, Cooke, Goodspeed.

The following officers were elected by unanimous vote: Manager, Walter Huggins; Secretary, J. M. Cook; Treasurer, Chas. H. Kerr.

These officers were instructed to secure a charter at once.

Comrade Wochinsky announced that he would advance $50 in order to make an immediate purchase of stock possible. Comrade Kracht pledged $10 for the same purpose. $25 were further announced to have been promised by comrade Untermann, so that with the $125 on hand, the Socialist Co-operative would have a working capital of $175.

In view of this, it was decided not to hold any further propaganda meetings, but to open the co-operative as soon as possible. It was the unanimous opinion of the directors, that the opening of the co-op would do more toward attracting members and sympathizers than any propaganda meeting could. The manager was therefore instructed to buy a stock of goods at once, using his own discretion in their selection, and to have the Socialist Co-operative ready to do business next Saturday, August 17th, from 7 to 9 o'clock P. M.

The board then adopted the following special rules on motion of comrade Kerr:

RULE 1. A purchasing card may be issued by any member to any person not a member of the Socialist Party to whom he may desire to extend his privilege of buying goods at cost. The holder of such purchasing card shall have the privilege of buying goods on the same terms as a member and shall receive the same rebate subject to a deduction of 25 cents at each quarterly payment to cover the expense of keeping his account. But no one not an actual member shall be allowed to vote or hold office.

RULE 2. Any member or any holder of a Purchasing Card desiring to purchase some article not carried in stock by the Socialist Co-operative may deposit the retail price of said article with the manager or his representative who shall issue a receipt, and said receipt shall be promptly redeemed in goods or in cash by the Socialist Co-operative at the option of the holder. No officer or employee shall under any circumstances issue receipt for money deposited without at the same time filling out a stub which shall fully explain the transaction and shall be kept on file in the office of the Socialist Co-operative.

The treasurer was authorized to order 1,000 membership cards, 2,000 cards for non-members and 1,000 receipts for deposits on goods not in stock.

The following new applications for membership were received: Comrade B. L. Ball, with $1.00; comrade Geo. D. Evans, with 50 cents; comrade Ed. J. B. Coye.

The board then adjourned and will meet at 8 P. M., Friday, August 16th, in the Temple.

Ernest Untermann,
Secretary pro tem.

Will Open Aug. 17th.

At the Socialist Temple, 129 South Western Avenue, Saturday evening, August 17th, the Socialist Co-operative will begin supplying its members and friends with staple goods; and the store in the Temple will hereafter be open every week day evening from 7 to 9, and on Sunday evenings before and after the meeting.

Only party members can become members of the Co-operative with a voice in its control. Membership fee $1.00, of which at least 50 cents must be paid in advance, the balance to be taken out of rebates on purchases. Any one not a party member may obtain a purchasing card from any member which will entitle him to the same rebates that members receive but without any vote in the affairs of the Co-operative. Goods will be sold for cash only at ordinary retail prices, for example:

Choice Java and Mocco coffee.....30c
Select Santos coffee.....30c
Select uncolored Japan tea.....30c
Pure baking powder, pound can.....25c
Best whole rice......04c
Finest sugar or talc......06c
Select California prunes......08c
Best seeded raisins......10c
Canned salmon, 1 lb. can......10c
Canned corn or tomatoes, 8c to 10c
Good oil sardines, per can......08c
Best matches, per dozen boxes......10c
Pure vinegar, per gallon, with jug.....25c
Good soap, 10 bars......25c
Best bluing or ammonia, large bottle......01c
Salt soda, per pound......01c
Clothespins, per dozen......01c

At the end of each quarter, the actual net profit will be figured up; of this one-eighth will be set aside for socialist propaganda; (most of this will naturally go to the Workers' Call until the paper is on a paying basis); one-eighth will be set aside as a reserve fund for the increase of the work of the Co-operative; and the other three-fourths will be returned to members and holders of purchasing cards in proportion to their purchases.

Buy your supplies at the Socialist Temple, and stop paying a profit to capitalists.

Carnegie as an Educator.

A correspondent of Ella Wheeler Wilcox protested against her praising Andrew Carnegie and she retorted by saying that his course was the best that could be pursued under the circumstances as the masses must first be educated before any lasting benefit to the world could be obtained. While the principle she goes on is correct, it does not follow that he aims at carrying it out. The result that she thinks he will attain in the course of a few generations of the use of his libraries, can be attained in the next few years by the education of the people in their class interests and while Carnegie's course cannot prevent the attainment of this end, still, a proper use of his wealth would hasten it and therefore Ella is wrong in her statement that he is doing the best possible thing for society in building and endowing libraries.

Always remember that the main bulwark of capitalism is the ignorance of the workers. They are in darkness only because they do not know the way out. Are you doing all you can to show them the path?

And Notes From Trade Union Journals and Exchanges, Throughout the United States.

Carroll D. Wright, United States Labor Commissioner, says there are 3,500,000 workmen unemployed.

New "official" cap for Pullman car porters objected to by the latter. Objection will not be sustained.

New Zealand "labor arbitration" scheme has failed and must be abandoned. Reason: "nothing to arbitrate."

Two striking silk weavers at Paterson, N. J., were given 30 days in jail for defying a court injunction by picketing.

A cablegram from London says if the steel trust defeats the strikers the British manufacturers will go into the trustification business.

Twenty-five million dollar hat trust is about to be incorporated in New Jersey. School text book trust will manufacture heads to fit the product.

Out of 14 per cent in wages of textile workers in Fall River, Cutler mills ordered by capitalist owners. "What means this strike?"

Machine which does the work of six bank clerks in counting and weighing gold, was introduced into several Chicago banks last week. Usual result: "consternation" amongst the bank employees.

Dr. Benf. Andrews recently declared that coming generation may think it right to kill "decadents, who poison the fountain of life." Bad outlook for the parasites who live on tax, interest, and profit.

Local Trades Unions are passing resolutions "deploring" action of Western employees of steel trust in refusing to strike. Sacred right of "deploring" must be preserved at all hazards and exercised occasionally.

Lots of commercial small fry failures in Germany last week. Socialists contested a vacant seat in Reichstag and polled over 45,000 votes. For the same seat 7,000 Socialist votes were recorded in 1898. See that bump?

Returns of the French census show that the population has increased but 412,000 in the last five years. As a compensation for this, it may be mentioned that the socialist vote has more than doubled in the same period.

Toronto Trades and Labor Council voted almost unanimously to support, both morally and financially, the movement for socialism in Canada. All over the Dominion the sentiment in favor of the formation of a spear-club Socialist party is growing.—Cleveland Citizen.

Residents of the North Side are preparing to get ready to take steps to inaugurate a "crusade" against the "dirties" which infect that neighborhood. The preliminary "denunciation" has already been spoken by several "indignant citizens."

Four British trades unionists, said to represent 100,000 workmen, are on their way to this country to study the economic conditions of labor in America, their expenses being defrayed by a Liverpool capitalist. Several others will follow as soon as the steel strike is over.

Twelve prisoners convicted of non-support of their children were released from the Toledo (Ohio) workhouse this week because that institution was unable to support them. President Shortall of the local "Humane Society," there's a "moral" somewhere in this for you, if you can only dig it out.

Montana judge declares that Standard Oil Co. attempted to bribe him with $250,000 to decide a suit in their favor. Standard Oil Co. says the other party to the lawsuit did the trick for $100,000. A fixed "wage scale" might perhaps straighten out the tinks and tangles involved in operations of this sort.

So far the Allen-Chalmers Co. have not been able to obtain sufficient "wages" to operate their machine shops. The strikers' pickets have been so remarkably successful in foiling their efforts in this direction that "police protection" begins to loom up as the last resort of the few baffled capitalists who have not yet conceded the 8 hour day.

Trusts of a Week.

From the Cleveland Citizen.

Four-fifths of the coke ovens of Pennsylvania have passed under the control of H. F. Frick and thus become closely federated with the billion-dollar steel trust.—The soft coal interests continue to move toward a common center, and in at least five states the new combinations will be largely in control.—One hundred smelters in Utah, Nevada and other Western states have formed a $12,000,000 trust.—A $10,000,000 dredging trust is announced from Chicago.—Another attempt is being made to combine the leading shoe manufacturers.—About 3,000 grocery stores of Philadelphia are to be brought into a $4,000,000 combine which hopes to clean up 100 per cent a year.—A $50,000,000 cotton trust is organizing down South.—The cigar trust is building what will be the largest factory in the world in New Orleans, and is acquiring control of the best tobacco plantations in Cuba, Porto Rico and other islands.—The rubber trust is preparing to absorb independent plants and plantations in Central and South America.—A $50,000,000 cast iron trust is being formed.—Laundry machine makers are trustifying at $30,000,000.—Tie importers and handlers are forming a trust.—A $4,000,000 house are organizing a trust.—A $100,000,000 combine.—A huge international window glass trust is forming.

THE "MAN IN THE STREET"

Remarks on Some Far-fetched Objections Usually Launched Against Socialist Agitators.

A common remark hurled at socialist by pin-headed ignoramus is, "If you fellows don't like the way things are, get out of the country!" This is an exasperating exclamation because it evidences a hopeless case in its author, who cannot be reached through education and is therefore out of the influence of Socialist propaganda. But in answer to it, it can be said for the benefit of those who hear it and who are intelligent enough to be influenced, that our workmen who represent the class that makes the country, the Socialist do not propose to get out of it but intend to make it a country in which to live.

To be the cause of a condition or to simply point out a condition which exists and explain its cause, are two different positions. Yet these positions are ignorantly or maliciously linked by opponents of Socialism when they say, "Socialists," "apostles of discontent."

Notwithstanding the fact that discontent exists alongside of highly developed capitalism and is increasing to such an extent as to alarm the capitalist in his stronghold, the blame for it is put on the Socialists who are without power and have nothing to do with the existing order. Discontent to the Socialist is simply an indication of progress towards the eradication of its cause. Instead of being the cause of discontent, Socialism is the remedy for it, and rallying round its banners, the discontented of every land push on in the hope of happiness which is denied to the great majority of mankind under the capitalist order of society.

"You fellows are talking nonsense, this is a free country!" yells a man from the crowd to the Socialist speaker. The Socialist knows that in the sense in which this is meant that it is so, and because it is so, is the reason why he is out urging people to use that freedom—the ballot—in such a manner as to make that freedom of value.

Just because we are free to change conditions is a poor reason for not doing so, yet such is the logic of the man who makes the objection above noted. Unless the freedom we have be exercised it becomes valueless or worse still, is used against us, such being the case with the working class now when they vote their oppressors into power. The Socialist is agitating for the intelligent use of the freedom we have in order to gain the still greater freedom which awaits such action.

Barbarism Militant.

The Chicago Tribune says that there is a growing tendency on the part of the European powers to utilize the militant and barbarous subjects of their dependencies for service in their armies. After enumerating the numerous instances in which the powers can put this policy into force, the Tribune remarks that in this way the continental great powers of Europe, such as France, Germany, Russia, etc., may be relieved of that compulsory military service which is such a drawback to trade and industry. A very nice arrangement, one would say, in which the inhabitants of a country are allowed to stay at home and enrich themselves at industrial pursuits while their barbarous subjects fight the battles of the fatherland. Very nice, too, for the capitalist who appropriates the major part of the results of the above mentioned industries. There is another chapter, however, which is of much importance and comes nearer getting at the main gist of the thing. This second fact is that the conscripted armies of Europe are becoming more and more unreliable for the service which the capitalist governments clearly see is inevitable for the future. This service consists in putting down the working class in times of labor disturbances and revolution. It is a fact which can no longer be concealed that the armies of these countries are so impregnated with socialism that in some cases the troops refuse to fire on strikers, and in times of revolution would undoubtedly go over in great numbers to the people. It is this fact which makes the government of Europe so ready to consider the proposition of employing barbarian troops. It is this important fact which the Tribune inadvertently forgot to mention.

National Debts.

Mr. O. P. Austin, chief of the U. S. Bureau of Statistics, in an article in the North American Review, says that the national debts of all the nations of the world amount to $31,500,000,000, or ten times the sum that they were indebted one hundred years ago. This is the amount that nations owe each other and their own capitalists. In other words, the nations owe the nations $31,500,000,000, for the world owes the world this sum. As a man cannot be in debt to himself neither can a body of men be indebted to itself. But one body can be indebted to another body and this is the case with the nations. In the nations a small body of capitalists hold papers showing that the great mass of laborers are indebted to them for the enormous sum of $31,500,000,000. Where is there any hope for the workingmen in any party that says this amount must be paid?

The interest that every man, woman and child in France must pay on the national debt is $45.25 every year. However, the activity of the French Socialists forbodes the end of their term in this tragedy of capitalism.

Don't forget that in every workingman there is possible material for making a revolution. It is the material developed by putting the party press within his reach.

WANTED—YOUNG MEN.

Writer in Capitalist Journal Calls for "Statesmanship" to Head of Socialism.

As a general rule the capitalist press is too prudent to exhibit its alarm over the menace which it represents the present system through Socialism. Nevertheless the deduction of "public opinion" by no means flows from the above. The ordinary careful reader can observe innumerable instances where the fear of the capitalist class as regards the future is plainly apparent, though the term "socialism" may not appear in the forebodings, which generally take the shape of warnings in favor of a reform. A remarkable illustration of this is given in the article which appears in the Record Herald of August 5th as a contribution to the "Current Topics Club" the matter for which has been written as the paper itself states by "Experts and Specialists."

The writer, whose name appears above the article as William Edward Curtis, Esq., Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, takes as his subject "Present Opportunities for Young Men" and devotes two columns towards showing that a large opportunity exists in politics for the employment of said young men. It is of the utmost importance, he says, "that there should be in politics young men who cannot be bought and who by their influence alone can arrest such a possibility."

The "young man" is to enter politics for the purpose of curbing the political power of concentrated wealth, checking the "tax-dodger and giving a halt upon the plutocracy who purchase the language of laws which add to their wealth." The "possibility" alluded to is the dangerous results which might ensue from having things as they are at present. While Mr. Curtis admits that political power is at present in the hands of the great capitalists he does not tell his readers how the "young man" in question is going to set about putting restraints upon them.

"His championship of a high order" and "unselfish patriotism" is all the equipment that the "young man" needs, but as the present holders of political power are all supplied liberally with similar qualifications it is rather difficult to see just how they are to be displaced. The capitalist class may be safely trusted to see that the "young man" who "cannot be bought," or in other words the fellow who honestly thinks their power should be limited, never gets into a position where he can carry out his "unselfish patriotism" ideas. Then follows this remarkable passage which is perhaps of more interest to the working class than to the "young man" for whom Mr. Curtis sees an opportunity in politics:

While the country is prosperous and the laborer is being paid his wages with regularity and all is contentment there seems to be no impending trouble, but when the day of prosperity ceases, as it MUST IN TIME, and the laborer is not regularly paid and reductions in wages are made and bad feeling is engendered between the possessors of great properties and the people employed by them, who can the voter, what will happen if the feeling of resentment PREVENTS THOSE VOTERS FROM BEING CONTROLLED BY THE USE OF MONEY AND THE PEACEFUL INTERESTS OF a healthy people are menaced by adverse legislation and their property is attached and destroyed by discontented workmen? May not their money, NO LONGER EARNED, BEING TAKEN BY CHIEF OF VOTES be directed to the purchase of arms and ammunition?

How many workingmen readers of the Record Herald's "Current Topics" grasped the meaning which Curtis "expert and specialist" wished to convey in this passage? Does it not state explicitly that law is a creature of property interests, that the so called free and independent citizen is in fact a puppet or unconsciously controlled by the pecuniary interests of wealthy people, or in other words by the capitalist class? And does it not state also that the power of changing this condition of affairs lies in the hands of the workingclass alone? Does it not state that when those workingmen finally realize that intolerable conditions of their servitude they will menace the property interests of their masters with adverse legislation? Is it not in short a warning against SOCIALISM which this "expert and specialist" attempts to give his readers, without mentioning the word?

And finally does he not say that the present system depends for its continuance upon the ignorance of the workingmen, and the ability of the capitalists to maintain that ignorance?

Yes, Mr. Curtis, "expert and specialist," acknowledges the truth of the statement made by Marx over fifty years ago, that when capitalism becomes "incompetent to assure an existence to the slave within his slavery" it will disappear. And it is to save off this (to him) evil day that he urges the "young man" to get into politics.

Mr. Curtis, "expert and specialist," sees the present economic class struggle and its outcome, so clearly, that he makes no secret of the possibility of physical force on the part of the capitalist class to offset "adverse legislation" on the part of the revolting workingmen.

So he wishes to create a corps of reactionary politicians who equipped with "statesmanship of a high order" and "unselfish patriotism" are to reconcile the irreconcilable, establish concord between tendencies inherently discordant, make the intolerable, tolerable, put back the time that MUST come, and permanently check the entire process of social evolution.

Mr. Curtis, "expert and specialist," though he is asking too much, such young men as he wants will not be forthcoming. In despite of the quality of "statesmanship or patriotism" there is no place for them. They must either stand upon one side or the other, with the capitalists or with the working class, for the Old order or the New. There is no room for the arbitrator, for there is nothing to arbitrate.

However it is not unimportant to so-called "expert and specialist" to admit in a capitalist journal that the question of all questions in the near future will be SOCIALISM VERSUS CAPITALISM.

FULL DISCLOSURE

Certain Jelut mills that were chosen by the strikers threaten to move away from that city as the McKeesport mills threatened to move last week. When the battle is over the steel trust will open its mills where it can operate them with the greatest profit regardless of all threats. Neither will it head off unprofitable mills in cities where the inhabitants remain loyal to it.

permitted to present him with $10,000 a month from their labor to the mine. Instantly demanded that eight hours constitute a day's work. Clark says that he would rather let the mine grow in the streets of Jerome than grant his miners an eight hour day, and declares that he will keep the mine closed for a year rather than surrender what he considers a first principle. Perhaps though Mr. Clark might be induced to use his influence in the United States Senate towards securing legislation for the purpose of shortening the hours of labor. Every body knows that politics and "business" are quite distant.

"Let the West stand alone," says a well known capitalist journal, editorially commending the action of the South Chicago Steel plant employees in refusing to obey the strike order. "Let the West stand alone. There is no reason why the skilled workers of the West should not have their own independent organization. There is no reason why they should become enmeshed in controversies about Eastern mills which do not concern them in the least." Now if this advice is for the good of all concerned, why didn't J. Pierpont Morgan "let the West stand alone"? Why did he incorporate the Western mills in the billion dollar steel trust? Why did he not let them have "their own independent organization" as the editorial says? If there is "no reason" why he should not have done so, then it might be said that there is "no reason" why the workers of the Western mills should not stand with their Eastern fellow workmen. But if there is a reason for the formation of the Trust, it will also go to explain the formation of the Amalgamated Association.

DIVIDE THE RESPONSIBILITY.

The crushing out of five lives in the grade crossing "accident" which occurred at Forty-Seventh Street and Stewart Avenue last Saturday has evoked the usual forest of misleading denunciations in the daily press, which such horrors generally bring forth. The doctorman who died in the hospital two days after the "accident," declared that his brake wouldn't work, while the officials of the company it is said, stand ready to swear that the brake was quite new, and everything that a brake should be. Several witnesses will testify that the Pittsburgh express, which plunged into the street car, was traveling at a rate of twenty miles per hour. This, the train crew are prepared to deny, so the outlook for the usual amount of perjured testimony at the inquiry is unobscuredly bright.

The tracks should have been elevated says the capitalist editorial writer who seeks to evolve a "moral" lesson from the catastrophe. Why were they not? Because the city authorities allowed the railroad corporation until 1904 to do the work. But the greed and neglect of the railroad company delayed the work and is therefore responsible for the slaughter. The unfortunate five were sacrificed in the "sacred cause of increased dividends."

Well, why not? In what does their fate differ from that of hundreds of thousands of others who annually pay a blood tribute for the same purpose, except that in the one case a few moments suffer to produce the effect that in the other is attained in a few years? The entombment of hundreds of miners annually, the death list occasioned through the explosions of rotten boilers, the mortality amongst children of the men dwelling, sweat shop and packing house employees the ravages of tuberculosis, small pox, typhoid fever amongst those unfortunate who are forced through capitalist economic conditions to dwell in filthy tenements and pest breeding surroundings, what are all these phenomena due to except the desire for increased dividends? To call special attention to the "arrest and neglect" of transportation companies, when a sensational "accident" occurs, and at the same time ignore the infinitely greater slaughter which is daily and hourly attendant upon the desire for "increased dividends" is an indispensable qualification for the hired scribe who would succeed in capitalist journalism.

It is a nice discrimination in hypocrisy that insists that the responsibility for such "accidents" must be placed entirely to the account of the desire for increased dividends on the part of the corporation. The class which principally furnishes the victims in itself not without responsibility in the matter. While they acquiesce in the continuance of the economic system of which "increased dividends" is the central object, they may more justly be considered victims of their own folly than of the "greed and neglect" of the railroad or any other capitalistic combination.

STATUS OF THE STRIKE.

Nothing unusual has taken place since last week that would change the relative position of the combatants in the great steel strike. On both sides the usual "victories" are being claimed. Here and there the strikers have been successful in inducing the union men to quit, noticeably so in Joliet and Milwaukee while many of them confidently predict that the South Chicago employees of the Trust will receive their decision and join the ranks of their brethren. From time to time President Shaffer makes statements purporting to show his confidence in ultimate victory for his side in the conflict.

On the other hand the Trust officials though not so liberal in making statements for publication, are bending all their energies towards showing the skilled workers that they are not altogether indispensable in the steel industry and that their places can be readily filled. The capitalist press, ever ready to do the bidding of the ruling class, from day to day publishes a series of reports showing that an increasing number of plants are being successfully operated by non union labor, and attached to these items may be generally found a denial from some local representative of the strikers, that any such gains have been made.

Here and there the militia are being held in readiness to preserve capitalist "law and order," should that institution be endangered by the anticipated action of the strikers. "Law and order" never suffered at the hands of the capitalist class and probably for this reason a letter from the Secretary of State for Ohio to the United States Steel Co., requesting compliance with the laws governing foreign corporations in Ohio, has been properly ignored by the officials of the latter combination.

According to the spokesman of the Amalgamated Association the strike has hardly yet begun, while the opposing forces try to give the impression that it is about over and that in any case they are rather indifferent about the entire matter.

And so the air is filled with rumors, statements, threats, probabilities, denials and assertions; all instinctively confusing and misleading. A long string of resolutions from the "Peace Convention Delegates" (whoever they may be) requesting President McKinley to urge upon Congress the establishment of arbitration, etc., etc., and also calling upon Morgan and Shaffer to submit their case to a "wise and impartial commission," indicates that the situation is not without its humorous side, but when the aforesaid "delegates" also resolve, "that they recommend that all governments should submit pending and future difficulties to the Hague Tribunal, as the eminent event of the century," they might properly be reminded that a joke carried too far is decidedly in bad taste.

All that can be definitely said however as to the developments of the week in regard to the steel strike is that all the players are not yet upon the stage. Organized labor and organized capital are preparing their forces for the decisive struggle and the end is not yet distinctly in sight.

In Memoriam.

We regret to announce the death of an old and tried socialist, K. P. Egan of the 15th Ward Branch. Comrade Egan died last Sunday morning from the effects of a surgical operation which had been performed upon him. He leaves a widow and three children. The funeral which took place on Wednesday was attended by many of the local comrades of the West Side.

Reason and Emotion.

How solicitous the capitalist press appears that the workers should always be guided by "reason" may be seen from the following editorial extract in the Tribune on the coming out of the Joliet steel plant employees. "When members of the Amalgamated Association at Joliet voted last Sunday not to go on a strike reason guided them. When day before yesterday they reconsidered their action and voted to quit work they allowed themselves to be guided by their emotions, which in this case was a bad guide."

There is an old and well known saying that "second thoughts are best" but it evidently doesn't hold good when conclusions inimical to the interests of the ruling class are reached through reconsideration. The Tribune farther on in the same editorial admits that the employees feared to be "disloyal" to the union and that this fear induced them to go on strike. The fellow who is "disloyal" to his own class is therefore guided by reason, while the man who sticks by them is moved by "emotion." So friend workmen, if you wish to be guided by reason, don't strike yourself, but when your fellow workers do so, just get into a militia man's uniform, take your market and shoot holes through the emotional felloes. You will then have fully proved your title to be called a "reasonable being."

HOW TO WIN THE WAY.

Secretary Tighe, whom President Shaffer of the Steel Workers sent as his representative to Chicago, has discovered, says the Daily News, that the trust owns the workers of South Chicago. This extraordinary piece of intelligence will be very interesting to the union men of the East. Secretary Tighe is to be congratulated on his powers of observation, and should persevere in the use of them.

The non-union men who took the place of strikers at the Allis-Chalmers plant are said to be suffering from the unsanitary condition of their quarters in the works. This shows a very strange inconsistency on the part of the company. When the first three bus loads of scabs arrived at the plant they found a sumptuous feast spread for their delectation. So the worms have turned so soon, eh! Truly, all that glitters is not gold.

It has been found at last and this time it is by Gov. Thomas G. Jones of Alabama. He says: "These mob executions are brutalizing our children, blunting our religion and undermining our civilization." The poor people of Alabama who toil away their lives from early childhood in the collieries and cotton mills will now be able to understand what is the matter with them. We were aware that there were brutalizing, blunting and undermining influences at work and now that we know the nature of the disease we will be able to cure the patient. Let us be thankful for such wise and resolute governors as Jones.

The medical fraternity of London is greatly exercised over the recent wonderful growth of the Christian Science cause in that city. That Christian Science and such like refined, fashionable lunacies should become popular in England is a matter not to be wondered at. Like all other capitalist countries at this stage of economic progress it has its decaying middle class who, feeling the ground loosening under them, are ready to be distracted by any high class theory or conjecture that may come their way. It would not surprise us if Christian Science should obtain a strong foothold not only in England but in continental Europe as well.

The capitalist journals of this city have been devoting columns to the fact that for the first seven months of the current calendar year there was an excess of exports over imports amounting to $24,554,000 an increase of about $15,000,000 over that of last year. This is good imperialist ammunition, and appeals very strongly to the "patriotism" of the unthinking. To the socialist it represents just as many millions of dollars' worth of the sweat and blood of the American working class shipped away across the seas without any direct equivalent which can be consumed by themselves. Just so many millions of "surplus products" wrung by capitalism from the workers of America. Truly a high price for the American people to pay for that fabulous ornament of commercialism, the "balance of trade."

The government at Washington has discontinued all information concerning the disability and death of enlisted men in the Philippines except what comes by mail. It has cost the government $1,400 a month to sustain the cable dispatches which formerly contained this information. Therefore, in the interests of economy it was discontinued. Relatives and friends of the soldiers are raising a great protest. The government, however, is quite right in the matter. Why should a capitalist state be any more solicitous for the welfare of those who fight for its markets, than the individual capitalist at home for the welfare of the stupid creatures who manufacture things to be sold? Is not one man as cheap as another, and the man who enlists to do the fighting perhaps the greater fool of the two?

The Gatebrook young lady who has come to Chicago to endeavor to organize the retail clerks for the purpose of bettering their condition, we venture to say has struck a pretty hard proposition. The average retail clerk would consider it an affront if you were to approach him for such a purpose, holding it beneath his dignity to belong to a "labor" organization. Not that his condition is so prosperous as to preclude the need of organization, for the poor wretch on a seven dollar a week salary can not be called affluent, but his training and environment put him into this state of mind. He has been taught to believe that with a proper exercise of his faculties he will some day be rich himself. The conditions of his daily work compel him to wear the best clothes he can possibly afford and to assume the air of respectability. Consequently it is no wonder that he turns up his nose at the means "ordinary laborers" employ to better their condition, and should be the most stupid and impetuous in the working class movement for freedom.

"Down at the bottom of it all lies the generally prevalent tendency toward luxurious living. Girls are not satisfied with the simpler style of living. Instead of that they look forward to having homes furnished extravagantly and elegantly. And the men know they are unable to provide the luxuries expected." In this manner the matrimonial question is summed up by a Maryland preacher. The Record-Herald, good capitalist lecher that it is, is sportingly agreeing and adds: "The girls must understand that not all of them can live in luxury any more than all the men can be millionaires or leaders in the every day struggle for existence." At another time the Record-Herald will be telling us that discontent is the mother of progress. Give us a considerable element of young Americans who are intelligently discontented and it will not take them very long to establish the socialist republic, under which all homes can be furnished "extravagantly and elegantly." It need be to produce contented women, and no man will have the privilege of riding upon his fellow's back in "the every-day struggle for existence." The hope of humanity lies in its discontented men and women.

F. BOSWELL.

ENDORSES THE APPEAL.

J. E. G. of Socialist Party Urges Men to Assist Striking Employees of Steel Trust.

National Headquarters of THE SOCIALIST PARTY, St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 18, 1901. To the State, Territorial and Local Organizations, composing the SOCIALIST PARTY:

Comrades—Your attention is hereby directed to a call for financial aid, issued on Monday, Aug. 6th, 1901, by the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers of the United States. The language of this call is of special interest to Socialists, inasmuch as the very opening sentence states that "the United States Steel Corporation is now WAGING WAR against organized labor."

In this world the Amalgamated Association unconsciously recognizes and indirectly endorses the political position of the Socialist Party on the "class struggle." This appeal also states that the Steel Trust is "fighting against the right of workingmen to combine," a "blow not alone directed at the Amalgamated, but at organized labor in general, the accomplishment of which would affect every organized body in the United States." The herein confessed weakness of the trade unions in the class-battle consists in the fact that while holding the forces of capitalism in check on the industrial field, they (the unions), are at a vital disadvantage, owing to the complete mastery and oppressive use of the political powers by the capitalist class. In vain have these facts been heretofore urged upon our brethren in the trade unions. Notwithstanding our supplications for a hearing, we have received a deaf ear, and by none more so than by our unfortunate brethren in the Amalgamated Association.

APPEAL TO SOCIALISTS.

Comrades, in this, the hour of our brethren's extremity, when thousands of these brave sons of the working class are fighting the most heroic battle of labor's history, stony indeed, would be our hearts were we to ignore the many and dignified appeal of their great labor organization. Inasmuch as most of the grounds of their published appeal accord in spirit, if not altogether in letter, with some of the very facts which Socialists have repeatedly urged as indicating the political isolation and consequent weakness of the trade unions; and in view of the further facts that the Socialist party is an organized political body of the working class, whose existence is threatened and may be involved; inasmuch as our party is that the Socialist Party is an organized capital than any body of workingmen organized on the industrial field; therefore, we, your National Committee, feel justified and impelled to issue this "Letter of Appeal and Advice," comprised in the following terms:

1. We urge upon each and every member of our party employed by the United States Steel Corporation, in mills or industries which may now or hereafter be affected, that it is your duty as a Socialist to join the Amalgamated Association or the union of your respective craft.

2. It is the duty of all Socialists, especially those residing within the strike field, to give the men of the Amalgamated Association, their moral, political and practical aid.

3. We recommend that popular subscriptions be opened by the Socialist press, and all funds be forwarded to the National Secretary for transmission to the Amalgamated Association.

4. We call upon all comrades, especially those residing in localities affected, to form Socialist strike committees, composed of both men and women, whose duty it shall be to aid the strikers by collecting donations of money, food and clothing, or giving social entertainments.

5. We urge that the boycotts of the Amalgamated Association be rigidly upheld by the comrades of the Socialist party.

6. That where compatible with the interests of the various unions, it would be most praiseworthy for our comrades to urge that all or part of the money raised through Labor day celebrations be donated to the families of needy strikers.

ADVICE TO SOCIALISTS AND TRADE UNIONISTS.

In those localities affected by the strike where Socialists are in political power, it would be in accordance with and demanded by the principles of the Socialist party, that all the POWER OF GOVERNMENT be used to PROTECT THE WORKING CLASS against the oppression of the capitalist class. If needs be and in accordance with existing legal requirements, contingent funds of public officers could be used for the purchase of the necessary food and clothing for the families of the men who are on strike. (where same exist) be used to DISTRIBUTE AID TO THE NEEDY FAMILIES of the strikers. While advising these and additional methods of relief, be in accordance with the above, that may occur to the wisdom of our comrades, we must needs regard the same as merely temporary palliatives, and this view cannot be too strongly inculcated in the minds of our striking brethren. We must also admonish them that the ONLY HOPE for the emancipation of the WORKING CLASS is by the working class itself through class conscious political action, in the folds of the great International Socialist movement. It is eminently proper in this connection to call the attention of the strikers to the fact that ELECTIONS ARE IMMINENT in localities affected by the strike; that the struggle may be a prolonged one, and that the only way to prevent the use of the power of government against the working class is for the working class to ORGANIZE into the SOCIALIST PARTY and through class conscious voting at the ballot box, SEIZE the governing POWER, and use it in the interest of the working class and against the interest of the capitalist class. While the TRADE UNION as such CANNOT ACT as a political party, it is the trade unionist's duty to join and aid the political organization of the working class, in order that the trade union and Socialist movements may act in conjunction, as far as possible, in emancipating the workers from wage-slavery and installing the co-operative commonwealth.

Trade unionists desiring to organize the Socialist Party in their respective localities may obtain instructions or the services of an organizer by applying to the undersigned or the secretary of the state committee of the Socialist party in whichever state the applicant may be located.

The line of demarcation between the capitalist class and the working class is becoming more sharply defined with each succeeding strike. The duty of every Socialist is to be in the forefront of the class conflict.

Comrades, let us contribute of such resources as we may be able to command in aid of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers. G. A. HOEHN, W. H. BAIRD, M. BALLARD DUNN, E. VAL PUTNAM, L. E. HILDEBRAND.

National Secretary's Correspondence.

Medford, Okla., Aug. 10.—On behalf of the Socialist party of Oklahoma I hasten to send greetings to you as National Secretary of the new united party, and offer our allegiance. It was on account of the miscarriage of the letter containing the credentials of our delegate that we were not represented at the convention.

I suppose that the control of dates for Comrades Vail and Wiltshire will now be in your hands. If so, we should like a few dates made for each in Oklahoma this fall. If we can get them please notify us as soon as possible.

Fraternalty yours, G. HALBROOKS, Territorial Secretary.

Newcastle, Pa., Aug. 12.—I have received a letter from Comrade Wiltshire, saying he was coming to our town to deliver an address for us soon. He tells me to write you for a date. Kindly fix it as soon as possible. We have five thousand men on strike and need all the assistance we can get. Yours for Socialism, W. J. WHITE, Secretary.

P. S.—We had a picnic on the 10th, and President Shaffer of the Steel Workers spoke. He gave us (the Socialists) great praise. We also had Max Hayes. It proved a field day for Socialism.

Yours truly, A. L. HEILING, Secretary.

SOUTH SIDE.

The active comrades of the South Side carried their efforts out for something last week; twenty new members were taken in, $5.35 was collected for Workers' Call cards. Most all the meetings advertised were well attended, though a few were not on account of rain.

The meetings that were held were made interesting by the questions asked by the audience, showing their anxiety to learn more of Socialism. Last Friday a meeting was held at Baldwin's Hall, Thirty-second and Dearborn streets, and was addressed by Comrade Conley, Sims and Saunders, where nine-tenths of the audience were colored. Nine colored men gave in their applications for membership in the Socialist Party. Others vowed never to vote the Democratic or Republican tickets again.

In spite of the rain, a number of meetings were held Saturday night and Sunday afternoon. Comrade Wainhope, after stampeding two of three comrades of the "Korean" Dugma, addressed a large number in the rain. The speaker wanted to stop several times, but the audience urged him on, and he continued—the result of which was two applications for membership and about 50 Workers' Call distributed. Owing to the rain, there was a small attendance at the meeting at 355 E. Sixty-third street, Sunday, Aug. 12. However, with those present much good work was accomplished. It was decided to have a South Side headquarters, and every South Side branch is invited to contribute for same—chairs, donations, etc.

AUG. KLENKE, Organizer.

NORTH SIDE.

Tuesday evening the meeting at the corner of North Ave. and N. Clark St. was a success.

Comrades Berlyn and Cottrell made the principle addresses to a crowd of 100 that gathered. The meeting was opened by a new speaker comrade Roberts in a few, but well chosen remarks. Comrade Holthausen then introduced comrade Berlyn. 100 call cards were distributed and $1.75 collected.

Wednesday evening's meeting at the corner of Oak and Franklin Streets was also a success.

A good sized crowd listened to comrades Morris and Hall in order. Questions then followed and a lively time was kept up for about 2 hours. 120 calls were distributed and a collection of 31 cents was taken up.

Thursday the usual large crowd gathered at Washington Square, Walton St. and N. Clark. Comrades Berlyn and Huggins both spoke in splendid style. 100 Calls were distributed, a collection of $1.04 was taken up.

The crowd that gathered at this meeting place, listened carefully. They remained until the last word had been said, showing an evident interest in the Socialist propaganda.

Friday evening a good crowd assembled at the corner of Racine and Dearborn to listen to comrade Chas. Band. Comrade Bands improves continually, he has a knowledge of Socialism and speaks better at each meeting.

Comrade Morris followed with a collection and subscriptions for the Call. 25 Calls distributed.

Subscription cards were sold and a collection was taken up. Two new members gained.

Sunday at 6:30 P. M., despite of the rain a crowd of 40 or 50 persons gathered to hear comrade Band speak at the corner of Center and N. Clark St. About 50 Calls were distributed, and a collection of 35 cents was taken up.

Sunday night, despite of the rain a good crowd listened to comrade Chas. Band speak at the corner of Wrightwood and Sherman Ave. He was followed by comrade Anderson, a new speaker who gave quite an interesting talk.

A collection of 31 cents was taken up and 120 Calls were distributed.

The meeting then adjourned.

M. H. TAPP.

The Division Organization Committee will meet at 123 North Clark St., basement, in the future on Saturday evenings instead of at 34 North Clark St.

All organizers or delegates take notice.

The speakers' club will meet there also, on Monday evenings.

The first W. Branch will, in the future hold its business meeting at the above mentioned number (113 N. Clark St., basement).

We are pleased to announce that the picnic of the 25th W. Branch has been held at the Workers' Call $23.00. One fourth of the total proceeds. The 25th W. club is ALL RIGHT.

The members should take hold of the Unity Picnic and push it in good style, tickets are only 15 cents.

The North Division Organization District is pushing the Call, and THE CALL ONLY. We get out no less than 450 per week. Last week 800 were distributed. The same should be done all over the city.

West Side Unity Picnic.

Athletic games and novelty races are always in demand at any picnic and the athletic committee of the West Side Socialists has arranged the following for their picnic of Sept. 8th:

A closely contested baseball game will be played between the West Side and the Acme Carpet Works, composed mostly of comrades from the South Side. Much rivalry exists between the two teams, and those who were disappointed in the game at the Workers' Call picnic will be satisfied this time.

The prizes have not been decided upon for the races, but arrangements have been made with the Kerr Pub Co. for books. This will not be all, however, and besides orders that can be used at the bar or the restaurant, there will be other and more novel prizes awarded. These will be announced later. The committee has decided to charge a small entrance of ten cents for each person in all races except those for the women and children. No person having won last, 2nd or 3rd place in one race will be allowed to qualify for the same position in another race.

The different events will be as follows:

50 yd. tub race on Desplaines river. Bring your bathing suits. Tube will be furnished.

100 yd. dash for young men.

100 yd. obstacle race, particulars to be announced later.

Potato race. Potatoes will be furnished.

50 yd. three-legged race.

Anyone wishing to donate anything in the way of prizes will please look for notice in another part of the paper.

THE SCHOOL OF SOCIALISM

The Correspondence School now has more than 500 names on its list. Local Classes now using the printed lessons are rapidly increasing. The School will be removed to Girard, Kansas on Sept. 1st., where a Training Class for Socialist Party Workers will be combined with it. Mrs May Wood Simons will conduct, the Chicago Class in the Schiller Building on the 1st Tuesday in October. For information regarding The Correspondence and Training School Address: W. T. Miller, 5416 Ellis Ave after Sept. 1st., Girard, Kas.) Write to Mrs M. W. Simons Baraboo, Wis. for information on the Chicago Class.

THE WORKERS' CALL.

THE WORKERS' CALL is published by the SOCIALIST PARTY of Chicago and has for its aim the education of the working class in scientific, class-conscious, revolutionary socialism. For this purpose only it appears.

"Workingmen of all countries unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains; you have a world to gain."

News of the Week And its Philosophy.

Inflections have been coming pretty thick this week and while strikers, after the experiences of recent years could expect nothing else, they were somewhat surprised at the sweeping nature of the two that were issued by United States judges. The socialists see in the injunction one phase of the class struggle. The capitalist class has found a new weapon in the injunction and one that partially nullifies the once powerful weapons of the working class, the strike and the boycott. A strike is a war in miniature and all things are fair in war. The capitalist uses the injunction; the workers use the boycott though both injunction and boycott may be contrary to the ideas on which the American government was founded. Neither side cares as to that. Each wants to gain its point. Material interests are at stake and might rules. In this contest the capitalists have the advantage in that they look farther ahead than the workingmen and secure the machinery of government. The workingmen thus surrendered their most powerful weapon, which force of numbers will allow them at any time to take when they did not elect men from their own class to the offices. If all is fair in war then it is fair for the workingmen to take the office. They can do it. The only question would be, is it wise for them to do so?

Capitalists papers counseling moderation tell the workingmen to remember Debs. If the workingmen had remembered Debs at the last election they might not now be striking for their rights with adverse governing bodies to contend with. It is the short memory of the workingman that the capitalists depend on to control government.

Of course Debs never marched up San Juan hill in a blaze of red light, neither did he originate a tariff law that would foster the rich at the expense of the poor. He only went to jail for his class. They could not think of making him president. Only a man who displaced them and had no use for them except during a campaign, would do as a president for the workingmen. The philosophy of the class struggle needs to be expounded again to the working class.

Talk of Mark Hanna for president is again being freely indulged in. Possibly this is a scheme to make the workers so mad that they will vote for Mr. Bryan or some stalling horse rather than one of their own number. It may be so that the capitalists expect to elect Mark. They have not the votes to do it, but workingmen are very accommodating about election time.

Surprise over the rottenness in the city hall that is partly being brought out by the present investigation is all get on. No one is surprised. Everyone knows what a gang of politicians get themselves in office for. It is for their mutual interests. The bluff about doing things for the poor people is so thoroughly exploded that nobody tries to work it any more.

The report that Mr. Bryan's Commemorative was to be moved to Chicago has been denied. We do not need the Commemorative here as long as we have the Sympathy that is being wanted on the strikers' wives would much better be expended on their daughters in the sweetshops and the department stores.

The record of lives lost by street railway accidents and at grade crossings keeps up to its regular figure. Cars are run for profit now and human lives, the lives of the laboring people, are cheaper than expensive grades or new brake beams. Then what accidents do occur there are always laborers who can be charged with the responsibility and punished if necessary. The stockholders are never brought before the bar of justice; they are too rich.

They are not "business men" but are laborers with interests the same as other members of the working class. Their unions now being established may get them shorter hours and a few cents more pay, but they will never get full value in return for the work they do for society until they march to the ballot box and vote with other laborers to own the factories and the distribution.

Several miles of tramping must be done to cover the line of march on Labor Day; a walk of much less distance on election day will accomplish far greater results.

Workers have been called for by the executive committee to help extend the circulation of the Workers' Call. Fifty have been asked for, but 100 should respond. The man who reads "can't get away from the argument. If he is a worker he will become socialist. Now is the time when sacrifices made to secure subscribers will count. Let the response be prompt and socialism in Chicago will see the greatest boom in its history."

Business men are trying their best to settle the steel strike. While a strike is on, business men are deprived of a part of their rackets between producer and consumer. It is not that they have great philanthropic hearts that wholly prompts the business man to deplore strikes; they do not like bad book accounts.

Employers both South and North have threatened in the past week to shut run their business themselves. Here up their factories unless they could step in and take charge of the factories of which the owners are tired. If the workers were united and in power they could call the bluff.

When a water main broke and the elevators to the tall buildings ceased running a few days ago, nearly everybody, according to an afternoon paper, went to a telephone and called up his office and issued orders rather than climb the stairs. It will be observed here that the clerks who had to walk up were not included in "everybody." If the task was too much for them they lost their job. After calling up the clerks and issuing orders, then "everybody" went out to the golf links leaving "nobody" at home to execute the orders.

Conkey sues a former employer for $25,000 damages for causing the strike among his employees. Conkey will probably not collect the full amount of any part of it, but he will cause the workingman or his union to spend money for lawyers for a defense. He may discourage other agitators from talking strikes. It will take the courts looking through capitalist spectacles to determine whether any damages can be assessed for this alleged offense, but meanwhile no court can enjoin a man for voting for his own interests nor collect damages from him if he votes against the interests of the boss.

Suicides to the number of about three a day is the record for the week. So far as the police could learn, none of them killed themselves because they had too desirable jobs.

That material interests are stronger than sentimental reasons, is shown by the action of the steel workers in South Chicago refusing to strike. Every impulse of sentiment would be for the men to strike, but they are evidently convinced that the strike will be losing one and that they will be out of jobs. When men can be convinced that it is to their material interests to vote for socialism then socialism will come. It is the line of argument which will win them.

Sixteen per cent of the people of Chicago pay personal taxes; the other 84 per cent should be socialists. They have no material interest in the doctrine of private property.

Economic causes perhaps have more to do with the lynching of negroes in the South than would appear on the surface. With the arrival of a new generation of educated negroes the indolent whites of the South see the best jobs taken away from them; hence the running of colored men out of cities on the pretense that they are criminal.

Secure to attend the Unity Picnic, at Bergman's Grove, Riverside on Sunday Sept. 2. Probable Reward of Merit.

The men of South Chicago are sticking to the position they took at the outset. By doing so they are asserting their manhood and retaining their self-respect," says the Chicago Tribune editorially.

Time will bring about the complete vindication of these men who have dared to defy the ignorant, coarse of the labor ward. When this strike has been fought out and lost, and when President Shaffer has become like William J. Bryan, a forsaken and discredited leader, remembered only because of the injury he has done the cause of labor, the bravery, devotion to duty, and true loyalty to labor of these South Chicago men will be recognized, though reluctantly, by those who are now assailing them in resolutions and speeches.

The Tribune is altogether correct except in one small particular. The bravery, devotion and loyalty of the South Chicago men will be recognized but not "reluctantly." When the strike has been fought out and lost the recognition will be promptly and cheerfully given in the shape of a notice of reduction of wages, to go into effect as soon as possible. And there isn't a union man in the country but will admit that the recognition is an adequate compensation for the services rendered.

The capitalist is not lamenting the fact that he has no particular day to "show his strength" to the workers. For that purpose all days look alike to him.

Get your neighbors to read the Call.

TRADES UNIONISM

Its Existence an Evidence of the Class Struggle.

IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

Organized Labor Gradually Reaching for Political Power as the Means of Emancipation.

It is perfectly sound philosophy to offset the power of capitalist concentration by the power of workingmen's unions. The trade unions have been doing invaluable work in teaching the workers the advantages of solidarity and mutual assistance. They are the living proof of the often denied fact that there is no community of interests among laborers and capitalists. What better evidence of the class struggle tical, the working class control the fate of their industrial and political future. On the other hand, where the trade unions have confined their activity to industrial organization alone, there the condition of the working class is deplorable.

In no country of the world is the trade union movement so old and so strong as in England. But the present ignoring of the fact, that the machinery of the state is simply the tool of the capitalist class, has again and again led the British workingmen to vote those into political power who already held the source of economic exploitation over them. In consequence all the powerful trade unions of the British Isles have not been able to effect a thorough or lasting improvement of the condition of the workers. The latter found out, that labor legislation does not thrive in the hands of the capitalist class. As long as they expect the capitalists as a class to effect that which would result in destroying the capitalist hold on society, just so long will they remain enslaved. Not so in other countries of Europe. In Germany and France, the majority

LABOR DAY—1901

Compared With the Celebration of Last Year.

VISIBLE SIGNS OF PROGRESS.

Symptoms of Growing Class Consciousness Appear in the Ranks of Organized Labor.

While the essential features of this year's celebration of Labor day in Chicago will not differ widely from those of preceding years, there are yet some customary accompaniments which have invariably marked previous celebrations, which this year will be conspicuous by their absence, and which may be fairly taken to denote that a somewhat clearer perception of the economic antagonism between capitalist can we demand that the necessity for workers to combine in unions as a protection against the overbearing attitude of the employers?

But we are living in a society where economic institutions are not identical with the political institutions that administer the public affairs of a nation. Hence the workers cannot gain the full benefit of their consolidation in unions, until they enter the political field in the same way as they did the industrial field, as a class with distinct interests of its own. Not until the necessity for economic organization of the workers arises, could we point to this fact. But once the laborers had learned the lesson of co-operation and found out by hard and bitter experience, that economic organization alone is insufficient in the struggle with a class that is organized politically as well as industrially, then the ground was prepared in which the socialists could drop the seeds of the argument that economic forces must be met by economical, and political forces by political. The answer is the Trust is the Federation of Labor. The answer to the injunction of the corporation judge is the socialist ballot in the hands of organized labor.

A glance at the trade union movement of the different countries plainly shows that the workingmen are becoming masters of their environment in the same measure as the trade unions are realizing the necessity of political action. In these countries where trade-unionism and socialism are identical, the working class control the fate of their industrial and political future.

The lessons which organized labor has received in the United States are many and cruel. Luckily, they have not remained barren of results. The signs are continually increasing which show that the American trade union-and laborer is slowly dawning upon the minds of the rank and file of the organized workers.

Last year many thousands of organized workers paraded the streets of Chicago with the usual bands and banners, in order to "show the capitalists their strength," as the common expression has it. The capitalists were on hand to witness—they saw the procession and duly noted the strength of the proletarians. Two months later that strength was divided between the two capitalist representatives McKinley and Bryan, and became weakness. The Labor Union had consented to be shown, and the Philistines have been upon him with a vengeance since that fateful November day. Less than a year has elapsed and the destruction of organized labor is openly avowed as the object of the capitalist class in the great struggle now waging. A perfect fusillade of injunctions, warrants and jail sentences has been hurled from almost every court in the land, with the object of neutralizing every effort made by organized labor to secure for its members better material conditions of life.

Organized labor last year invited the capitalists to come out and see their strength. The invitation was accepted. The capitalists came, saw, and conquered.

They did not come unprepared. Long before the appointed display, the capitalist class, aided by ignorant or traitorous tools within the ranks of the organized laborers, had already selected the Lehighs who were to play the principal part in depriving the Labor Union of its strength. Roosevelt's strenuous, and Bryan's smooth, were assigned this role. How well they performed it the November voting bears witness. And the results which followed during the year bring additional testimony.

Last year, when the labor day parade took place, a fierce local struggle was in progress between workers and employers in this city. The common bond of cohesion between the organized building trades was the object of attack. To day the Building Trades Council is but a memory.

This year there is no immediate necessity for the votes of the Chicago laborers. Bryan and Roosevelt will therefore not grace, or rather disgrace the event with their presence. And signs are not wanting that the rank and file of organized labor are beginning to perceive the true object of the capitalist political orator at a labor gathering, and that his appearance there can be readily dispensed with. And so the "Democratic" brand of political capper, with his windy professions of friendship and his empty verbiage of "eternal principles" and "inalienable rights," has been already barred, to the intense disgust of the capitalist class and more particularly that portion of it which labels itself "Republican."

But this action of itself might be construed as denoting a mere weariness of frothy speechmaking upon the part of the rank and file of organized labor, were it not for the fact that every available socialist speaker in the city has been engaged to address different groups of organized workers on Labor Day. Such has been the demand for their services that the requests of two unions have so far been left unfulfilled owing to the lack of local speakers, several of the latter having been engaged to make the Labor Day address in other cities, both within and outside the boundaries of the State of Illinois.

It may be as well to point out here that this difference is merely a natural result of the experience gained by organized labor during the last twelve months, in its struggle with the exploiting classes. Last year the rear of the Labor Day procession was brought up by several squads of police officers transformed into artillerymen and accompanied by a battery of machine guns. This military feature will be missing in the coming display. There is little doubt but that the capitalist class have observed the tendency to disperse with their spell binders, and having caught on to its meaning now deem it prudent to create as little irritation as possible. The unions displayed considerable resentment over this part of the show last year, and have since acquired a more distinct conception of its real meaning, which would rather increase than allay their previous opposition. There are quite enough "getting guns and paper" in the form of injunctions, already flying around, and as the organized laborers are beginning to see the connection between them, there is a well defined suspicion that the appearance of the liberal weapons of murder, might be too strongly suggestive. It is fairly safe to predict that the accounts of the Labor Day procession in the capitalist press, will this year surpass all previous reports for smooth and unctuous flattery and nauseous and unmeaning compliment. The "happy handed sons of toil" will do well to close their ears to this fulsome and dangerous slush. They might be reminded that while this sort of thing costs the capitalist nothing, the working class pay for its acceptance with their economic liberty.

These differences may be with some reason be regarded as indications that organized labor is beginning to understand that a "show of strength" is of little consequence unless that strength is retained to advance the material interests of its possessors; and the socialist speakers who have been invited by the unions to make the Labor Day addresses may be expected to emphasize the fact that until the feet of the marchers are turned towards the ballot box for the purpose of capturing the law making powers, the "show of strength" on Labor Day will only concern the capitalist class with the very simple problem of how to divide and neutralize it in their own interests.

Here then is war in which the combatants are drafted by the inevitable law of birth. The sage of battle is life and death to the workers and their children. But in this battle one might say can ruin the cause. All must stand together or the battle is lost, for wages are fixed by what the weakest can be forced to take, not by what the strongest may demand. A deserter from this army then is the most deadly of traitors. It is as if every man had the key to the fortress within which all were fighting.

If they death is the recognized proper penalty for the traitor in every army the world has ever known, what shall we say of the penalty due him who plays the traitor to the army of industry? In any ordinary soldier, the private can carry little assistance to the enemy. He has generally entered the army of his own free will. He never has such tremendous interests at stake as in the industrial struggle. On the contrary he is generally fighting some quarrel of his economic masters and enemies, whose decision to of no consequence whatever to him or his class.

Does it not now become plain why the scab is in of all the traitors the world has ever known, the most despicable. He betrays an army whose members are his fellow workers and whose cause is his own. He betrays men and women and babies to a lingering death in city slums and factory dens. He curses unborn generations with the slave's portion. He damns a race to continued bondage and fastens fetters upon babes yet unborn.

Yes, the trade-unionist is right who vents upon the scab the fiercest punishment within his power. And yet stop a moment. Who is there that has not seen the strongest and staunchest of trade-unionists forced to act the part of the character he loathed with

WHAT IS A "SCAB"?

Opposite Views Held by Distinct Economic Classes.

TWO KINDS OF LABOR TREASON

Political "Scab" Indulges More Demons, and Less Exorable Than Industrial One.

No word in the English language is held in more abhorrence than the word "scab." No other cry will so quickly rouse all the fierce passions of a worker. No other name carries so deep disgrace. Why is this? What has the man to whom it is applied done that renders him a creature of such contempt? "Only taken a chance to work," says the average newspaper.

"Acting like a free man," says the capitalist apologist. Judge, police and public press rush to defend him. Ministers of the gospel justify him. All the machinery by which "public opinion" is ordinarily made, declares that he is an honorable man.

Nevertheless the trade-unionist, who is usually all too willing to let these people make up his mind for him in other things, persists that of all the creatures that cumber this earth the scab is the most contemptible, the most despicable, the most to be hunted out. Cram-questioned he will admit in theory that the scab has a right to hunt for a job, but the next time he sees the scab trying to exercise that privilege he fires a brick at him. And he is more nearly right in the last than the first instance. For the scab is truly the most damnable object of present civilization has produced. Not while down in the depths of his mind the laborer who is worthy of the name, recognizes this fact, it would punish him to give a "reason for the fact that is in him."

Let us look at it this way. Society is today divided into two great classes between whom there is and must continue to be, while capitalism shall last, eternal and bitter war. The two classes, who own and control all the means of life, the government, press and platform, are organized to maintain, to most continuously to reduce the other class to the point of mere subsistence. The laboring class who perform the work of the world and must sell themselves to the ruling class, are compelled, because of the fact that social progress and private property in improved machines is making vast numbers of them unnecessary in the process of production, to fight among themselves for any opportunity to live. If they are to rise as men above the slave's portion, they must unite and fight side by side against the class of exploiters.

Every man, therefore, who is not born into the class of capitalists is born into the army of wage-workers. He is forced from the day of his birth to become a part of this mighty army arrayed in this bitter, never ending, CLASS STRUGGLE. He does not opt out as a volunteer. He does not even have the chance of the lottery drawn to escape the draft. He is enrolled by the very fact of birth. His entrance into the world without property, carries with it the articles of enrollment among the class of wage-slaves.

Here then is war in which the combatants are drafted by the inevitable law of birth. The sage of battle is life and death to the workers and their children. But in this battle one might say can ruin the cause. All must stand together or the battle is lost, for wages are fixed by what the weakest can be forced to take, not by what the strongest may demand. A deserter from this army then is the most deadly of traitors. It is as if every man had the key to the fortress within which all were fighting.

If they death is the recognized proper penalty for the traitor in every army the world has ever known, what shall we say of the penalty due him who plays the traitor to the army of industry? In any ordinary soldier, the private can carry little assistance to the enemy. He has generally entered the army of his own free will. He never has such tremendous interests at stake as in the industrial struggle. On the contrary he is generally fighting some quarrel of his economic masters and enemies, whose decision to of no consequence whatever to him or his class.

Does it not now become plain why the scab is in of all the traitors the world has ever known, the most despicable. He betrays an army whose members are his fellow workers and whose cause is his own. He betrays men and women and babies to a lingering death in city slums and factory dens. He curses unborn generations with the slave's portion. He damns a race to continued bondage and fastens fetters upon babes yet unborn.

Yes, the trade-unionist is right who vents upon the scab the fiercest punishment within his power. And yet stop a moment. Who is there that has not seen the strongest and staunchest of trade-unionists forced to act the part of the character he loathed with Wouldn't it be good, "business" for the Florida State Legislature to repeal that divorce law, now that millionaire Flager has quite done with it? Another place in the same fix may venture along and get the benefit of what Flager labored for, without discharging a cent.

"Does lynching prevent crime," is the subject of an editorial in the daily press this week. The answer is easy. Lynching does prevent crime on the part of the individual lynched. It might also be asked whether any other preventive of crime in present use, extends beyond the individual.

A combination typewriter which performs the labor of a penman and makes out bills and invoices accurately has just been perfected and placed upon the market. Its appearance warrants the assertion that several thousand superfluous book keepers will also be placed there as soon as the new comer gets into action.

As long as you vote for the maintenance of present conditions, tried union men, you are not displaying your strength to the capitalists by marching through the streets on Labor Day. You are merely giving them an opportunity to take an inventory of the amount of the commodity, labor power, which is at their service for profit making purposes.

A threatened out of wage amongst the textile operatives at Fall River, Mass., has been averted by the action of a wealthy manufacturer, who by purchasing the "overproduction" has raised prices and relieved the situation. In the good times coming "when harmony has been restored between capital and labor," no doubt every trades union will possess an official millionaire for similar purposes.

"Get money, houses, land, and above all a Christian character, and you will succeed." This is what Brother T. Washington, of the "Christian League" last week at the First National Armory. Are there any successful Jewish business men, Mr. Washington, and if so, how did they manage to succeed without a "Christian character"? Are there not thousands of successful business men belonging to other creeds than the Christian, and who have been in the penitentiary, and fellows who ought to be there? Don't burden your hearers with superfluous baggage, Mr. Washington. Tell them that if they get "houses, money and land" the rest will be added unto them. It may not be a "Christian character," but it will be something just as good as the business man says when he wants a customer to accept an inferior article. Don't you know, Mr. Washington, that the great "Christian character" of history was no "business man" and had little use for the type? Clear your mind of mist, Mr. Washington, clear your mind of mist.

DEVELOPMENT OF HUMOR.

General Frederick Grant declares that the "average Filipino" is full of fun, and that his "sense of humor" is not surpassed by any race on earth except the Irish. As an illustration he relates that on one occasion a band of native musicians surrounded his headquarters and finally played a selection entitled "Aginaldo's March." An American officer standing by, expressed in Spanish that the march should be played as a "quickstep"—an allusion to the skill of the late Filipino leader in rapid retreating movements. The natives at once saw the point and roared with laughter.

It was very funny, certainly. How an Irishman would roll with delight if he heard a Britisher make a similar allusion to the flight of an Irish "patriot." It would not take him a moment to get bold of the joke—and the joker likewise.

But then the Irishman's sense of humor has been developed by about seven hundred years of training, while the Filipino has had barely three. When the latter has had such a lengthy experience in being shot, hanged, hunted, chased and killed, no doubt he may be expected to come up to the Irish standard of wit.

But isn't it about time that General Kitchener entered the Boer as a competitor with the Filipino and the Irishman?

PRESS CONTENT FOR STRIKERS

Were it not for the knowledge that experience is a schoolmaster that never lets up upon the dullest pupil until the lesson has been learned, one would be tempted to assert that the labor organizations of this country have been smitten with a sort of mental paralysis. At the time when the air is filled with showers of injunctions against unions, when the capitalist class are successfully using every device known to law, for the purpose of neutralizing every effort of the unions to foil the purposes for which they were established, no reply is heard beyond a few feeble and impotent resolutions of denunciations and censure, which are properly passed over in the capitalist press without a word of comment.

"Contentment will place even the wheel of a torrid" says the old Hindu proverb, but it would seem that the modern labor organization is even more impotent than that conservative animal, judging by the tone of the capitalist press to matters concerning the efforts of organized labor, and the effect that it has produced upon the latter.

In every phase of the steel strike which has been discussed in the columns of these journals, this exasperating superciliousness stand out prominently. Shaffer makes an eloquent appeal to Morgan, imploring him not to drive the workmen to despair, the great man replies curtly and coldly in a few words, as if the supplicant was a rather insignificant anonymous. Shaffer makes a threat. Morgan takes no notice. A deputation seeking arbitration applies for an interview. Morgan has no time to see them—there isn't anything to arbitrate—the workers are damn fools anyhow who don't know what's good for them and he is not going to allow their troubles to bother him—he is just starting for Newport.

And the capitalist press talking its cue from the attitude of the great man, imitate him as far as possible. The strike spreads. East and West the wage slaves of the Trust drop their tools and prepare for the struggle. Next morning the public is informed editorially that these fellows are ignorant and unreasoning creatures, who can only be brought to their senses through the medium of hunger. Their action has temporarily inconvenienced the business, who though making due allowance for the folly and ignorance of the employees, cannot, really permit industry to be paralyzed etc. etc.

In South Chicago the workers refuse to strike. The capitalist press represents them as manly self-respecting mechanics, ideal working men who have been severely tested and emerged honorably and victoriously from the conflict, men whose keen sense of justice forbids them to break a contract. They are battling for "principle" and will be rewarded in due time by their grateful masters. It is difficult to imagine how the fellows who write this ironical stuff manage to keep their countenance when presenting it seriously as the editorial opinion.

An injunction is issued against the striking machinists in Chicago. A resolution denouncing the judge who granted it is passed unanimously at union headquarters. Next day the press notices the latter fact without commenting upon it but the editorial page contains the information that the union men may be thankful that things are no worse. How would they like to live under English law, where a Union can be sued for damages arising from a strike and its funds annexed to satisfy the claims of the prosecutors?

Then comes the journal claiming to be "friend of labor" and fills its editorial columns with empty "sympathy" for the heroic union men. Its too bad. Morgan is a greedy tyrant and should have a care or something dreadful (they don't say what) may happen in the future. Now is it that the rich have no little consideration for the poor? Why is it that the strong persist in crushing the weak? Can nothing be suggested that will give labor its "just share"? The union men are fighting for a "principle" and a principle never dies. They may fight for a hundred or thousand or a million years but they are sure to conquer in the end. Isn't that a comforting thought? Workingmen should study the philosophy of Fourier, and when they have all got a good grasp of it they will then understand these very intricate questions and not before. This illogical mockery is if anything still more offensive than the open sneering of the self avowed organs of capitalism.

It can hardly be maintained that the labor organizations are not in some sense fair game for the taunts and sneers levelled at them in the capitalist press. The appalling density they exhibit towards the significance of things actually occurring is to some extent a justification for the supercilious contempt with which they are regarded by the exploiting classes. The law is being used upon all sides to render every effort upon their part futile. While the organizations remain passive their legality is unquestioned—when they attempt to become effectively active, their activity is at once paralyzed by the law in the hands of their opponents. And yet with few exceptions, the idea of the necessity of controlling the law-making power in their interests of the class to which they belong, has not yet dawned upon them, though every action of their enemies points that lesson so plainly, that it might be mild nothing short of wilful blindness could avoid recognizing it.

However, it seems probable enough from the present outlook, organized labor is to acquire a knowledge of its class interests only through such demonstrations of capitalist power as are now being given, the time is not far distant when the ballot will perform its recognized as the only defence against absolute industrial slavery; and its adoption as the weapon of organized labor, may reasonably be expected to modify the contemptuous attitude which the capitalist class now feel safe in assuming towards their wage slaves.

HOW PROSPERITY WAS RUINED.

About one year ago the Chicago Tribune (Republican) reprinted by permission of the New York World (Democratic) lengthy illustrated article tending to show the wonderful prosperity which was being enjoyed by the Iron and Steel workers in Pittsburgh and vicinity. These employees of the Steel Trust were represented as driving to their daily toil in carriages, alleged photographs being presented as illustrations. Pictures of mansions of imposing architectural appearance were also given, each of them denoting the habitation of an aristocrat of labor, while long paragraphs describing the luxurious furnishings of the interiors of these dwellings were also appended.

This was one year ago. Since that time the steel industry has been still more prosperous, and no doubt the streets of Northern China stand ready to testify. Speaking of the elaborate precautions taken to safeguard the Casa-Buring his visit to France, a French paper states that "one does not realize how dear human life is until an Emperor comes into the neighborhood." But a rather different impression is created when the troops of an Emperor come into the neighborhood, as the inhabitants of Northern China stand ready to testify.

This time last year Roosevelt was in Chicago trying to induce the working-class to allow the capitalists to skin them for another four years. He succeeded and they elected him in November. This year he is out West trying to separate the coyote from his hide, but with only a very limited success. The coyote has a very rooted objection to being skinned, and a keen scent for the skinner. He is by no means as easy game as that which Roosevelt stalked last year in this city.

A small fragment of bone which has been declared by "experts" to be an authentic relic of Buddha has been discovered recently in Madras, India, and is now in the hands of the British imperial authorities, who it is stated are holding it for a purpose. A writer in one of the reviews has suggested that it can be used to force a way into Tibet, a country which is as yet practically unexplored but which is known to be the center of the Buddhist faith, and the location of the Grand Llama, who is the acknowledged head of the Buddhist hierarchy. It is not improbable that Great Britain may take the hint, if indeed she had not entertained the idea from the moment the "discovery" had been made. It may seem strange that a "sacred" relic of this sort should be used for this purpose, but the necessities of capitalist expansion cannot afford to disdain any method that may bring within the range of exploitation any who yet remain outside.

It is a curious fact that the universal hostility shown by Labor Day paraders to "scab-built stands" on the line of march last year, was not directed with equal force against the Republican and Democratic platforms.

Can't the Democratic politicians get out an injunction compelling the union men to listen to their spellbinders on Labor Day? Shall not the "unalienable right" of ruling the workers be maintained?

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE

When union men determine to vote for their own interests, the capitalist press will suddenly discover that the Labor Day parade is not quite such a pleasing spectacle as they had formerly thought.

Why should the South Chicago steel workers be debared from participating in the Labor Day ceremonies? They have only tried to demonstrate that the interests of Capital and Labor are identical.

Watch the accounts of the appearance of the labor day marchers in the capitalist press next week, and you will begin to believe that they are really indulging in the luxury of potatoes at $7 per bushel, six times per day at least.

A correspondent inquires whether we ever knew a man who "was a socialist and didn't know it," and in the interests of truth we must answer in the negative. We are inclined to believe that such specimens are very rare, but the other kind, the fellow who isn't a socialist and doesn't know it, is fairly numerous.

You don't have to ask permission from the "boss" to march in the Labor Day parade. It was his class that made the day a "legal" holiday merely because it was to their interest to do so. Were it otherwise, it is not quite so certain that you would not have to ask. Try to establish a day for yourselves and then see.

The official declaration of "insufficient crops in Russia" translated from the diplomatic into the English language, means utter starvation, says the capitalist press. The statement reads: "To complete it, it would read: 'utter starvation for the fellows who raised the crops.' Everybody knows that under capitalism, the world's parasites are always supplied before the world's producers."

Speaking of the elaborate precautions taken to safeguard the Casa-Buring his visit to France, a French paper states that "one does not realize how dear human life is until an Emperor comes into the neighborhood." A CHAPTER OF "FRAUDS"

Record in Capitalist Journals of one Day, Compiled, Annotated and Condensed.

Here is a part of the budget of "frauds" which appeared in last Saturday's Chicago papers:

Fraud in the immigration office in New York.

Fraud in the police force—now being "investigated" in New York.

Fraud in the Customs office in New York. Bunks from Japan being illegally invoiced.

Fraud charged against the president of the "Law and Order" society in New York—blackmailing saloonkeepers and prostitutes.

Fraud in the police department, Chicago.

Fraud charged against the Knickerbocker Ice Company in knowingly abetting the sale of impure ice.

Fraud charged against "tax dodgers"—cases too numerous to specify—see Chicago American.

Fraud charged against Englewood man—passing bogus check for $11.

Fraud charged against unknown window-paused forged checks on picture firm of Mages & Co., 159 Randolph street.

Fraud confessed by Western Union Co's messenger. Twenty-six persons swindled with bogus telegrams.

Fraud charged against man representing himself as Geo. B. Carpenter—passing forged checks.

Fraud against postmaster, Durand, Ill.—pleads guilty to shortage in accounts.

Fraud charged against Arizona officials—illegal admission of Chinese.

To the above may be added the following items:

American "College of Heraldry" applies for Charter in Pennsylvania.

New Jersey clergyman unearths bogus "divinity" diploma—mill in Chicago.

Indictment of persons who lynched a negro in Alabama.

After August 1st all "whisky dives" north of Harrison street must disappear.

Professor Jenks has a "plan" to settle the big steel strike to the satisfaction of all parties.

Carter Harrison declares "grafters" on Chicago police force will not be tolerated.

"American women" are to be asked to contribute to the "Queen Victoria Memorial Fund."

Recent grade crossing "accident" (six persons killed) to be probed to the bottom and the guilty parties punished.

Cross of the Legion of Honor bestowed on president of Standard Oil University.

Crusade against dives on North Side. Republican ticket nominated and platform adopted in Harrisburg, Pa. Time—1 hour and 30 minutes.

Standard Oil millionaire of 75 married woman one-third his age after "shaping legislation" in Florida to suit his case.

Bogus "rogues gallery" discovered in Chicago.

"Paving scandal" unearthed in Chicago. Two inspectors suspended for passing worthless work. Big City Hall politicians said to be in the deal.

J. Pierpont Morgan has a "plan" whereby the employees of the Steel Trust may control its stock.

"Diploma mill" for the manufacture of "dentists" bobs up again.

WHO IS "UNCLE SAM?"

An Inquiry Into the Nature of the National Personification of Power in the United States.

Many people have a habit of talking about "Uncle Sam" in a strange manner. "Uncle Sam will see to it that such and such matter is properly attended to," or "Uncle Sam will do this or prevent that." Whatever is beyond the ordinary individual to see through (of the things that are happening around him) he is sure "Uncle Sam" will regulate or find a way out of the difficulty.

And so he does; and if not exactly to the liking of the affected individual, at least to the satisfaction of the real something that is impersonated as "Uncle Sam." When workmen on strike suggest appealing to "Uncle Sam" for assistance they generally find that he is taking care of the interests of his own.

And who are his own? Why, those into whose keeping the voters have put him, of course. He helps the capitalists by sending his troops to shoot down the strikers when hunger drives them to desperation, or when it suits the purposes of the capitalists to pretend that the presence of the troops is necessary, in this or that locality, to preserve order.

Now, who is this "Uncle Sam"? What is the power that is talked by this name? Why, it is the voters—and part of these voters are the strikers themselves. "Uncle Sam" is the representation of the expression of the voters organized through the ballot box; organized where intelligence is necessary.

But instead of representing organized intelligence in behalf of the workers, he represents the organization of the capitalists, and for the benefit of the capitalists.

tion of the workers by the intelligence in making advantageous use of the ignorance of the workers, by dividing them at the ballot box, where their intelligence should give its best expression; the capitalists do not hesitate to use the power bestowed on them—the power of BEING "Uncle Sam," against those who have surrendered that power.

This being so, the only thing to do is to give this power up no longer—the workers must retain it for themselves. He is taking care of the interests of his own.

They must unite, where intelligence counts, viz., at the ballot box, and there become themselves "Uncle Sam"; they must back themselves instead of backing the capitalists against themselves.

"Uncle Sam" will attend to this matter, only when they—the workers—decide to become "Uncle Sam." W.

THE MILITIA QUESTION.

Discussed at a Trades Union Convention in Baltimore. Two different Suggestions.

The militia question has been raised by the United Garment Workers of America in their annual convention at Baltimore. A resolution was brought up which prohibited any member of the union from serving in the state militia, on penalty of expulsion. This resolution was defeated by the narrow majority of two votes. At the same time the proposition was brought up before the International Typographical Union in session at Birmingham, Ala., and was the subject of a heated discussion, which resulted in its being voted down by a handsome majority.

For a trade union to prohibit its members from serving in the military organizations which have for their purpose the protection of capitalist interests, socialists would say, is a sure sign of the growth of class consciousness among the wage-workers. As such evidence it undoubtedly would be received with joy by all militant socialists, but there is another phase of the subject brought out in the debate at Birmingham which may change the opinions of some and which at any rate is an important subject for the consideration of the working class at this time. This is as to whether it might not be advantageous in times of grave crisis to have the militia largely composed of class conscious wage earners, since if it is not so constituted of the friends of labor, it will be organized among its enemies. This was the position taken by a majority of the printers in convention at Birmingham.

It will be remembered that the National guard played an important, if not decisive part in the French revolution, by virtue of their espousing the cause of the people. It was they who made possible the taking of the Bastille. Even in these days the moral can be pointed with force in the civic condition of more than one continental government. In France and Belgium, especially, the militia, being necessarily composed of members of the wage working class, is in itself a constant menace to constituted authority, and cannot be depended upon not to take the part of the proletariat in times of strike and revolution. It is this fact which has induced capitalist countries to consider the project of recruiting their armies from among their hordes of barbarian subjects. And this action on their part gives us the hint that capitalists in America settle the question for us when the time comes, by providing that the militia be not constituted of treacherous proletarian elements. In the meantime the question will interest the wage-earners of America.

A capitalist has undoubtedly a "legal right" to hire "scabs," but he only has it because the men who oppose the scabbing of that "legal right" gave it to him through their votes.

There will be lots of strikers parading the streets on Labor Day—and the day after—yes, and the day after that again.

Socialist Pointers

Labor produces everything and gets nothing and lots of it.

The organization is the life of the movement but it will not run on hot air.

The beauty of the strike at the ballot box is that only one good one would be necessary.

Labor's greatest day will be when it marches to the ballot box and casts its vote as a unit.

Don't forget that the West Side expects to see you at its picnic and promises to give you the time of year life.

Although Chicago will not have an election for some time there is no danger if we make socialists but what they will keep.

Of course you have selected a place for your summer vacation; Lincoln Park, perhaps; the fare there is only five cents.

Have you seen these handsome new Workers' Call cards? They are only a quarter for six months and well worth the money.

If they will just call the strike off until a presidential year, Mark Hanna will show them how he settles strikes in his own interest.

Evidently it is necessary for the steel workers to have the truth pounded into them, but Morgan and Schwall are busy doing the pounding.

If this immense summer set does agitation is to be turned into account the Workers' Call must be circulated. Who is to circulate it? The police?

Cannot the laborers see that if they controlled the government, the information would be in their hands to be used if necessary against their enemies?

Defenceless detectives in the police department will be obliged to suffer for the sins of their superiors, or rather those called their superiors.

Join the volunteers and pledge yourself to buy four Workers' Call cards a week. That is the kind of a soldier organized labor will not object to.

The dignity of labor does not hold out very long when a man is obliged to work for some mean little fat boss to whom he is in every way superior.

Some day the political scab will be as common as the scab of the industrial scab is at present. Some day when labor opens its eyes and beholds its strength.

The ruling classes call their servants, the office holders, down when the "graft" becomes too strong, and that is what is happening now in police circles in Chicago and New York.

It is a pity that the summer has not been selling insurance tea. The fact that its officers can spend the summer at watering places proves that they would do so.

French capitalists might like a little war with Turkey to stem the rising tide of socialism. There is nothing like patriotism and jingoism when a statesman wants to fool the people.

World trusts will be able to play the tariff laws of one country against another and always have a chance to charge higher prices for their goods. It is a cold day when the capitalists cannot turn patriotism to business account.

What is the object of labor showing its strength on Labor Day, if it does not use this strength to its own advantage. Is the parade only that politicians may see the trading stock of certain labor leaders?

Don't let your friends in New York be not talking of indulging the socialist ticket. They think the republicans will be good enough for them, or an independent democrat.

Sir Thomas Lipson brought a message over to the American people from King Edward, but of course no person less than a banker, a lawyer or possibly a merchant constitutes the people. Workmen do not count. Sir Thomas picks them up at so much per dozen.

It is a cheap lawyer who will work for less than $10 a day, yet their work is utterly useless and only stir up strife between men. If the actual producers were to ask that amount in wages, capitalist courts would be running a race to see which one should be first to issue an injunction against such a demand.

On Monday Sept. 10th, Comrade Aug. Klonek will leave for a lecture tour through the states of Illinois, Missouri and Iowa, and westward to California. Any Local or State Committee desiring dates address Aug. Klonek, Room 1, 38 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

There will be lots of strikers parading the streets on Labor Day—and the day after—yes, and the day after that again.

A Labor Day Address.

Present condition of labor a result of historical changes. Economic class rule. Defects of labor agitation within the wage system. Force of economic conditions mold and shape moral perceptions. Labor and hired labor. Education under capitalism. The conquest of political freedom. Nothing too good for the workingclass. The Co-operative Commonwealth as the object.

The supreme duty of every one who wishes to see the condition of laborers improved is not to try to improve it himself by his own favorite schemes, but straightway drop all these, however dear to his heart they may be. He should then set himself to work to impart to the now oppressed class a clear insight into the historical change that has taken place in industry, to show how the laborers were brought to their present condition; how helpless and insecure they are in their livelihood and even in their civil and political rights under this condition, to arouse in them a sense of their own worth and what they are entitled to have they can get out of this condition by a united effort of themselves only and not otherwise; and lastly, how the political field is the only field broad enough on which such a united effort can be made. No sympathetic attitude can ever be extended so far as to include all branches of labor so well as can be done by a united vote under universal suffrage.

This is not the place to expand on all the above points. It would take too long here to tell how it all happened that the laborers got separated off from the rest of the world into a class by themselves, how the dinner pail became a political issue; why it is that we have such a thing as a Labor Day, but no such thing as a Capital Day, why we have a Commissioner of Labor, but no Department of Capital; why we have a Commissioner of Labor but no Commissioner of Capital; and how it is possible for capital to get along without having any Commissioner at Washington to take care of its interests. Neither can we here dwell on the present hopeless condition of labor. True, a vast amount of oratory is used in every campaign to prove that the laborers control the government, but the first strike that occurs is sufficient to show, without wasting time on argument, that it is capital, not labor which controls the government, and that the chief use of political power is to help one class hold down another class.

Without going farther into these questions let us pass on to consider what labor is entitled to and what pretensions it should make. The principal defect in all labor agitation heretofore has been that labor was afraid of getting too much, and this is the cause of its failure. All it demanded was fair wages and anything above that seemed too good for labor to expect. Comrades, there is nothing too good or too much for labor to get. It cannot get more than all and when it gets all it has only got what labor produced. No deduction at all from the whole product will leave a fair wage. It will leave a stunted wage, which will necessitate the appointment of a labor Commissioner to look after the interests of labor, because on a stunted wage, labor cannot take care of itself. It cannot even elect its own Commissioner, but must have him appointed by a capitalist.

Half a loaf is better than nothing provided you get it. On the economic side our life is made up of a series of battles called strikes, interrupted by truces devoted to work. In this field temporary compromises have to be made, but it must be remembered that any advantage gained by these compromises in particular trades is generally at the expense of some other and weaker branch of labor and does not substantially alter the condition of labor as a whole in its relation to capital.

But in the political field, though there may be compromises between the different factions of the exploiting class, there never has been and in the nature of things never can be any compromise or half loaf business between the exploiting class as a whole and the exploited class, whether under slavery, serfdom or wage slavery. The chattel slave was not half landlord and half serf. The wage class to-day does not live half from profits and half from wages. You cannot abolish half the labor market and leave the other half; and so long as there is any labor market left this half loaf talk is out of place. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link; and the status of a class must be judged by the condition of its weakest member. You cannot successfully demand what you consider fair wages as long as the power to decide what is fair rests with your opponent. Fair wages is something which cannot be demanded and received from the hands of another. It must be taken, not demanded. Nothing which a superior hands down to an inferior will ever be fair. Therefore the first thing to do is to get control of the power to decide what is fair. When this has been secured the case can come on for hearing and be duly argued and decided.

Remember, comrades, there are no wages but our moral perceptions. When wages was only an incidental and temporary condition of the worker; when there was no such thing as a wage class or a labor market, no wrong was done in working for hire. But out of oppression grew higher needs. When the great mass of the all, whether human labor power, which supports society, is not sacred. The man with hoe, the shovel or the shut, ready to engage in socially useful work must not be compelled to prostitute his labor to some other man for hire. Productive power is as sacred as reproductive power and must not be hired. The fallen man who is forced by necessity to hire himself, is a victim of circumstances not less than the fallen woman, who is driven by the same necessity. The fact that he is a hireling, and is forced to abuse his labor power, effectively excludes him from the society of the ruling class.

Labor is honorable, but HIRING LABOR is not honorable, and no amount of taffy can ever make it so. No one ever claims that hired labor is honorable, except those who have escaped it. That they were successful in getting out of it, not in staying in it. It is continually the boast of self-made men that they were successful in getting out of the wage class. The ancient were right in holding labor to be dishonorable, with them it was slave labor. Our modern orators proclaim the honor and dignity of labor under the hypocritical pretense that it is free labor, that a wage worker has a choice of opportunities and prefers to work for another rather than for himself, and prefers to take a part of what he produces rather than all. To force a man by starvation to put in the full length of his life in grinding out a miserable living for himself, while piling up wealth for others, and then call that free labor, is to add insult to injury, and is a trick that cannot be played forever.

Labor for a livelihood should not be the main business of life, but only an incident of it. The Sabbath, says a great teacher, was made for man, not man for the Sabbath. So also were the week days; these too were made for man, not man for them. All institutions are for man. There is nothing in the universe that can be put to better use than to serve and liberate men. Our children are taught in the schools that they are being educated for the "duties of life." What are these duties of life which are claimed to be more important than the education of men, and for which man is to be sacrificed? Are they anything else than to serve capital faithfully all the days of one's life? Is man made for the duties of life or should he rather live for the duties of education and development of man? Under the present system the principal duty of life is to keep the labor market stocked with high grade labor, sold cheap, so that American capitalists can undersell other nations and control the world market, and thus throw laborers in foreign countries out of employment. This is the paramount duty of life for the workingman. He has no higher duties under capitalist ethics.

The working class has no God, for the reason that there is a power over them greater and greater than God. This power is the ruling class which confronts them at every step, and holds in the hollow of its hand the fate of all its subjects. It can and does give and take away life at pleasure. It exalts or humbles whom it will. God cuts a very poor figure in the mind of a workingman compared with the superintendent of a shop or railway. The superintendent is the one who says what day is Sunday and what day is not; and he sets up the commandments which regulate the life of the workingman. Until a man becomes economically free, until he has an assured livelihood, which is not dependent on the profit on whom of another, he does not care about any so-called higher life. The lower life is about as far as he can get.

Formerly men believed that God gave, kindly power to some and kept it from others, and it took a great deal of scheming to abolish the divine right of kings. Our comrades in Europe are still fighting this fight. To-day men are taught in school and in church that God blesses some with wealth and keeps it from others, and gives poverty to some and keeps it from others, and that capital has certain "duties" toward labor and that labor owes a certain allegiance to capital; for our industrial development has long since passed the point where poverty is excusable except on the theory that it is a divine institution. But when you get at the bottom of this divine secret, it is the control of political power which makes and unmake both kings and capitalists and wage workers, and if anything is divine it is human labor power, not capital.

Comrades, labor power was not made to be sold or hired. Men were not made for institutions, but institutions for men. Nothing is too good for labor to get. Capital is not a gift of God, but is a "blessing" which the ruling class gives to itself by the use of political power. Between the ruling class and the exploited class as a whole there never has been and never can be any compromise. If you are yearning for a higher life, renounce your allegiance to capital and swear fealty to the Co-operative Commonwealth.

NORTH SIDE.

The meeting Tuesday evening at the corner of North Avenue and North Clark Street was a success. Comrades Sand, Morris and Cotrell addressed a crowd of about one hundred.

Questions followed. 100 cards were distributed and a good collection taken up.

Wednesday evening at the corner of Oak and Sedgwick Streets, Comrades Wanhope, Sand and Anderson spoke to a good sized crowd. 100 calls were distributed, and a collection was taken up.

Comrade Anderson is a new speaker and he is doing very well. Who is next on the box?

Thursday evening despite of the rain Comrade Kaplan, Morris and Ruth Dick Hall spoke to a small crowd at Washington Square. A collection was taken up and calls were distributed. This is a good meeting place, rain or shine.

Friday evening comrade Collins held a crowd of one hundred at the corner of Diversey and Racine Aves. A collection was taken and seventy-five calls were distributed, a subscription was also secured. Three new members signed applications at this meeting.

One hundred calls will be taken for this meeting in the future.

Sunday at 4 o'clock and north Clark St., a crowd of one hundred and fifty listened to comrades Sand and Morris.

A good collection was taken up, and one hundred calls distributed. Applicants for membership (2) were taken and subscriptions sold. A discussion lasting until 7:30 P. M. followed.

Sunday evening at the corner of Sheffield and Wrightwood Aves., Comrades Joe Collins and Gus Anderson spoke to the largest crowd that ever gathered at this corner.

The crowd listened carefully and stayed until the meeting adjourned.

A collection was taken up and one hundred and thirty calls were distributed.

Comrade Hall is doing nicely as a speaker; more women ought to take to the "soap box".

All branches who have not, are asked to send to the Division secretary as soon as possible a full list of their club members.

WEST SIDE.

During the past week 17 open air meetings were held on the West Side with an average attendance of 400. A great many Workers' Calls were sold and collections taken. The 15th Ward is holding 4 meetings a week while the 17th Ward has been holding 5 meetings a week.

At the Organizers' Meeting last Sunday preparations were made to carry on an aggressive agitation during the few weeks of good weather. Comrade Klenke tendered his resignation as organizer, which was accepted, and comrade J. B. Smith elected in his place without pay.

SOUTH SIDE.

Agitation on the South Side has culminated in establishing Headquarters for all the South Side branches. The location is good and the center of socialist activity of the South Side. The Hall will be formally opened Sunday, Sept. 15th, with a mass meeting in the afternoon and an entertainment in the evening. A good programme is being arranged and a good time assured. It is urged that every member of the party will turn out on this occasion and make this a success for further particulars watch the "Workers' Call". The audiences of all meetings are growing larger and larger and more interested giving us a continual increase in membership, and large collections.

They are buying more literature, besides which they are subscribing more to the "Workers' Call".

Executive Committee.

Meeting of Executive Committee, Socialist Party, held August 28, with Robbins in the chair. Present: Comrades Robbins and Smith. Absent with excuse: Smiley and Kaplan.

The financial secretary's report was approved. The financial secretary was instructed to send to the branches a complete report covering the period since the first of June and hereafter to make a weekly report of receipts and expenditures for publication in the "Workers' Call".

It was decided to recommend to the General Committee that subscription cards and bundles of calls be sold cash only except to the Divisions.

It was decided that the accompanying address be issued to the membership. The meeting then adjourned.

VOLUNTEERS CALLED FOR.

Comrades—Work of passing the circulation of the Workers' Call is not being pursued with the vigor that the occasion and the field demands. Increase in the circulation instead of being a few hundred a month should be a thousand a week.

With the Workers' Call in the hands of very member of organized labor, politics in Chicago would be revolutionized.

50,000 additional subscribers should be secured before the spring election. The field is here! Where are the workers?

In order to secure the circulation of the Workers' Call and at the same time to place the paper on a firm financial foundation the Executive Committee calls for volunteers to enlist for the war. 50 of these volunteers are called for who will agree to purchase and sell each $1 worth of Call cards each week. We want 15 from the South Side, 15 from the North Side, 15 from the West Side and 5 from the North-west Division.

This is a work that cannot be accomplished by sitting around and fishing. Dozens of men are giving their time three and four nights each week speaking from the stump. With as many more engaged in pushing the circulation of the Workers' Call their labor can be harvested for socialism.

The volunteers asked for should be secured by return mail Monday Morning. The times were never so ripe for socialism and we cannot afford to sit idly by and see the harvest go by default.

Send your name to the Workers' Call. If you will agree to buy $1 worth of cards each week and pay for them and your name will be turned over to the organizer of your division who will see that you get the cards each week. If it is more convenient give your pledge to your organizer.

It is recommended that where one comrade does not feel that he can sell 4 1/2 cent cards that he get three or four comrades to associate with him. The object is to at once get fifty men who make business to ensure in this work. Remember this is a cash deal. No credit goes. The Workers' Call needs $50 additional revenue each week and there is no other way to get it.

Don't wait for someone else. Let your name be first on the roll of Honor.

appreciated this fact if the interest displayed on this occasion is to be taken as proof.

Saturday night of this week will be given to the Mills School of Socialism. All of the speakers who have been trained by Comrade Mills will be in attendance and each will deliver short addresses.

On Sunday night Comrade W. T. Mills will make his farewell address to the local comrades before leaving for his new home in Kansas. This is positively Comrade Mills last address in Chicago, so those comrades who desire to hear him before he leaves had best take advantage of this opportunity.

Admission to both of these meetings is free and all are invited.

FRAGRANT BLOSSOMS.

How the Human Plant Thrives in South Chicago, with Capitalism as a "Culture Agency".

The "American Journal of Sociology" for July, contains an article on "Culture Agencies of South Chicago". The appended extracts describes some of these "agencies":

"In the eastern part of the region north of the river, near the Strand, and Green Bay and Mackinaw avenues, the recent importation of Slavic people have settled chiefly. They are principally men. They gang together in groups of thirty or forty and occupy some old building that no one else will use. I have reliable information that one hundred and fifty Croatsians inhabit one house at Eighty-ninth Street and Green Bay Avenue. The method used is peculiar to these people. Perhaps three-fourths of the men are married and the rest single. The families are left in Europe. The horde of men procure a woman or two to cook for them. Sometimes it is the wife of one of the men. The woman is paid about $15 per month for this service. She buys what each man wants, cooks it for him and settles with the market. Although not a public prostitute, the woman is often shared in common by the men. The men work twelve hour shifts at the mills. Hence but half as many beds are needed as there are men, and therefore the beds never get cold. Many of the houses used, violate the laws for tenement houses and flats as respects ventilation and light. The whole program is one repugnant to civilized instincts."

Where lies the responsibility for these idyllic conditions. Perhaps the following extract from the same article may throw some light on the matter. Speaking of the importation of European labor or the writer says:

"In the last five years perhaps as many as 1200 have come into the community. Their coming is due to the 'straw boss'. The 'straw boss' is a man who works as a common laborer with the gang in the yards. He gains influence with the SUPERINTENDENT by being able to recruit the force quickly for emergency cases. He gains prestige and power with his own people by furnishing them work. This is of financial turn that he leaves a percent on the wages for a time. By this system the wedge entered. Now the 'straw boss' needs ahead, sees that labor will be needed, sends to his friends in Europe to come to South Chicago either directly or through resident labor importers. This is a pauper labor. If the government holds it up, on ship, a CERTAIN RAILROAD over which it is to be transported to Chicago, wires the labor importer in Chicago to send affidavits that friends will provide for the immigrants. This is done, and so the pauper labor is landed and transported.....All these foreign people, especially the recent importations are strong, lusty fellows, capable of hard service and FLAIBLE in the hands of overseers. There is little danger of STRIKES or ORGANIZATION among them. They take what comes of good or evil with steadfast stolidity."

This is how the seed is planted which blossoms into fragrance in the neighborhood of 85th Street and Mackinaw Ave. And this is how it affects the local 'skilled workman'.

"The common labor element at the bottom exists as a kind of reservoir which may be gradually converted into skilled labor upon EMERGENCY. The situation for the skilled worker is therefore one of UNCERTAINTY which breeds TIMIDITY. He feels that he is standing upon insecure earth, which if he should become a LITTLE too INDEPENDENT might open and engulf him. He AVOIDS TROUBLE and is not notably independent, etc."

Perhaps this extract will go far to explain the attitude of the South Chicago steel workers towards President Shaffer's strike order.

In South Chicago, capitalism is the "agency" which produces the "culture" detailed in these clippings, and in order to accomplish these results it is sustained by the votes of the laborers, skilled and unskilled, throughout the land.

MAKES ASSESSORS LAUGH.

Prosperity Howler of 1900 floods city in 1901 in the role of "Tax Dodger."

Most of our readers will remember the speeches delivered by that prince of sweatshop labor skinners, Joseph Biefeld, in Central Music Hall just before the presidential election of last Fall. Then Biefeld worked the "prosperity" racket for all it was worth in aid of the Republican candidate, instancing himself as an example. The Workers' Call commented on the matter, and pointed out that by so doing, Biefeld was merely advocating the continuance of the system which enabled him to rob the workers of the product of their labor.

But Biefeld as a fiasco of labor and Biefeld as a tax dodger, are two different propositions. In the former role he posed as a prosperity personified—in the latter as a horrible example of poverty. This is how the daily press reports his latest representation.

"Both reviewers and assessors laughed today over an interview with J. J. Klein, representing Joseph Biefeld & Co., who tried to get a reduction of the firm's assessments on the ground that it was losing money every day. The two boards sat in joint session. When Mr. Klein sat in the witness chair to plead the cause of hard times for the manufacturing firm he represents, a smile spread over the face of Assessor Gray, who innocently asked:

"How about those prosperity speeches made by Mr. Biefeld in Central Music Hall last fall during the campaign, in which he asserted that last year was the greatest year of prosperity he ever had in his business?"

Mr. Klein was taken off his guard, for he had finished saying the FIRM HAD LOST MONEY ALL OF LAST YEAR and that it was losing more this year. The reference to his partner's public statements to the contrary staggered him.

"Well," he stammered, "YOU MUSTN'T TAKE A MAN'S POLITICAL ARGUMENTS TOO SERIOUSLY."

The reviewers reduced the firm's assessment from the assessor's figure of $175,000 to $100,542.

There is no necessity for a socialist to demonstrate the falsehood and inanity in the public utterances of exploiters of the Biefeld type. When the capitalist is asked to disgorge, he will never shrink from exposing himself, as in the above case. Neither is he ashamed of the performance and he has no reason to be. Those who look his "political arguments seriously" have better reason to be ashamed of their ignorance than he of his rascality. We are glad to see that Mr. Biefeld succeeded in getting his taxes reduced. He deserved it. His ability in duping the workingman, yet has been recognized by the board of assessors and reviewers, and rewarded accordingly. If this is the era of the commercial liar and political knave by all means let us see to it that the stiffest survive.

Socialist Temple.

Walter Thomas Mills will speak on Socialism in Chicago for the last time for the present, at the Socialist Temple on next Sunday at 6 p. m.

On Saturday evening Aug. 31st, the Chicago Branch of the International School of Social Economy will hold a Grand Rally at the same place and will be addressed by Comrade Mills and other speakers.

Amongst them the following, Comrades Pierce, Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. Forberg, Backus, Sands, Menke, Cotrell, Guadalupe and Wigwags. Come early to get a seat. Admission Free.

"While Mr. Morgan and his friends have been making trusts," says the San Diego (Cal.) Sun, a Democratic paper, "they have also been making socialists. The trusts can be measured in figures, and some of these days there will be figures in socialists, and then it will be seen whether the trust figures or the socialist figures are the largest."

A report comes from Seattle, Wash., that the machinists, boiler-makers, pattern-makers and helpers have called a mass meeting of all trade unions and their sympathizers for the purpose of considering the advisability of declaring for socialism and cutting loose from the old political parties.

A. M. SIMONS.

There's a Labor Day row on in Columbus. Committee of arrangements invited Gov. Nash and a lot of other politicians to make the customary buzzy speeches. Thereupon the four brewery workers' unions and the carpenters withdrew, announcing that they would hear a speech from one of their own class or nobody. Good for the brewers and carpenters!

Musicians Attention!

Socialist musicians of the West Side are forming a Brass Band. They meet for practice every Tuesday evening at the Socialist Temple 120 Western Ave., 8 p. m., all comrades who play any band instrument are invited to join. The band will make its first public appearance at the West Side Unity Picnic, Bergman's Grove Riverside Sept. 6.

New York dailies state that half a dozen street cleaning machines are now on the market, and that the "white wings" are doomed.

Multiplex type printing telegraph is now being successfully used in Berlin and Paris. The service of many operators have been dispensed with.

A blast furnace has been established at Port Oram, N. J., which being fed automatically, almost entirely dispenses with manual labor. Whether the laborers whom it displaces will be "fed automatically" or not at all, is of course no concern of the owners.

Striking machinists pickets have determined to ignore Judge Kohlsaat's injunction. This will be all right if they can induce the injunction to ignore them, but that seems to be a rather doubtful task.

every fiber of his body? Why is this? Let us look a little closer into this struggle. It is a guerrilla fight. At times all the forces of capitalism are concentrated upon single divisions of the workers. Again the ranks of labor are scattered by some act of social advance. A new machine destroys an entire trade. A change in production causes an industry to disappear. Then it is that men find themselves out loose.

Their union and trade is represented are alike a thing of the past. Wife and babes are clamoring for food. It is easy to say that a man had better die than scab. Many a man has said this and meant it too. But how about the little ones? What are they starving, that is another matter. And so another man made himself between these two terrible alternatives. He will betray his class or his family? And who shall judge him if the cries of those who are nearest to him sound louder than the appeals of class interests and trade loyalty?

"Look again at this CLASS STRUGGLE. What is there in it that forces these horrible choices upon men? Is there no place where all can unite? Is there no battle ground where the fight can be waged without offering such frightful temptations to treason?"

If all the workers have a common interest against the powerful enemy, why is there not some point where that interest can be expressed? At the ballot box the line can be drawn clear and distinct. Here the fight can be fought to a finish, and HERE IS THE ONLY PLACE WHERE COMPLETE VICTORY IS POSSIBLE.

Here there is no excuse for deserters. No alternative of starvation confronts them. It is the strategic point where desertion is the most dangerous and treacherous the most deplorable. It is the place where the most telling blows can be struck, the place where the worst treason can be perpetrated.

Capitalists have long recognized this, and spend infinitely more energy in securing traitors here than what they will expend at the work-shop. But strange as it may seem the laborers have not yet come to recognize the treachery of the "political scab". A man may still vote for slavery and be accepted with honors among union men. But if he attempts to accept that slavery for which he has voted at times which his fellow slaves are in revolt against, he is at once the target for all possible manner of attacks.

Is it not about time that union laborers got over this inconsistency? Is it not almost time that the greater crime is seen as well as the less? When laborers come to realize that by ceasing to play the traitor at the ballot box they can abolish all scabs in the work-shop, then there will be some consistency in their attacks upon the poor devil who sells out his fellow slaves for a chance to eat and live. But when they do come to their senses in this regard they will find no scabs to attack anywhere.

Trades Unionism.

It is at least recognizing the advantage of having mayors, city councils, and legislatures that represent the own class. Therefore we see the trade unions use by one indorsing the platform of the one and only political party which is composed entirely of workingmen—the Socialist Party. This party offers another advantage, which is not possessed by any economic organization. It combines the forces of the workingmen into an INTERNATIONAL ARMY of voters and meets international capital by international consolidation of the workers. All so-called international trade unions comprise only a few countries, and only a small percentage of the working class. International Socialism comprises the workingmen of all countries and all trades. It is the grandest trade union in the world, and it is better than any trade union, because it is the political expression of the revelation that the workers of all countries will gain their emancipation only through a combination of all the trades unions into one class conscious body that will take the powers of government out of the hands of the exploiters and place them into the hands that feed, clothe and shelter humanity.

THE WORKERS' CALL.

THE WORKERS' CALL, published by the SOCIALIST PARTY of Chicago, has for its aim the education of the working class in the principles of socialism, and the promotion of the interests of the working class. For this purpose only it appears.

"Workingmen of all countries unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains; you have a world to gain."

THIRD YEAR.—WHOLE No. 131.

CHICAGO, ILL., SATURDAY, SEPT. 7, 1901.

PRICE ONE CENT

News of the Week And its Philosophy.

No old party politician who figured as a Labor Day orator attempted to tell in exact figures how much a "fair day's wage" might be. That was what they all said they wanted, but how is the workingman to know if he is getting it when the experts are silent on the subject? The politician does not make a specialty of being specific. He deals in glittering generalities, but there are many straws to show that the generalities do not glitter in the eyes of the workingman as they did once. There is more of a disposition each year to ask the politician how and when and where he intends to do these things, and many workingmen are beginning to realize that they must do them for themselves if they would be done.

Roosevelt went all of the way to Minneapolis to tell the workingmen that the interests of capital and labor are the same. He said many other things, but so far as his address touched on labor topics that was the only specific statement. Labor's interests he said should be guarded by legislation; details could be safely left to the capitalist governments. As long as the wage workers think that way, Roosevelt and his friends can hold the office and enjoy the good things which others have produced.

The dying building-trades council with the scars of the class struggle still fresh, was addressed by a politician who occupies a position as judge. He did not draw the lessons of the class struggle to these men, he was there for the purpose of healing over such things. By this way, did it ever occur to the laboring men who listened that no assembly of lawyers ever asked a laboring man to address them?

From dozens of stumps, socialist orators expounded to the workingmen on labor day the mission of their class and the possibilities for them in united action and there is reason to believe that the seed did not all fall by the wayside. If it could be followed up by a campaign for subscribers that would put the Workers' Call in the hands of every organized man in Chicago it is safe to say only members of their class would address them on next Labor Day.

The ban against politics may be removed at the next meeting of the Chicago Federation, as a vote on the subject has been submitted. That will be all the opening the socialists will want. The small but determined band of socialists in the federation will make short work of such democrats and republicans who remain, except those who hold political jobs or are looking for such jobs and want the labor vote as a trading stock. Give us a hearing and if we don't prove our position, the laboring men are at liberty to continue to vote for the interests of their bosses.

The leaves have been moved down a block, but there is no danger but the girls who are unable to earn a living as wage slaves will be able to find it; as to its idle rich patrons, they will just tell their coachmen to drive on a block.

Wage earners of Great Britain are facing a crisis and those they elected to office are not trying to do anything for them. Perhaps they will send men of their own class hereafter. It is the only safe way.

Through some mistake, perhaps because he would not stand for a "shake down" a resident of the Lake Shore drive was fined for not complying with the garbage law. He will appeal the case to the supreme court. When will the officers learn that vulgar things like garbage laws are only to be obeyed by the poor?

Tomorrow the West Side comrades give their picnic and they want everybody to leave their troubles at home and go out to the grove.

The steel strike drags along, but so far no case of destitution among the stockholders has been reported to the police. The stockholders laid up something for a rainy day; the laboring men out of their wages forgot to save five or six thousand a year; hence they pay now suffer.

Everybody is coming back from the West Side picnic and the moon, aim, for the coming season is nearly over. It will be observed that everybody found a few who had stayed at home. Some of the comrades who remained at home were those who were not of them left it for a month at Saratoga or a run out to the mountains of Colorado. Factory hands for some reason which no one can explain, preferred to remain at the bench in hot stifling air rather than to take their families and go to the woods of Wisconsin to wait for warm weather. It must have been because they are low groveling creatures. Nearly all of the judges and office holders among the workingmen elected somehow found time and money to take lake trips and pay summer hotel prices.

Who would live in the houses on the Lake Shore drive? Is a question.

that was asked of a speaker at a West Side meeting this week. As under socialism there will be no domestic service as we understand it today, the servant girl system being abolished with the fall of the wage system, there seems to be no reason why those who live there at present should not continue to do so. Taking care of such a house as one of those would be splendid exercise for the woman, and the man would no doubt take intense delight in pushing the lawn mower up and down the yard. In his spare time he could carry the horses and oil the automobile. Let them live there, and rational people will live in homes built for comfort rather than show.

If such a thing as a labor day parade could be imagined under socialism there would be no women in the ranks. Women would be taken out of the factories and the sweatshops and placed in the homes where nature intended her to be.

Mr. Bryan does not want to see a new party organized; already there is a third party so large that it troubles his dreams.

Capt. Streeter's claim to the earth is just as good as any other man's claim, only the captain has not got his deeds backed up by force. That is the only difference.

We are about to buy the Danish West India Islands not for the purpose of giving the people of the islands self government under a republic, but that we may exploit them and add to the glory and volume of our commerce. Under a commercial republic things will be about the same to the inhabitants that they were under a commercial monarchy. They will find there is nothing in a name and the ruling classes will see that the inhabitants keep their places.

Republican France should be ashamed of itself for the plans it is making to entertain the czar. When the socialists fully control that country the czar can stay to home, and probably he will have urgent business there with his subjects.

Bryan has absorbed another paper perhaps for the purpose of more effectively smashing the trusts.

A man committed suicide in a big Chicago hotel with four cents in his pocket and the police are unable to even guess at the cause of his act.

Strange but true. Read the papers and see how much more advertising the anarchists get from the capitalist papers than the socialists do.

You bet the millionaires are all honorable men except when it is a dollar in their pockets to be dishonorable. Their actions before the Chicago assessors and the board of review stands as a perpetual indictment against them. Not a one of them told the truth under oath, and they are proud of it.

New York has voted Al Thomas Lipton a rattling good fellow, but so vote has been taken among the laborers whom he exploits in order that he may get a name for generosity among the snobs of two worlds.

Kings are class conscious. Why should not workingmen be? Not one of the kings of Europe will meet the former president of the Transvaal, Paul Kruger, though the people they rule over sympathize with him. A fellow ruler, King Edward, might be offended. A similar spirit among workingmen would give them possession of the earth in a short time, in fact in our day.

Meat cutters are asking for an advance and the packers having recovered from the shock caused by the exhibition of nerve, have agreed to a conference. The workingmen saw the price of meat going up from time to time but nobody came around to inform them of an advance of wages in proportion. The packers absorbed the difference not because any of them were hungry and needed the money but because they could. Now they will want the advance provided they have to, but the chances are they will not have to, having fortified themselves for months with the extra profits.

Southern whites will reap the whirlwind when the negro becomes intelligently educated along class lines. Alabama adopted a constitution practically disfranchising the black man this week. Who could blame him if he one day disfranchised the whites?

Grade crossings kill more people in Chicago than in any other large city in the world. Last year the number was 20, but as most of them were laboring men and women nothing but a three-line item in the newspapers called attention to the fact. Let 200 millionaires be killed in a year and the grades would go on as usual.

There will be no open air Socialist meetings on Sunday Sept. 8th, all the socialists will be at the Unity Picnic on that day at Bergman's Grove, Riverside.

MASTER AND SLAVE

The "True Relationship" Between "Education and Labor."

WHAT THE PROFESSOR SAID.

"Intellectual" Performs in a Circus Tent on the Chicago University Campus.

Here are some of the things, which according to the daily press, Professor Gregory of the University of Leipzig said, at the thirty-ninth convention of the University of Chicago. The address very appropriately took place in a circus tent erected for the occasion on the campus.

"He declared that education was the master, labor the slave, but that neither could long exist without the other."

Just read that again you teller "with your hands." Do you notice that it says that it is not for the fellow who

SIX CENTS PER DAY

How "Thrifty" is Discouraged in South Chicago.

WAGE LABOR AND PROPERTY.

Ambitious Wage Worker Discovers that "Reward of Abstinence" is a Capitalist Privilege.

Last week an episode occurred in a South Chicago police court which is full of significance to those of the working class who take seriously the advice of the "reformers" who incessantly preach the virtue of thrift to the wage earners as an indispensable requisite towards the accumulation of "property," and the acquisition of "respectability."

One Andrew Genecenis was called upon to answer a charge of failing to provide sufficient food for his wife and three children. The evidence showed that Andrew for many years was accustomed to hand over to his wife every day the sum of six cents with which the daily allowance of meat for the family was procured. Andrew himself bringing to the home each evening a loaf of bread and four potatoes.

Becoming tired of this luxurious fare, Mrs. Genecenis had her husband arrested upon the above mentioned charge and the following facts were brought out in the investigation that resulted:

The defendant earned a daily wage of $1.50, but nevertheless was ambitious to become an extensive landholder. He had so far succeeded, that the food which his wife and children didn't get, appeared in the substantial form of a neat cottage and large barn. The thrifty laborer kept his wife in ignorance of the fact that the last installment on the "property" had been long ago paid, and had begun negotiations for the adjoining lot, when she discovered how matters stood and caused his arrest.

The court, instead of encouraging the laudable endeavors of the "property owner," ordered him to provide three full meals daily for his wife and children even if his passion for "property" remained unsatisfied. If the order of the court is complied with, no surplus will remain, and accumulation will become impossible.

Although an exceedingly thrifty person, Andrew has evidently a lot to learn yet about the meaning of "thrift" as it is recommended by capitalist reformers. He does not know for instance that it is really not intended for the purpose of making the laborer a property owner, but rather to cheapen him for the use of the possessing class. A workman has no business to starve his wife and children in order to accumulate wealth—by so doing he usurps a function which is altogether a prerogative of the capitalist class, who have adjusted wages to the cost of the production of the laborer as cheaply as possible. The wife and children may be starved if the capitalist accumulates wealth thereby, but that is legitimate and an entirely different matter. The laborer has no title whatever to the "reward of abstinence." Does not "political economy" teach that it is the peculiar recompense of the capitalist class?

A knowledge of the "laws" of "political economy" would go far to prevent the recurrence of cases like the above. Labor is governed by the law of supply and demand. The recipient of $1.50 per diem receives that sum for the purpose of reproducing his own labor power from day to day, and supplying his family with sufficient to enable them to enter the labor-market in normal physical condition, when his own labor power is exhausted through age. He is supplied with $1.50 for that purpose and capitalist society demands that he expend it for that purpose. If he does not do so, he violates the law of supply and demand, and society must force him to observe it. The laborer has no legitimate surplus; it is not intended that he should have any. He gets the cost of his "production" the capitalist gets everything above that, which his labor creates.

The wage working class as a class cannot create property for themselves by the exercise of "thrift." Their labor creates the sort of property that exploits wage labor, viz. capitalist property. And this is the essence of what was imparted to Andrew Genecenis, when the law commanded him to forego the idea of a surplus, and apply his wages towards providing his wife and children with sufficient food.

Be sure to attend the Unity Picnic, at Bergman's Grove, Riverside on Sunday Sept. 8. Sixty percent of the proceeds will be for the Workers' Call, the balance to the West Side Division of the Socialist Party. Take Metropolitan cars to Harrison and W. 45th and La Grange car from there to Desplaines Ave. Tickets 10c.

Better ventilated and less crowded schools in the rich than in the poor districts, as you may have noticed.

cas tent erected for the occasion on the campus.

"Professor Gregory defined labor as 'toil with hands, the labor of workmen in the physical sense, and the body of such workmen about it.'"

It is rather curious that this heretical doctrine which is alleged to be held only by "socialists," should find a champion in the Chicago University. If this definition is complete, it excludes the thousands of "intellectuals" who sell their brains to the capitalist class for bread, as well as the hard working exploiters of labor, the Russell Sages, Phil. Armons, and others, who are said to do more "labor" than any man in their employ and who are always to be found at their office desks at 7 o'clock every morning, an hour or so before the hired "intellectuals" show up. But to proceed:

"Every one knows," he said, "that the educated need the laboring man to do for them the chores which they cannot or will not do for themselves. If occasionally an educated man comes to think that he does not need labor, eight days without the services of labor would be enough to clear his view of the case."

What do you think about that, you workmen "in the physical sense"? The educated class need you in their business. When they want "chores" done, you get to show to do them. They can't do them. You can. They won't do them. You will. Are you not proud to have your usefulness recognized as unselfishly?

You build the universities, print the books, feed, clothe and house the "educated," do their "chores" and then cannot and will not do anything for himself you could not exist.

The professor is right—you could not exist as a slave. And he is right again when he states that the "educated" classes, the fellows who cannot and will not do anything for themselves, cannot exist without you—again as a slave. You can see for yourselves that the professor looks upon the master and slave relation as the only possible form of society, for the press report says that:

"In these words the Rev. Caspar Ren Gregory of the University of Leipzig summed up what he regarded as the true relationship between education and labor to his address to the thirty-ninth convention of the University of Chicago yesterday."

The report says that the Professor declared that "the workman of today was no more than a child," and concludes as follows:

"The ideas presented were given singular emphasis by the presence of a score of bricklayers, carpenters, and masons working on the new building within full view of the capped and gowned assembly in the convocation tent."

A good time for everybody at the Unity Picnic tomorrow.

France, is composed of members of the Parti Ouvrier, otherwise known as the Socialists, who are the most uncompromising Marxists in the world, and are most vehemently opposed to anything that would compromise in any way the principles of socialism. I have therefore agreed to translate for the Workers' Call the "Manual du Co-operateur Socialiste," by Maurice Lussel, which was published at Paris last year, and which explains the true relations of the co-operatives to the socialist movement.

CHARLES H. KERR.

Every one has heard of the co-operatives, but there are many even among well-informed people who do not suspect that this name is given to societies that are quite diverse in their organization and their object. It is perhaps the ignorance and the confusion it involves which make some ill-informed socialists deny co-operation. Under the pretext that there are non-socialist co-operatives, they reject completely co-operation in all its forms, and thus deprive the Socialist Party of a powerful means of revolutionary action.

What matters it that co-operation is not DISTINCTIVELY socialist? Among the means of action there are many which the bourgeois reaction has appropriated. Does that prevent the Socialist Party from resorting to them? Shall the Socialist Party despise propaganda through the press, because there are bourgeois newspapers? Shall it neglect to hold meetings on grounds that all the bourgeois parties are organizing public assemblies? Shall it not display in the streets the disciplined ranks of its forces adherents because the urge "their fellows to adopt them. We have not heard, however, that any capitalist defrayed the expenses of a deputa-tion to observe the proceedings of the recent workingmen's congress which has just concluded its sessions at Stockholm, Sweden, where it was decided that if universal suffrage was not granted by Parliament within a year, a general strike of workingmen throughout the country would result. Capitalists have no interest in sending workmen to observe the methods by which other workmen propose to use and enjoy the entire product of their labor. The fellow who has the ballot and won't use it is, according to capitalist logic, well worthy of imita-tion; but the fellow who hasn't got it, and proposes to strike for it, is a dan-gerous example for they know full well what he intends to do with it.

ONE YEAR AGO AND TODAY.

Speaking of a small strike which was won last year by the Amalgamated Association, President Shaffer is quoted as stating at the annual meeting held last year in Milwaukee, that the victory was due not to the strength of the Association but the weakness of their opponents. He described the United States Steel Co. as "a collection of bodies without organic form, without rules of government, without sys-tematic plans of operation."

While this description might apply one year ago, it does not fit today. The Trust has taken on organic form, and has evolved systematic plans of operation since then. J. Pierpont Morgan's work of the last twelve months was mainly directed to this end. How well he has succeeded can be deter-mined by his ability to withstand the present assault.

And this is what Shaffer evidently overlooked. He had no adequate conception of what is known as the "con-solidation" of capital. The trust to which he seemed still a mere incoherent "collection of bodies." The mistake he made is now apparent.

While Morgan was busy getting the Steel Trust into organic form, eliminat-ing its weaknesses, and preparing it for such emergencies as the present, the Amalgamated Association still deemed the strike an adequate weapon and en-tered into the struggle with the usual confidence as to the outcome. But the combatants have changed charac-teristics in the mean time. The trust appears solid, compact, and coherent, while the Association has shown an unmistakable symptom of disintegra-tion in the defection of the South Chi-cago workers.

There is little use in ignoring facts, which are plain to all thinking men. Capitalism is growing stronger in the economic field, while organized labor grows weaker. The struggle must be carried into the political field where the votes of the working class will turn the balance of power in their favor. The highbrowness of any other method is being illustrated every day, in the means by which the exploiters of labor maintain their supremacy. From these disputes Socialism will gather the ad-ditional strength necessary to put an end to classes and class struggles once for all.

"PUBLIC OPINION" AND STRIKERS.

An Eastern comrade now engaged in making Socialist propaganda in the districts affected by the great steel strike, sends us a sample batch of cir-culars which he states have been sent through the mail to every workman now on strike against the great Steel Trust. They are mostly composed of editorials selected from different or-gans of capitalist journalism, amongst which the names of the New York Sun, New York Times, Iron Trade Review, and Wheeling (Pa.) Intelligence ap-pear, and all of them without exception lay special emphasis upon the folly and imprudence of President Shaffer, the hopelessness of the struggle against the trust, the fine sense of honor that influenced the workers of South Chi-cago to refuse to violate a contract, the disaster that would ensue were the Amalgamated Association to en-force its demand for recognition, and in short every capitalistic argument that can in any manner assist in impairing and destroying the solidarity of organized labor.

The effect of a deluge of this stuff upon the mind of the ordinary work-man can be readily imagined. Here comes "public opinion" specially manufactured for the occasion, with all its horrors upon the head of the dis-turber. He learns that he is a "dupe," that those whom he has chosen as "leaders" have no qualification be-yond the "gift of gab," that to satisfy their own empty vanity they have brought needless suffering and misery upon him, and that he can only set himself right with "public opinion" by repudiating those who have deceived him and submitting with the best possible grace to the inevitable. The truth or falsehood of these statements is not of near so much importance as the method of their delivery. The striking workman is treated as if he were a creature without any capacity for independ-ent thought, and with no possibility of ever acquiring any. He is merely a receptacle into which "advice" can be shoveled without regard to quality, a monkey creating mischief for which he is not responsible, or as Morgan puts it, "a damn fool who doesn't know what is good for him."

It is this attitude of the press which, far more than the arguments offered, tends to breed distrust in the mind of the reader. The weakness that makes "leadership" indispensable, the well known aversion to independent thought on the part of the working class, and the weight they attach to anything labeling itself "public opin-ion," are all duly calculated upon by those who circulate this stuff amongst the strikers.

Though there can be little doubt but that the strike is practically lost, at present it is the peculiar function of the capitalist press to see to it that so far as possible the losers shall learn no lesson from its failure. Their vision can still be confined within the bounds of the capitalist system of production, by heaping the responsibility for the fail-ure upon the head of the unlucky Shaffer, and thereby implying that had the leader been competent the strike might have been successful.

There is but one method by which this process of mental stagnation can be counteracted. The capitalist class fully appreciate the power and effect of their instrument the press, in paralyzing the minds of the workers at critical periods like the present. The circulation of Socialist literature and party papers is the only antidote pos-sible to destroy the effects of this poisonous narcotic and awaken the sleeper to a realization of things as they are.

A LABOR DAY RETROSPECT.

And so the great Labor Day parade is over. The flags are furled, the bands are silent, and the marchers having "shown their strength" to the capital-ists in the orthodox fashion, have again entered the factories, mills, and work-shops, to pile up wealth for their mas-ters. The parade is a pittance sufficient to reproduce their labor power and raise a new generation of wage slaves to take their place in the labor market in due time. The politicians have bottled up their oratory for future occasions, and the courts are again open for the busi-ness of issuing injunctions against the paraders when the latter attempt to "show their strength" in any other manner than marching through the streets with bands and banners on the day which their masters have de-signated for that purpose.

And now let "business" proceed once more. Let the robbery of the world's toilers continue as usual. Let the work-men be taken from the "home," the children from the school and play-ground and crammed into the factories and department stores to be used as cheap raw material for the production of profit. Let the manufacture of crim-inals and prostitutes proceed without interruption—there is a surplus of the working class as well as a surplus from the working class. Let the par-ades of society devise new methods of squandering the wealth wrung from labor—the harmless reformer again take up his everlasting burden—the perish-ing middle class build their ridiculous barriers against the progress of econ-omic evolution—the trusts go on con-tracting and combining. There is nothing to be feared; the working class has "shown its strength" and capitalism will remain supreme.

Labor Day is over. It was well utiliz-ed by those who live and thrive upon the robbery and degradation of their fellow men. To the marcher it was merely a day of respite from toil—he had no suspicion that the interval was seized upon by his employers as an opportunity to rivet the fetters of in-dustrial slavery more firmly upon his limbs. But the "prominent citizens" and the capitalist politicians were on hand for that purpose. And they filled his ears with flattering tales of what a fine fellow he was; they told him that or-ganized labor was the great-est thing that ever occurred in the world's his-tory, that it wielded an irresistible power, that in organization alone lay safety, that the worker was fighting a battle for his "just rights," that the wage system was immutable, that it was the duty of every man, woman and child that works to join a labor union, that nothing could be accomplished through strikes, that the enemy of labor was not the capitalist but the so-called "public opinion" and the in-terests of capitalism and labor were identical, that the laborer should be protected by the capitalist, that he should be protected from the capitalist, that government by injunc-tion was wrong, that co-operation be-tween laborer and capitalist was the only solution of the labor problem, that profit sharing was a delusion, as the corporations could not be trusted to divide up honestly, that the trusts were organized to crush labor, that the trusts could not do worse for the work-er than competition had done—but one and all shouted, Organize, Organize, Organize! knowing well that the mere fact of organization after the usual Trades Union pattern would still leave the working class naked to their ene-mies.

Out of this medley of "advice" noth-ing could come but confusion and bewilderment and the continued helplessness and dependence of the toilers. And it was for this deliberate purpose it was given.

But here and there men from the ranks of the workers were given a par-ade. They pointed out how organiza-tion could be made effective to accom-plish tangible results—how it could be used for the complete emancipation of the workers from industrial slavery. They used the actions of the courts in issuing injunctions, to demon-strate beyond contradiction that the strength of the plunderers lay in their possession of the law-making power and the weakness of the laborers in its non possession! They gave to or-ganization a direct and definite object, and showed that labor needed neither protection nor patronage, were it but conscious of its own strength, and suf-ficiently intelligent to use that strength in its own interests, by uniting on the political field for the conquest of that political power which is now an in-vincible weapon in the hands of their exploiters.

And so Labor Day passed into his-tory. How far the workers have shown their strength will be accurately deter-mined by the size of the Socialist vote at the next election. How far they have merely demonstrated their weakness, the division of their votes between the capitalist political parties will also tell.

A TIMELY WARNING.

Against Journalistic Lies who Wil-lingly Misrepresent Socialism in Their Columns.

Is it any wonder that the masses of the people in the United States are so slow to become interested in really vital movements? Most of them read nothing but daily newspapers. The daily newspapers are interested in giving as little information as possible about some subjects—especially socialism. In Sunday's Chicago Tribune in an editorial, on "The Fate of Shaffer," the writer viciously states that E. V. Debs is "now wallowing in socialism which would do away with all labor."

It doesn't seem possible that people edu-cated enough to write metropolitan newspaper editorials are ignorant enough to think that socialism "would do away with all labor." Socialism couldn't do that if it wanted to. I am firmly convinced that if it is the policy of the Tribune to deliberately misrepresent, as long as I have known the paper it has been its stated policy to "haile" the cause of labor whenever possible. Years ago, when "Bandy" Maclean was "la-bor reporter" on the Tribune, he said I was right in that opposition. There-fore when the Tribune praises any la-bor leader I begin to suspect them. In the latter part of the Shaffer editorial the writer commended "reason-able thinking men like Mitchell and Ar-thur." See?

I earnestly hope that this may catch the eye of at least one man not yet in the fold of socialism and cause him to think. Why, man, you have only to look in any of the modern dictionaries to learn that socialism is NOT what the Tribune liar says it is.

Master Workmen, you will wake up some of these days to a full realiza-tion of who has been a chump—you or the socialist! Master Workmen, there is not one of the capitalist apologists foolish enough to debate publicly with a well-informed socialist. Last year I asked an able lawyer—a democratic politician—if he thought the socialist argument could be thrown down. I fully expect-ed he would hem and haw and "ex-plain," but quick as a flash he approv-ed: "No, it can't." Keep that in mind, and remember, too, that Bryan has said that he does not believe in socialism!

Master Workmen, please "boop-er" anything that the Tribune may say about socialism. JACK POTTS.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE

Now that you have shown your strength to the capitalists on Labor Day, why not make the demonstration complete by letting them feel your strength on election day? They will never be convinced otherwise.

Isn't it a wise workman who gets so excited over the attempt to rob Schley of the "credit" for the battle of Santiago, that he has no time to con-sider how the capitalist class continu-ally rob him of the product of his labor?

What is the meaning of that sug-gestion that every family in the city should keep a hog to devour the garbage that lies in the alleys? Is it to be taken seriously, or is it merely one of the usual jokes on the shorthandedness of the city aldermen?

The Sultan of Turkey threatens to "wipe out" the Armenians if the cap-italist governments of Europe persist in bothering him with their little bills. So long as he "wipes out" the debts by prompt settlement, the capitalists don't seem inclined to call a halt on his usual recreations.

St. Louis papers use the official assess-ment records of Chicago to show that the city is declining. They should be informed that it is not the city, but the big capitalists of the city who are de-clining—to pay their "just proportion" of taxes. "Capitalist accumulation," or in other words the robbery of the working class, shows no signs of decline whatever.

Maybe it wasn't Judge Eldridge Han-ney who issued that writ of injunction against the striking piano workers two years ago. May it not have been his alleged double, Patrick Hennessy? Cases of mistaken identity are known to be of frequent occurrence. Even al-though Mr. Rush of the firm of Bush & Goria, the capitalists who secured the injunction, says that Hanney issued it, there is still room for doubt and the judge should have the benefit of it.

A non union man who fired at one of the union pickets outside the Allis Chalmers works last week, was found guilty of discharging firearms within the city limits and let go after being ordered to pay the costs. The man on whom he drew his pistol had a camera under his arm and the "snaps" suppos-ing that he was to be "snapshotted" discharged his weapon several times in "self defence." The dangerous villain with the camera was arrested and held to the grand jury for using "intimid-ating language."

A press report speaking of the close of the gambling season at Saratoga, states that it may seem strange to some people that the heaviest players have not been professional gamblers, but lawyers, brokers, merchants and men of affairs. Rather strange the ignor-ance of "some people" upon matters like the above. There is really as wide a difference between professional gamblers and lawyers, brokers and men of affairs, as there is between all-gators and crocodiles.

Dr. Gettling the inventor of the mar-ders rapid fire gun which bears his name, has turned his attention towards improving agricultural instruments, and now claims to have perfected a plow which will break the surface of a thirty acre field in one day, and which can be operated by one man. When this is considered in conjunction with the fact that a Plow Trust with a capitalization of $50,000,000 is now in process of for-mation, it may be easily deduced that a lesson in socialism is being prepared for the farmers and agricultural popu-lation of the United States. Speed the plow.

How are the mighty fallen! Mrs. Carrie Nation, the former terror of Kan-sas "rum sellers" has been giving a fake exhibition of saloon smashing in New York City. She destroyed, says the report, two bottles of beer in a saloon on Mulberry St., where preparations had been specially made by the bar-tenders to allow her to exhibit her prowess. Three reporters for "yellow journals" were also on the spot. Prob-ably this performance marks the exit of Mrs. Nation as a "reformer." As a general rule however, most of the pre-sent day "reformers" begin where Mrs. Nation ended—viz. as fakes.

With the prices of many of the neces-sities of life away beyond the reach of the working class, with the capitalist journals preaching the virtues of rice and hominy to the poor, with labor dis-putes and strikes upon every hand, involving thousands of workers in idleness, Dun's Review of the Week states that the country "was never in a better condition," or in other words that the capitalist class have used to the utmost the powers placed in their hands by the votes of the workers, to ensure their own prosperity through the exploitation and pauperization of their dupes.

The "Investigation" of the recent grade crossing street car "accident" in which six people lost their lives, re-sulted in finding the motorman (who was also killed) guilty of "criminal carelessness," and "condemning" the company for employing an incompetent man. A priest who was present creat-ed a "sensation" by demanding that the officials of the railroad company be held responsible for the deaths, through their refusing to comply with the city engineers' demand for the removal of the tracks. The demand not being ob-tained, the priest then wanted to know how long this slaughter of work-ing people was to continue, adding that he was "going to Chicago" and the engineers in question, can receive full information on the subject by ap-plying to Father McGandy of Bellevue, Ky., who can tell him very accurately how long the slaughter will last. Father McGandy being a socialist knows about it.

That capitalism has reached the stage where it can view with compara-tive unconcern the efforts of organized labor to secure a larger portion of the general "prosperity" to its members, may be deduced from the few con-temptuous lines allotted to the steel strike, which appears in Bradstreet's Review. This is about all they have to say on the matter. "The air of patient serenity with which the iron and steel trade view the trade and strike situation, is significant of the confidence growing that the end of the strike is in sight." This "patient serenity" is fully justified. While the work-ing class through their votes persist in placing their exploiters in an impre-nable position, it is not wonderful that the latter regard with stolid contempt the futile efforts of the workers to retrieve on the economic field the folly displayed at the ballot box.

CORRESPONDENCE.

From Headquarters.
St. Louis, August 23th, 1901.
To the delegates to the Socialist con-vention held at Indianapolis, Ind., from July 15th to August 1st (inclusive). 1901.

Comrades—You are hereby reminded of the pledges made during the conclud-ing hours of the above convention, for the purpose of starting the work of the newly elected National Committee.

These pledges amounted to $240.00, of which only one quarter has been paid, up to the present time. The National Committee has been under extraordinary expense, and its resources are being taxed to the utmost in order to furnish the necessary printed matter containing instructions on organization, constitutions, platforms, application blanks, etc. Expense has been incurred in equipping the National Headquarters; in sending out one thousand official communications and circulars to labor unions in the strike field; for stenographer's services and for postage for official purposes, espe-cially in corresponding with comrades in every state in the union. The amount of money which we have on hand is alarmingly small and we there-fore ask you to do your utmost to make good any pledges made at Indianapolis, all of which it was understood were to be paid within 30 days.

Yours fraternally,
LEON GREENBAUM,
National Secretary.

Scribe Fund Report.

Aug. 31, 1901.
To the Socialist Party Press:
The National Committee of the So-cialist Party has received the following donations in answer to its letter of Ap-pel in behalf of the Amalgamated As-sociation of Iron Steel and Tin Work-ers:

New London Socialist Club, New London, Conn. $1.00
New Castle Socialist Club, New Castle, Penn. 2.50
Socialist Sympathizers, 2.50
Coopers International Union No. 3, St. Louis, 10.00
A Socialist, San Francisco, Cal. 3.00
The fund is now open and we hope the Socialist press will take it up and push it.

No better work can be done at the present time in identifying the Socialist Party with the trade union movement. If you open your columns weekly to this appeal we feel assured that your "Strike Fund" will grow larger. From the generous response not alone of so-cialists, but of union men also yet read socialist papers, but have not yet joined the party.

All contributions sent to the National Secretary will be forwarded to the Amalgamated Association and receipt duly acknowledged.
Yours fraternally,
Leon Greenbaum,
National Secretary.

Resolution of Local Toledo, O.

WHEREAS The following comment on the contribution adopted at the late Socialist convention, by the SO-CIALIST PARTY, should show to all persons of practical experience, the danger facing our party in its present formative stage:

Then, again, the convention de-clared for state autonomy, which means that reformers in every state shall adopt for themselves a platform to meet their ex-isting environment without regard to the platform of other states, and

WHEREAS We believe that party proclaiming the economy of the largest possible conduct of affairs as the nat-ural evolutionary order, should not adopt the reverse of this in its own or-ganization. The early colonial history of our country shows the weakness of the autonomy idea, as does the trades union movement of to-day;

RESOLVED That Local Toledo asks that the National Committee be called upon to furnish a uniform application blank for membership, individual appli-cation for membership, due card and due stamps, and be it further

RESOLVED That a copy of these res-olutions be sent to the WORKER, WORKERS' CALL, and MISOURI SO-CIALIST for publication, and request all Locals to take like action, believing such action necessary as a means of protection until more specific consti-tution is provided.

Adopted by Local Toledo, Socialist Party, at a regular meeting held on Aug. 27, 1901. Other papers please copy.
T. F. KEOGH,
Toledo, Ohio. Secretary.

Will "Prosperity" Explain It?

Your "Snapshots by the Wayside" may quote the "average retail clerk" as a $1 per week worker. About the year 1900, a retail clerk in Chicago, who was an experienced dry goods salesman, worked in one of the largest furnishing houses in the city at the sales counter for $5 per week, and was as "hard of the chase" in Chicago that he went back to Philadelphia. How he "moved" up the money to get back was the problem. He was a church member, a member of the Y. M. C. A. and a devotee of the Chicago publican party, but probably none of these charitable agencies furnished him a ticket back to Penn. It seems that the "average retail clerk" in Chicago is better off by two dollars per week than he was in the rights.

Socialist Pointers

Roosevelt evidently figures that you can fool the workmen all of the time.

This is the last call for the picnic, do tomorrow, for it positively will not be postponed.

Roosevelt will fool a lot of them next time; so will Bryan. See how they were cheered on Labor Day.

The laboring man can march for him-self as long and as often as he wants to, provided he votes for the boss.

Have you enlisted to get subscribers for the Workers' Call? Soldiers were never needed like at the present.

Socialism will also do away with the labor "leader." Perhaps that is one reason why said "leader" is so shy of it.

The man who did no work all summer is now afraid the strikers will lose a few days' work from their daily grind.

The unions have nothing to lose by going into class politics; what have the capitalist parties ever done for them?

Sam Jones of Ohio can keep his old sympathy as long as his vote does not accompany it; the latter is what we can use.

A laboring man never knows when he is well off until he reads it in the papers; that is what capitalist papers are run for.

The injunction eats nothing and costs nothing for board and lodging. That is why the capitalists find it so conven-ient to use.

Some comrades fear socialism will come before we are ready for it, but it will not if everybody is a subscriber to the Workers' Call.

Diamond cutters are on a strike and there is much suffering in consequence. Comrades who bought their diamonds before the trouble are in luck.

If you want a thing done well do it yourself. Don't send a republican or democrat to do it. He might look out for himself and his class first.

The employer who takes his employee out in the country for an outing, should graciously unbow and allow the lower creatures to feel of his wings.

Roosevelt complains that men do not practice what they preach, but let him handle a strike before and after elec-tion and see if his practices match his theory.

No one will be arrested for gambling on the yacht race. The laws are not for gentlemen. Neither will any of the sports lose their standing in church for that offense.

Women are replacing men as tellers in Chicago banks, but the interesting part is that the bosses with grave faces assure the public that they will pay the women as much as they did men.

One might think Judge Hanney had nerve to address a gathering of laboring men, but not when you come to consider the number of laboring men who voted for him.

will become a "bloated capitalist" all right, but "it" is a very doubtful quantity. The Standard Oil Co. may be depended upon to do all in their power to prevent Mr. Bryan from this "bloated capitalist" in the oil industry as much as possible, and permit Mr. Bryan to hold his present political opinions pure and undefiled. The "bloated capitalist" is not in such imminent peril after all.

Reform as a Business.

Verily the ways of the evil doer are hard—sometimes. The president of the New York State LAW AND ORDER society has been arrested on the charge of blackmailing a saloon keeper. Another "reformer" whom he had employed as a collector of tribute from saloon keepers, has fled on a warrant to the effect that Russell, the "President" in question had suggested the murder of the saloon keeper. The following extract from this affidavit appears in the daily press:

"I can get this man Nutter killed. Do you think I had better do it?" The man's audacity dared me. I had known him as a blackmailer and Nemesis of unfortunate women, but it had never occurred to me that he would use his influence to commit the criminal class of the city to compass the death of a fellow citizen.

"My God," I exclaimed. What kind of a man are you? Would you use murder to your other sins?" He merely smiled and turned away.

Whether the charges against this champion of "law and order" be proved or not, the incident is strongly suggestive of the possibilities which the career of "professional reform" opens up to the young man starting out in business.

An "Imposing" Spectacle.

This is how the meeting between two great men on Labor Day is described in the press:

"Hello, Judge," said Mr. Mayer.

"How do you do?" said Judge Hancock.

"God bless you both," echoes Senator Mason, as he raised his hand and assumed a pious air.

This is very different from the situation last April when both these men were seeking the vote of the workers in order to reach the Mayoral chair. Then the city was covered with posters depicting them as wrestlers, Harrison having a "strange hold" on Hancock and trying to push his head through the mat. Labor day proved that it was only a sham fight after all, although the workers took it seriously. Whatever other differences there may be between them, they are of one mind as regards the working class. Harrison proved it by terrifying organized labor with galling guns, and ordering the magistrates to give the striking pickets "the limit of the law," while Hancock did his part by issuing injunctions against union men on strike. The little grand stand play of "reconciliation" that took place between them on the balcony of the Auditorium on the parade day was merely one of the "imposing spectacles" of the day's proceedings. The hypocritical denunciation of Senator Mason adding a tinge to the impression.

THE "RED SPECTRE"

Like Ghost of Murdered Banquo, It Will Not Down.

IS INHERENT IN CAPITALISM

Modern Society Stands in Malignant Terror Before Monster of Its Own Creation.

Beyond all question the event of the week which has attracted more than any other the attention of the so-called civilized world was that which occurred at the Pan American Exposition, in Buffalo, on Friday, September 8th, when the chief magistrate of the nation fell before the pistol of a murderous lunatic, in whose feeble brain the idea of assassinating President McKinley took the form of duty.

It would be perhaps unfair to comment seriously upon the first hysterical outburst of the capitalist press when the deed was first announced. It has been merely the usual mixed chorus of sorrow, wonder, alarm, and denunciation with which such events are always hailed, but which have never had the slightest effect in deterring the "propagandist of the deed" when the insane spirit of murder urges him to the treacherous assassination of some prominent individual whom he has selected as a victim.

Again and again these tragedies have occurred and have been followed by the enactment of repressive measures against the perpetrators, declarations of intention to stamp out anarchy by exterminating the individuals who avow it as a creed, until the murder of some ruler of high state official again demonstrates the futility of such methods.

It is almost unnecessary to say that every human being worthy of the name regards these tragedies with regret and sorrow. The wanton destruction of human life can be viewed with equanimity only by those who are either dead to all human feeling or who possess the characteristics peculiarly attributed to brutes.

But even less than repressive measures can these expressions of sorrow and grief, these countless telegrams of condolence and sympathy, do ought to diminish or check the recurrence of these ghastly episodes. Those who would really understand the nature of this murder crime must apply themselves to its study in the same manner by which other problems are solved.

In this inquiry sentiment is valueless, and the so-called repressive measures themselves prove that they do not repress. It will be apparent to all who have read the comments of the daily papers upon the attempted assassination of McKinley, that the dominant tone is one of despair. It is asked again and again has society no means of protecting its representatives against the murder madness of these criminal lunatics. And there has been no answer except the advocacy of still more repressive measures which have so signally failed in the past. Before this apparition, this "red spectre," present society stands in seemingly helpless terror.

Neither does it help the matter to insist that this menace is a European importation. The would be assassin of President McKinley was born within the United States and there are hundreds of native born Americans who avow themselves adherents of the cult.

Only a few suggestions can be given upon this subject within the space of an article like the present. Did it ever occur to those who are in the habit of inaugurating "crusades" against some particular form of "vice," that even when one of these attempts is apparently successful, nothing is really accomplished except that the suppressed vice reappears under another form or in another locality? Did it ever strike them that here in Chicago "reform" of this sort when applied to the "leaves" and other criminal districts is admitted on all hands, even by the mayor, to result in nothing more than the carrying out of an order to "move on"? Has it not been insisted on by the mayor of this city that vice cannot be exterminated, but at best only isolated or moved around? Between the persistence of murderous anarchy and the "vice" of our large cities is there any analogy?

Is there any reformer who would seriously advocate the extermination of sneak thieves, hold-up men, burg-lars, pickpockets, prostitutes, lunatics, and similar types of humanity as an effective means of ridding the world forever of their presence? If not, is there any better reason for believing that the dangerous type is likely to disappear if subjected to a like process? Can the numerous attempts to better the condition of the working class be fairly said to have succeeded? Have the extremes of wealth and poverty been diminished or intensified within recent years? Can the trusts be legislated out of existence? Can the interests of capitalists and laborers be harmonized? Ask any thinking man for his opinion upon such subjects and he will refer to them as "problems" which are not now capable of solution.

but which may be at some future time, but he will agree that they are social phenomena produced by present conditions, because inherent in them.

Might it not also be asked whether Capitalism, Greed, Lucubration and Caserio are not likewise products of present conditions? And if this is admitted, is it not reasonable to infer that their production will not cease until the conditions are changed?

Will the capitalist press ever deal with the problem in this manner. So far they never have. And the reason is obvious. It would infallibly lead to the conclusion that anarchy cannot disappear until the present structure and basis of society is transformed.

Capitalism is no chance product. It is merely an exaggerated individualism, a product of conditions which are themselves anarchistic. Even the utterances of the press and pulp upon this event are "essentially" anarchistic in tone, though the speakers may be unconscious of the fact. Like produces like—and in this case also without conscious knowledge. Confronted with the "red spectre," modern society shrinks back in terror and alarm, unable to recognize its own offspring.

Unable and also unwilling. For the disappearance of anarchy is conditioned upon the disappearance of the system which gives it birth the system of capitalist production and distribution. And this task is the peculiar mission of the socialist movement alone.

The Unity Picnic.

Considering the rather bleak weather of last Sunday, the Unity picnic held at Bergman's Grove, Riverside by the West Division organization of the Socialist Party, was on the whole very successful though there is little doubt but that a rain of ten degrees in the temperature and a few hours of sunshine in the forenoon would have considerably more than doubled the attendance. As it was nearly one thousand persons were present and enjoyed themselves greatly, as the afternoon brought much more pleasant weather than the morning.

The games were participated in by numerous contestants and were well arranged and managed by the committee. Short speeches from various comrades were well received though a resolution dealing with the attempt upon the life of President McKinley was not acted upon.

Dancing was kept up until about 10 P. M., after which the audience dispersed. The accounts have not yet been made up but it is likely that the financial outcome will be very satisfactory.

An Exceptional Editorial.

When John Collins, a Chicago machinist, declared before a Labor Day audience of seven thousand men, women and children in Des Moines that he was a Socialist and that Socialism is the only true solution of the labor problem, he was loudly cheered by his hearers.

Mr. Collins apparently expected that his radical utterances would provoke dissent and would be coldly received, and was evidently surprised to find his audience in hearty sympathy with his advanced position.

There is probably a good deal more Socialist opinion among the people of this country than appears in the election returns. The Socialist vote is increasing slowly but steadily in all parts of the country. All radical movements are taking a Socialist form and direction; and it would seem from present indications, that this country would ultimately have to face the problem of Socialism, as the countries of the old world are having to do. In Germany the Socialist group in the Reichstag represents the most numerous of the constituent, and in every other country in Europe the question is regarded as the most vital of the day. It will doubtless become, in time, equally so in the United States.—Des Moines (Ia.) Daily News.

A Socialist Basis.

How else can any government guarantee liberty to men save by providing them a means of labor and of life, coupled with independence? And how could that be done unless the government conducted the economic system upon which employment and maintenance depend? What form of happiness—so far as happiness depends at all upon material facts—is not bound up with economic conditions? And how shall an equal opportunity for the pursuit of happiness be guaranteed to all save by a guarantee of economic equality?—Betsey's Equality, page 17.

Believing in Unity.

The picnic and sports which were out in great force last Sunday at the West Side Picnic. NOTES TRACES OF VANDALISM Forests Destroyed, Springs Dried Up, and Beautiful Country Transformed Into a Barren Waste.

The last six weeks were spent by me in a little country town in Wisconsin where I had been born and raised and spent my childhood. It is a country of marvellously beautiful scenery. Rivers and rivulets flow between great bluffs and massive granite cliffs far out here and there and fill the whole country with a wild beauty. As I knew it great forests stretched for miles with scarcely a break. Hundreds of springs burst out from crevices in rocks and at the edges of the bluffs and flowed away through the forest leaving a ribbon of bright green to mark where the added moisture gave new life to vegetation. This was as I had known of it, as I had dreamed of it in the midst of the city's dirt and noise and conflict and as I hoped to find it on my return.

ARE THEY RELATED?

Attitude of Capitalist Society Towards Anarchy

SOME LINKS IN LOCAL CHAIN

For the Truth of Which Our Readers Are Referred to the Files of the Chicago Public Press.

Is there any connection between capitalism and anarchy? Perhaps the reader who has been devouring the hysterical denunciations of Capitalism in the daily press will reject the idea with contempt. Surely, he may say that present society with its loudly proclaimed "thrills of horror" and "horror of anarchy" and all the rest of it, can have nothing in common with the monster of anarchy. But it would be as well not to be too hasty in drawing conclusions. If the reader happens to be one of these simple minded persons we would ask leave to call his attention to the following facts, and for their corroboration refer him to the capitalist press of this city.

Only a few months ago an avowed anarchist visited the city for the purpose of delivering a series of lectures.

His name was Kropotkin, Peter Kropotkin. PRINCE Peter Kropotkin, from which it may be deduced that he was no ordinary individual. Indeed his name was and is known over the world as a famous exponent of the anarchist "philosophy."

Now how was he received? In the first place every capitalist journal in this city notified his arrival with liberal space in their columns. Some of them even gave him, notice on their front pages, and not one hint was even whispered that he represented ideas that were in any manner whatever dangerous to society. For proof of this just look up files of local papers.

Now who received him in this city? Well, Mrs. Potter Palmer for one. Now who is she? She is a recognized leader, not only in Chicago but in American "society." She has been presented to most of the crowned heads of Europe, and has created no end of "sensations" both in Europe and America by her marvellous toilet, and her ability as a "society leader." Mrs. Potter Palmer received and lionized the anarchist PRINCE. He was wine, dined, fêted, and duly presented to the "best society" in this city, and generally made much of, all of which was again duly recorded in the Chicago capitalist journals.

Now we don't want to state that the idea of murder ever entered the mind of the PRINCE. Far from it indeed, although principles are as a rule not altogether above regarding it when their interests are threatened, as a necessary claim in history will show. But who else received the Prince during his stay here? Who for instance formed his committee of arrangements? Well, Abraham Isaak was one of them, the editor of the Anarchist Journal in this city. He and several of the men who were arrested the other day on a charge of conspiracy to murder President McKinley. The police are using every known method to prove their complicity. But one thing is seemingly undeniable. The would-be assassin was personally known to them men. That they had any direct hand in the attempted assassination we do not believe but nevertheless the connection is plain and palpable. Isaak and the others who were of Kropotkin's committee, unfortunately were not Prince's

HE WAS "TALKED" TO

Adventures of a Socialist at the City Hall

A ZEALOUS OFFICER'S ADVICE

Distributor of Workers' Call Receives a Remarkable Lecture on Class Domination.

One of our comrades, Dr. J. M. Rouf, relates a rather remarkable experience which befell him last week, and which is significant as showing the distinct recognition of class interests upon the part of those entrusted with the preservation of capitalist law and order.

The comrade, who knows enough to push a good thing along, was engaged in distributing copies of the Workers' Call last Saturday amongst the groups of people who usually congregate around the city hall. Although this is a usual practice with him, he has never before been interfered with, but on Saturday his immunity came to an end. A zealous detective laid his hand upon the comrade's shoulder and declared him under arrest on the charge of circulating "anarchist" literature.

The comrade was at once haled before a police captain who was within the city hall, and who inquired as to the nature of the literature which he was distributing. It was an easy task for Comrade Rouf to convince the officer that the papers were not only not "anarchist" but directly opposed to the alleged "philosophy" which passes under that title. The following short dialogue then ensued:

Police Captain—What is your occupation?

Prisoner (presenting his card)—I am a dentist.

Police Captain—Then why don't you attend to your business?

Prisoner—I am doing that very thing. It is my business to distribute these papers.

Police Captain (to detective who made the arrest)—Take him over there (pointing to the other side of the room) and talk to him.

The detective then commenced his "talk" under the guise of good advice. It was something like the following:

"What reason have you for a 'pamphlet' man to identify yourself with the working class? Their interests are not yours. You are a dentist and therefore belong to a higher class. You have nothing in common with them. You will find it to your advantage to leave the distribution of such papers to the working men. I am surprised that a man in your position as society should be so solicitous about furthering the interests of people in a lower class than yourself," etc., etc.

The zealous one, having delivered himself of this class conscious admonition, was still more surprised when Comrade Rouf insisted that although he was not a wage earner in the ordinary sense, still his best interests were bound up with the interests of the working people, and that he intended to work for those interests notwithstanding the opinions of other people on the matter. Finding the comrade altogether impervious to this method of reasoning, the detective dismissed him with a parting shot. "I know," he said, "your name, I know your address. And I will watch you in the future, and if I catch you again, will make an example of you."

With this threat ringing in his ears, Comrade Rouf left the building, having received considerable matter for thought from the interview. But the distribution of the Workers' Call will not suffer in consequence. Comrade Rouf will continue to distribute his usual quota of one hundred per week until further notice, as he considers that the good work should not stop until every workingman recognizes his class interests as clearly as the intelligent detective who arrested him.

Illustrated by Myth.

"In one of his most beautiful poems, Victor Hugo shows us the Satyr of Mount Olympus, rising, hairy and black into the proud assembly of the gods. They greet him with revulsion. He responds with a song of defiance. Mercury gives him his flute. Apollo, subdued, reaches out to him his lyre. The revolutionary song rises like an increasing shout to the vault of heaven, and the finger in his turn expands; the immensity of space enters into this black form; it is the entire world which rises and overthrows the throne of Jupiter."

Is not Socialism the Satyr of the Legends of the Centuries? At first feeble like him, covered with mire and hair, despised when he appears. Later they fear him when he begins to grow. But behold him growing still; he seizes the flute of Mercury; he grasps Apollo's lyre. He gathers to himself all the powers of art, all the arms of science; he rises before them who thought themselves immortal, and soon, his foot upon their throne, in the fall of power, he, in his turn will cry to them: 'All must give way! I am Pan; Jupiter sink to your knees!'—From "Collectivism," by Emile Vandervelde.

Cuban "Patriotism."

A writer in the September "Forum" reaches the conclusion that the Cubans are not "capable of self government" and predicts that the native administration will squander the revenues of the island, so that the development of the country will languish. Commenting upon this the Tribune editorially remarks:

Even if fraud did not decrease the sum total of existing revenues, these revenues will prove inadequate because of increased expenditures. Not only will complete independence mean more enlarged offices but the "army of liberation" will be at the doors of a Cuban Congress with its demands for back pay, bonuses, and pensions. These are demands which a "patriotic" Congress could not refuse to comply with.

It is easy to see from this just how much "patriotism" amounts to when the capitalist class have no further use for it. Just previous to the Spanish war the ragged "patriots" of Cuba were lauded to the skies in every capitalist organ throughout this country. Now however when the danger arises that a "patriotic" Cuban Congress may perhaps be inclined to reward these men at the expense of the "development of the country," the capitalist press finds no difficulty whatever in reversing their attitude towards "patriotism" and re-presenting it on an unequalled rudeness. It was quite proper of course that a Roosevelt should qualify for the Vice Presidency upon the strength of his "heroism" at San Juan, but the men who fought for Cuba Libre more years than Roosevelt did hours, have no claim whatever to consideration. Their "patriotism" was of no value to American capitalist interests after the war with Spain had been settled, but with Roosevelt it was different.

Are you still listening to the subscription?

SOCIALISM.—"When sister Justice gets tired hacking away at the brood, I'll fix the old hen."

But what a change was there. In spite of all I knew of the blighting power of capitalism I had somehow hoped that this little spot had been saved by. Over and over again I would climb to some commanding position from which I had once seen stretch on stretch of forest green, only now to see acres of barren rock-ribbed and arid fields. Ragged bluffs and rocky cliffs that I had known as almost inaccessible in their isolation and as yet marked by no sign of the hand of man, I found inclosed with barbed wire and covered with warnings against trespassers, while the rocks themselves were covered with glaring advertisements. At other places it was even worse. Spots of great natural beauty would be only approached after tribute had been paid to the fetish of private property.

Where were the patridge rose with hollow sounding flight at the approach of man, one now heard the whining voice of the seller of "bibles" and "mementos."

The cutting of the forests had left the land in many places a barren waste. Deprived of its protection the soil became hard and shed the rain like a roof leaving only the bare baked earth behind. Over and over again I sought some place where I had once known of a beautiful spring, only to find a bare place devoid even of vegetation while the former ribbon of green along the banks had turned to a dark brown streak of decayed vegetation. Everywhere the hand of man had been laid out to blight. The land was valueless for anything, but forests, and private greed under individual ownership can not afford to care for future generations.

When I met my old playmates and neighbors the first question always was, "What are you working at?" They always followed, "Does that pay well?" Never was I asked if it was the thing I enjoyed doing. Nobody ever dreamed of enquiring if my work was also my recreation and none would have understood had I told them so. When they learned that editing a socialist publication was not a speedy road to wealth I was put down as a "failure." Whenever the conversation would turn, as it always did, on former acquaintances I was always informed that such a one was "successful."

thought perhaps he was a socialist. I fear his father would scarce recognize the old revolutionary doctrines in the milk and water philosophy of the son. But the lesson is working, the field ripe and an efficient socialist organizer could lay the foundation of a strong socialist movement.

Lecture at Temple.

Owing to the West Side Picnic there was no meeting at the Temple last Sunday. On the Sunday of September 1st, the building was packed to the doors by listeners who came to hear Walter Thomas Miller's last speech in Chicago.

On next Sunday night, September 15, COMRADE A. M. SIMONS, editor of the "International Socialist Review" will speak at the Socialist Temple, 139 So. Western Ave.

SOCIALISM VS. ANARCHY. This will be Comrade Simons' first address since his return to Chicago from Wisconsin. We hope for a large attendance. Admission Free.

Labor Day in Peru, Ill.

At the request of the mayor of Peru, Ill., Comrade Musgrave of Chicago visited that city on Labor Day for the purpose of making a public address. The Comrade made a most effective speech, which was listened to most attentively, and frequently interrupted with bursts of applause. Comrades Conrad and Wright accompanied the speaker in hope of being able to organize a local branch of the Socialist party, but discovered that any one joining such an organization would be liable to immediate dismissal from employment. Consequently the idea was abandoned. The mayor presided at the meeting and the three visiting comrades were most generously provided for during their stay in the city.

Bricklayers, Attention!

All Bricklayers are requested to be present at 743 W. 43rd St. on Sept. 21st 8 P. M. South Side Club will be organized, Comrade Jos. Wankopp, Editor of the Workers' Call, will address us. This is an intellectual treat. Bring your friends.

Special Notice.

If you desire to know what the position of the Socialist Party is on the subject of anarchy, come to the Socialist Temple, 139 S. Western Ave. on Sunday night Sept. 16. A. M. Simons, editor of the International Socialist Review will speak on Socialism versus Anarchy. A full report of the lecture will appear next week in the Workers' Call.

About the only "labor law" that the Pennsylvania legislature enacted from the large batch of bills handed in was one to increase the number of mine inspectors. Now it turns out that clearing errors have been discovered in the law, and it is quite probable that it will become a dead letter.—Terre Haute Teller.

These having cash or tickets for the West Side Picnic Committee will please make return at once to the Workers' Call office.

The Chicago American in one of its remarkable "socialist" editorials begins a paragraph in this manner: "The thoughtful socialist of the time of Solomon and the Queen of Sheba would have, etc., etc." This is just about the caliber of the Chicago American and is the very sign one would expect from such a source. It goes on better than the "U." mentions 100 million individuals who persist in speaking of the socialism of Jesus Christ. To persons with such a conception of socialism society can only be regarded as something similar to a chess board the figures on which can be shifted about at will. Those who hold that socialism was possible in the time of Jesus Christ, or even a century ago, and who believe that in those days any one could have had a conception of the socialist philosophy, cannot understand the Marxian interpretation of history. Society is a development and capitalism is one of its stages. Without modern industry a true idea of socialism was impossible. Before capitalism socialism was impossible.

Names Cause—Domestic Effect.

Governor Northcott addressing the Labor Day marchers at Springfield, Ill., declares that there was "no room for class hatred" in this country. He may be right, but it is just as well to call his attention to the fact that there is no much room for the class struggle in this country, that little is left for anything else. Truly Northcott must be an optimistic individual regarding the economic antagonism between classes if he thinks there is no room for its expression. Here is what he says regarding labor:

"In all these heavy ages labor has been a commodity to be bought in the market the same as horses, coal, iron and other commodities. Governed by the law of supply and demand, labor has been treated under the yoke of the Boardman law that the wages of toil would always be brought to the level of the cost of the bare living of the toiler."

According to Northcott, the laborer should manifest no resentment at being treated as a commodity. He has been rebuffed in past ages therefore the rebuff should continue. A bare living is all that the "civilization" of the 19th century can offer to him. Those who produce the wealth of the world are to be just sufficient to enable them to go on producing, and exhibit no dissatisfaction. And yet it is extremely probable that Northcott would call the Socialist a visionary and dreamer, after making such an exhibition as the above himself.

Two Invitations.

Owing to the divided opinions of its members, the 36th Ward Branch will hold a meeting at Educational Hall, corner Milwaukee and Armitage avenues, on Friday evening, September 20th, to discuss the subject, "Immediate demands." As it was thought the subject is of interest to other branch members as well, the invitation is hereby extended to all socialists to come and express their opinions, whether for or against, so that an understanding may be reached, and the party be able to enter the coming winter campaign with no divided opinions.

Tuesday, September 24, a Socialist Cigarette Educational Club was formed at Educational Hall. The object of the Club is to educate and work for socialism among the cigarette smokers; to get all socialist cigarette smokers formed into one body, and through their united efforts introduce socialism into their respective unions. The club will meet regularly every week at the above named hall, meeting night will be announced as soon as it is settled upon. All cigarette smokers, who are socialists, or who see the wrong and cruelty of the present capitalist system, are requested to send their name and address, until further notice, to the undersigned.

THE WORKER

MECHANICAL CRYSTAL

Lecture delivered by A. M. Simons at the Socialist Temple, 120 S. Western Avenue, Sunday, Sept. 15, 1901.

Anarchy and Capitalism in Africa.
Now it so happens that the present ruling class profit by the continuance of the present economic system. Hence they are willing to tolerate and indeed encourage such conditions and will perpetuate that system. But the socialists have come to realize that the days of the economic system of capitalism and anarchy are numbered and the world is now ready for a new step in social evolution, the dawn of the era of co-operation and human brotherhood. They are seeking to educate the people in economic matters to the end that the workers may actually become the rulers in the present state and may then use

SOCIALISM VS ANARCHISM.

We desire to call the special attention of our readers to the report of the lecture delivered by Comrade W. M. Simons at the Socialist Temple last Sunday which occupies the first and third pages of this issue. Regarding the lecture itself we need say no more than that it represents substantially the position of socialists towards what is known as "anarchy," though this by no means implies that all phases of the subject are exhaustively treated, or that upon certain points no further question is possible. This of course the readers will judge for themselves, though even if they differ to some extent with some of the speakers conclusions, it will hardly be denied, we think, that it represents in the main the general attitude of our movement towards anarchy.

This lecture was delivered to an audience which literally packed the building far beyond its seating capacity, and which conservatively estimated, could hardly have been less than a thousand. The lecture was heard in the deepest silence and attention; which was only interrupted occasionally by bursts of applause.

It is significant of the dread of capitalism towards a real exposure of anarchy, that although copies of the text of this lecture were sent to every daily paper in this city, not one of them dared to publish even a synopsis of it. One paper has two paragraphs as a weapon against the opposition political party, two others used one each, while the remaining paper published not one word, but on the contrary gave a grossly distorted report of the meeting, as having ended in a "riot" which might have been serious had the orchestra not saved the situation by striking up a "fair-time" melody. The same paper, by an ingenious manipulation of headlines, made it appear that the audience denounced the speaker as an anarchist.

And this monstrous fabrication has as a basis of reality merely the fact that a comrade in the audience rose to ask a question, as the crowd were rising from their chairs to leave the building. The slight excitement occasioned thereby was magnified into a "riot" by this mendacious journal. The plain fact being that there was not a congregation in a Chicago church that evening, more decorous and orderly than this audience.

Passing by these not unexpected lies, we may conclude by remarking that this lecture is most opportune at the time. If it was well thought out, well delivered, and should afford an excellent opportunity to the comrades to post themselves on the subject. It will appear in pamphlet form at the lowest possible price, and will be on sale at this office probably by next Wednesday or Thursday.

AN UNCHANGED POLICY.

With all due ceremony, with all the mournful pomp and circumstance customary to such occasions, the third president of the United States who has fallen before the assassin's bullet has been borne to his last resting place. His successor has been installed in office and has declared his intention to carry out the same policy with which the name of President McKinley has been constantly associated.

While the press of the country for the last two weeks has been insisting upon the irreparable loss sustained by the nation in the murder of its Chief Magistrate, it now assures the public that everything will go on as before.

This world is a world of the living, not of the dead. Sorrow for the latter, cannot be permitted to interfere with the material interests of the former. The declaration of an unchanged policy, reduced to its last analysis, simply means the recognition of the fact that economic evolution cannot be interrupted by the death of any individual. All socialists will accept this conclusion to the fullest extent.

But although the individuals as individuals, may be powerless to arrest or reverse the economic evolution, yet with the classes through which this evolution operates, the case is entirely different. Consequently the expression of the Socialist Party representing the distinct interests of the working class is even now, weak numerically though it may be, of some weight as a factor in future evolution.

We do not pretend to speak for the Socialist Party or the movement in general. What at most we can do is to relate the attitude adopted and adhered to by the Socialists of the ago during the three weeks of excitement which have elapsed between the murderous act and the interment of its victim.

True, we have not filled the air with clamorous denunciations or indulged in hysterical denunciations, although these seemed to be demanded in the panic and confusion which always fills the public mind when the unexpected happens. These excessive demonstrations we have been content to leave to the press, the pulpit and the politicians. Our regret and sorrow, moderately and soberly expressed, was mostly unheard in the general uproar, even if it were not altogether neutralized and apparently reversed through the deliberate falsehood and misrepresentation of a press owned and controlled by the ruling classes.

But through good and evil reports, through misconstruction and calumny, the voices of our speakers, and the columns of our press, have both before and after the tragedy, continually and consistently repudiated assassination as a factor in our propaganda. The literature which we have distributed is in almost every paragraph an additional testimony to the statements of our speakers and press.

None have fought the so-called "philosophy" of anarchy so constantly, bitterly, and effectively as the Socialists. None have exposed the shallowness of its pretensions, the distasteful reasoning of its dupes, and the fact that its premises once accepted, would it translated into action, inevitably and logically lead to murder and assassination, as have the speakers and writers of the Socialist party.

But we have as unflinchingly exposed the basis upon which this alleged philosophy rests and from which it springs. We have uncovered its roots in the economic structure of society and demonstrated beyond doubt that the so-called "individualism" necessary to the capitalist system of production and distribution, is its progenitor. That both the "philosophical" and murderous anarchists have accepted this bastard "individualism" as basic premise, and carried it to its logical conclusion—self renunciation—where the pressure of physical necessity is least—murder, where it is greatest.

And the capitalist press which has never dared to print the full utterances of our speakers and writers in its columns, but has invariably garbled, mutilated, and distorted them, or torn certain passages from their contexts in such manner as to render them meaningless, or by clever manipulation, incendiary and criminal—this press yet seeks to create the impression that Socialism and Anarchism are closely related, and that the murderous results of the latter philosophy, are secretly if not openly satisfactory to Socialists.

And it is more because of the position we have taken as regards Anarchism (and which is well known to those who own the capitalist press) that we are thus misrepresented: Our movement is dangerous—to capitalism. Anarchism is not. On the contrary it is a bulwark of defense. Capitalism fears not the dagger or bullet of the assassin—an individual can always be replaced—but the prospect of an intelligent ballot in the hands of an intelligent, working class fills its supporters with terror and alarm.

We have been taunted with ignorance. True it is, that many of our most earnest workers have been denied the advantages of a liberal education. But what class is responsible for such denial? What system is it that tears the child from school to join the ranks of the wage slaves, in the mill and factories? To merely ask this question is to silence the taunt forever.

But our speakers and writers have done their utmost to repair the deficiency in the small lecture that a profit grinding system has left them. They have been earnest and diligent students, and whatever yet they may lack in economic science, they know sufficient to place the responsibility for the murder of President McKinley where it properly belongs.

And this is the general position taken by the Socialist party in Chicago. It will be adhered to until the intellectual champions of capitalism can convince us that it is untenable.

We might perhaps appeal to posterity for the justification which we can not now secure. But for posterity capitalism cares nothing. Nevertheless in the not distant future, men who are not dependent upon an economic class for permission to write what they think, will pass upon the events which are now transpiring. We have no fear that their judgment will be inimical to the stand we have taken.

This is the attitude which will be presented to them for investigation. Upon the one hand the so-called intellectual mouthpieces of capitalist society, in press and pulpit and on platform, denouncing, shrieking, and demanding the suppression of a social phenomena whose causes they were too ignorant or too cowardly to impartially investigate. Some who had been equipping with the monster, attempting, not without success, to disavow their connection by posing as students interested in "philosophical" speculations. Others who had constantly vil-lified and derided the victim as personally responsible for economic conditions, hasting after his death, to make amends by publishing false eulogies and hypocritical lamentations upon his taking off. And all of them without exception, in spite of the seeming chaotic state of their ideas, careful to say nothing that might offend or alarm the class who have hired them as defenders of the existing economic system.

On the other a comparatively small group of obscure individuals, mostly workmen, steadily pointing out amidst abuse and misrepresentation, the fact that the anarchism of which society appeared to stand so much in dread, was in reality a result of the philosophy which society itself has accepted and clung to with the obstinacy which the preservation of class interests alone could call forth—the philosophy which makes the individual responsible for conditions which are the creation of society as a whole.

The ruling classes have declared that their policy will remain unchanged. We can say the same of ours, with the additional confidence of knowing that we are advocating a cause which holds the future safely in its hands. Our stand upon anarchism has been taken and will be maintained and strengthened until Anarchy and the capitalism which gives it birth have disappeared for ever.

Watch out for the lecture on "Socialism vs Anarchy" which appears in this issue. It will be on sale in pamphlet form at this office by next Friday. Single copies 5c. Ten copies or above $1.00 each. Send in your orders at once.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE

An "Anti Yellow Journal League" has been formed in Newark, N. J. It has already proceeded so far that a button for the league has been planned. It will be of turquoise blue with the legend "Anti Yellow" upon it. This is about as practical a method of "stamping out" anarchy as we have yet noticed in the press.

English trades unions seem to be up against it hard. The House of Lords has decided that trades unions are responsible bodies and may therefore be sued for damage to business. There doesn't seem to be any way out of the middle unless the trades union members to turn decide that the House of Lords shall go out of the business of "deciding," and ratify such decision with socialist votes.

"Anarchy is merely a compliment to socialism. In striking socialism we strike anarchy." This is what is cabled from Rome as the opinion of the Pope. Knowing something of the resources of capitalist journalism, we are loath to accept this idiotic statement as the expression of the Pontiff. We believe that he is old enough to know better, or if not, we stand ready to enlighten him upon the matter, and herewith invite him to become a subscriber to the Workers' Call. (One is never too old to learn, and it is our special mission to to dispel ignorance of this sort wherever found.)

As we write, our eyes have wandered to the advertisement sheet of a local paper which states in big type that 33 per cent of children born in this country die before reaching the age of five years. This appalling mortality could be easily eliminated if the children were only treated with a decoration which the advertiser has for sale at so much per bottle. Now why don't the "reformers" who expatiate upon the rate of infant mortality amongst the working class take the tip of this "business" man and reduce the death rate accordingly. His pancreas has just as much in its favor as anything they have yet suggested.

Those who fill the columns of the public press with such expressions as that the "nation is bowed with grief" over the tragedy in Buffalo would find it a difficult task to justify such expressions from the attitude of the public that thronged the streets of this city on last Friday evening when the bulletins foreboding the approaching dissolution of the President were pouring thick and fast through the streets in the shape of "extras." It would be of course false to assert that evidence of grief were entirely absent. No man or woman with ordinary human feelings could receive the news of the tragedy and remain altogether unmoved. Grief and sorrow undoubtedly existed but so overlaid with the exigencies of modern commercialism, that in a very large extent it was imperceptible to the casual looker on.

Any one who stood outside the great newspaper offices on that evening of posted himself at any of the numerous distributing centers from which these "extras" were issued, would certainly have observed an extraordinary agitation, in which curiosity instead of grief, played by the faces of the crowd, was predominant. The air was filled with the shouts of excited newsmongers who sought good "business" in the excitement and were by no means adverse to taking full advantage of it, in common with the newspaper proprietors and managers who were reaping a goodly harvest from the enormous lung of these extras. Hidden behind the walls of buildings and in private offices they were secure from public observation, but the expression upon the faces of the sharp street merchants who vended their wares was one of unalloyed satisfaction.

There was reason for it, as far as there is reason for capitalism. The startling street merchant who peddles these "take extras" which were known to be false, knew well that these productions would be followed by other "extras" issued as "denials," and in consequence "profits would accrue."

Again, the statement of the "city bowed in grief" could hardly be borne out by a glance at the theatres on that fateful Friday evening. "Standing room only" was the sign prominent at many of the entrances of these institutions. Even the capitalist press admitted that the theatres were "overcrowded," but tried to explain this seeming incongruity by asserting that the tickets had been bought beforehand. Grief was evidently unable to overcome the possibilities and anticipation of enjoyment for which money had been already paid.

And "what went they out to see." With few exceptions the Chicago stage is now equipped with "sensational" dramas, the central attractions of which are scenes of murder and assassination. For corroboration we refer the reader to the billboards and posters with which the city is now decorated, almost every one of which depicts the slaying of human life, as the principal inducement for patronage.

"I will continue McKinley's policy," is the statement which appears in big head line type across the front page of the Chicago American, and which is given as the declaration of the murdered president's successor. What does this mean to the Chicago American? Principally a revision of names. Oppor's cartoons of "Willie and his Papa" may become "Teddy and his Papa" instead, while the "McKinley minstrel" will henceforth appear as the "Roosevelt Minstrel" and possibly facilitate the appearance of another Chicagoan.

the governmental machinery to abolish all exploitation and oppression. This is the only movement that really antagonizes anarchy at every point. For this reason anarchists and socialists have ever been sworn enemies.

This again makes of anarchy the ally of capitalism. It is one of the strongest bulwarks of the present society against the coming of socialism. Its philosophy is in no way at variance with capitalism. Its logical violence serves as an excuse to inflame the minds of the ignorant against all those who would seek to change the established order. Thus it comes about that over and over again the violent deeds of anarchists have been used as an excuse for attacking the only real enemy of anarchy—SOCIALISM.

A Summary.

Is the line of evidence plain? I have shown that all that is good in the philosophy of anarchy is but the common places of every religion, reform or social dream that the world has ever known, and that it is found in socialism in a more intelligent and logical form. I have shown that it has been able to attract the attention of intelligent people only because of a false conception of socialism, for which to some degree alleged socialists are responsible. I have shown that the logic of capitalism and the logic of anarchy are identical, that they are sister products of the same economic organization. I have demonstrated that all that is peculiar to the doctrine of anarchy are its individualistic interpretation of society, which is false, and its method of attaining its end, which is either through an imbecile quietism and affected humility and self sacrifice, or else murderous private warfare and assassination. I have shown that this conclusion of violence is accepted by all the leading anarchist writers, including those who have been so much patronized by bourgeois society. I have shown that capitalism looks with favor upon anarchy because it sees in it a valuable ally against its only dangerous foe, the socialist movement. I have shown that the defenders of the established order have no particular desire to abolish anarchy, and could not do so if they wished. I have shown finally that the only sincere opponents of anarchy, the only ones who care attack it root and branch and to demand that it, together with the murderous society that gave it birth shall give way to a better order through the peaceful intelligent action of the producers of wealth, are the socialists.

Indicted in Future History.

Press and police unite in telling us that the murder of President McKinley was the result of a conspiracy. Whether this be true or not in the sense of which they speak, whether the victims that have been dragged into the police drag-net of this and other cities were really associated with the man who did the deed is, of course, beyond my ken. But when the historian of the future shall look back upon the present age to chronicle the event we are now describing, he will see it as the result of the most gigantic conspiracy the world has ever known; a conspiracy so tremendous as to take a generation for its preparation and include a nation among its conspirators; a conspiracy, the chief actors of which moved with that marvelous accuracy which the mind only attains when working unconscious of the dictates of reason. When in the perspective of time the events of today shall be seen in their proper relations, some future writer will draw up an indictment, "IN RE THE MURDER OF WILLIAM MCKINLEY THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES VS. CZOLGOSZ, ET AL."

The First Accusations.

But there will be many parties upon that indictment that not even the most sensational press of the most zealous police officer of today has dared to suggest. First and foremost, as the actual responsible agent, as the true assassin before the fact, will come the present ruling class. They are the ones whom economic development made the abiders of the development of our social life. They have formulated in their interests the social institutions, governmental organization, and to a large extent the thought of a large mass of the population. They have controlled press and pulp and lecture platform and have used these agencies to formulate a public opinion out of which anarchy could not develop. They alone reap an advantage from this terrible catastrophe. It is to the members of this class who have with ghastly greed for gain been gambling upon the stock market on the bulletin from the bedside of the dying president. It is they who will reap the benefit from the blow which this act will enable their press to deal to union labor. Already we can see their smile of satisfaction over the effect this assassination has had upon the struggling steel works, leaving through their crocodile tears over a nation's sorrow. Most prominent among those who make up this body of responsible conspirators must be put the great financial interests that control the destinies of the republican party. They it is who have resisted every attempt at change in social conditions and who are in imagination but one more weapon ready to their hand with which to drive back all enemies of exploitation and oppression. They it is who for their own profit must upon holding down the safety valve upon a social boiler long past the bursting point. They are the ones who have interpreted the philosophy of society along the same lines as they were interpreted by the man who fired the fatal shot at Buffalo. They have for a generation preached, with all the power which a complete control of school and church and press and government could give them, the doctrine of individualism in all its cruel nakedness, the doctrine of the competitive struggle as the religion of modern society, the doctrine of a "survival of the fittest" as the only means of progress, the doctrine of the "struggle for existence" in a numerous private warfare upon the field of trade, all this is the doctrine of the orthodox teachers of capitalism and the apostles of anarchy. We are not told in English thousands platforms in every city and hamlet in this land by the editors speaking for the election of William McKinley that every man had an equal chance for success in this brutal economic fight that the position which every man held in society was determined by his own exertions, that each individual was the writer of his own destiny? Have they not told us over and over again that individual responsibility was the key-note of modern society? More than that, have they not insisted that their class, and their party, which they themselves personified in William McKinley, was capable of controlling social relations, and determining economic conditions so as to give or take prosperity from the workshops and the multitude of workers of this country? All these are fundamental principles in the philosophy of anarchy.

Second Accusations.

As the next party to the indictment, the second necessary before the fact and accomplices in the deed, must be placed that other great political party who with identical logic, opposed the election of McKinley, and who, after the election had declared he was responsible for the formation of trusts and all the abuses that have grown out of them. The spokesmen of this party preached the doctrine that McKinley had it in his power to stop or continue the process of trade expansion to set the limits to economic development. They declared over and over again through their press that economic conditions were controllable by those in possession of the powers of government, and could find no words strong enough in which to denounce the man whose death they are now foremost in deploring, whose character they are now loud in praising. This party especially adopted the anarchist cry for the reversal of economic development and the destruction of organized production. In agreement with their accomplices in the republican party, the democratic party refused in any way to permit a transformation of society that would make such horrible outbreaks impossible. They insisted that the poison should be mixed, they demanded that the weapons should be prepared, they helped in the maddening of the brain, but when the natural result followed they hastened to disclaim responsibility.

A Third Group Included.

Because of the conditions fostered and the philosophy preached by these two arch conspirators, as a certain conclusion from the conditions to which they gave assent, there arose a philosophical anarchist with his sympathies in this count of the indictment must be included Mayor Harrison, Mrs. Potter Palmer and the philanthropists and social celebrities of this and other cities who extended so cordial a welcome to Kropotkin and others of his kind, and gave every reason to believe that they were accepting the full logic of the premises laid down by their previous political actions.

Those Under Arrest.

Finally we have the men and women whose names appear upon the indictment as it is now drawn. That there was much of any closer conspiracy between these individuals than the others we have mentioned, I see no reason to believe. At the most they are but the last and logical expression, the final expression, the necessary conclusion of the mighty chain of events and social relations that have been pointed out. But just because they are in the grasp of this mightier force, their power for evil reaches far beyond that of the isolated individual.

Socialists Alone Outside Indictment.

The only body of men, the only nation of present society, against whom this indictment positively cannot read, the only individuals whose hands are wholly clean of the blood of the Chief Magistrate, the only body that has consistently and constantly fought back and every one of these conspirators, that has denounced them publicly and privately and through its press with all the power that it can wield, is the party which I present here tonight—the SOCIALIST PARTY. Therefore it is that we alone need an excuse at this time. We are the only ones who dare to say that our skirts are wholly clear of any part or parcel in this horrible tragedy. From the time of Babylon and Proudhon down to the present time, in every land on the face of the earth, the only party that has fought the philosophy, denounced the individual representation, exposed the propaganda, and by every means in its power sought to make anarchy impossible, is the SOCIALIST PARTY. They alone have always dared to denounce murder, whether it be of ruler or ruled, whether it be on the throne or in the workshop, whether by slow starvation by the bullet of the assassin, and they alone can lay the count of equity of the future with clean hands and rest assured of what the verdict will be.

August Klenke will leave for California in a few days. He will speak at socialist hall 101 West 42d Street, Sunday, September 22, 8 P. M.

THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Translated for the Workers' Call from "Manual du Co-operateur Socialiste."

POWER OF CO-OPERATION.

It is not merely by tens or hundreds that the co-operative of consumption can bring families together, if it is properly organized, it is by thousands, by tens of thousands, and even hundreds of thousands. The facts are at hand to prove this beyond a doubt.

In Belgium, the Vooruit of Ghent began in 1835 in a cellar, with a capital of 300 francs, the co-operators by the Weavers' Union. To-day it makes more than 100,000 copies of bread weekly and owns several buildings. It is now an association of 3,000 working-class families.

The Maison du Peuple of Brussels, dating from 1842, was started with a capital of $100, in 1890 it owned real estate to the amount of 1,000,000 francs. In the first half of 1899 it put out 3,000,000 loaves of bread among the 15,000 families belonging to it.

In France the Union de Lille, of which we shall have more to say later, numbered about 6,000 families among its members in 1898.

We would call attention to the Avenir de Plaisance of Paris to show what may be done in vigorous hands by an Association which started out as humbly as that of the ten housekeepers which we used for illustration in our first chapter.

In 1875 a few uneducated laborers who had taken part in the movement of the Commune resolved to cut down their living expenses by uniting together. There were only twenty of them, their wives were hostile to co-operation, and the police were present at every meeting of their Board. Thus their beginnings were hard and their propaganda was difficult. Nevertheless the Avenir de Plaisance was established and it lived. In 1884 it still had only 60 members, up to 1890 the Co-operative made little progress.

But then things took a sudden start. In 1892 the Avenir had 600 members and 5 employees. Since then its progress has been continuous as the following table shows:

Years	Members	Rev. (francs)	Pro. to divide
1892	600	206,180	5,000
1893	8185	349,233	1,500
1894	1,708	485,261	25,200
1895	2,151	555,558	33,676
1896	3,367	1,047,772	46,432
1897	3,923	1,302,333	60,000
1898	4,437	1,624,854	87,771

In 1896 the Avenir bought a lot for $4,500 and built there at a cost of $15,000, a building 46 ft. 9 in. by 195 ft. in which its goods were attractively and conveniently displayed. It sells there every year over 30,000 lbs. of bakery goods, over 100,000 lbs. of soap, 100,000 lbs. of butter, 14,000 hectolitres of wine. Besides it sells shoes, working clothes, dry goods, brushes, cutlery, fruits, groceries, etc. And during the first half of 1899 the meat market, newly opened, took in 32,000 francs.

In 1899 the Avenir numbered about 5,000 members and employed 34 persons. It had twice as many employees in 1899 as it had members in 1875 when it was started.

Such is the power already acquired by a Co-operative which had a particularly humble and painful beginning. The associates of the twenty charter members of 1875 are now joint owners of a solid enterprise which does a business of more than $200,000 a year. But there is still more to tell.

FEDERATION OF CO-OPERATIVES.

In England the co-operatives are forming federations to buy their goods cheaper, or even to manufacture them. A federation of this kind, started at Manchester in 1844, did a business of $250,000 the first year. During the year 1898 its sales amounted to $93,000,000.

In December, 1898 it numbered 1,113, 153 co-operators. In September, 1899, the number of its employees was 18,000. It owns two soap factories, a factory for making preserves, jams, biscuits, etc., two shoe factories, a tannery, a woolen factory, a linen factory, a wholesale pottery store, etc. The federation of Glasgow, founded in 1868, had reached in 1898 a figure of $25,000,000 in sales, and employed, in 1899, 5,300 laborers and clerks.

In 1896, if all the English federations, had been united they would have been gathering 1,500,000 families, that is to say about 8 million out of the 40 million who inhabit the British Isles. They employ 10,000 laborers and the total amount of their business comes to $200,000,000 a year.

The different English federations are not yet united in a single society, but, apparently, nothing stands in the way of their future consolidation. This supreme federation comprising such an enormous membership, and disposing of such formidable sums of money, will indeed be, as an economist has said, an actual State within a State.

Imagine the millions of working people in a great country united in such a federation of co-operatives, having their stores, their factories, their merchant fleet and an annual budget two fifths as large as that of the French government. United according to socialist principles, do they not form within the capitalist State, as Vandermeide has said, an embryo of Collective society with which the state would have to deal? What trust, what combination of bankers and of manufacturers could stand before this enormous power of the working-class united economically and politically?

Some better idea of the possibilities mighty combination will be gained from a reading of the following chapters, which will explain the special characteristics of socialist co-operatives and the advantages which the socialist party may draw from them.

Translated from the French of Maurice Lussat, by Charles H. Kerr. (To be continued.)

Notice Special.

All members and friends of the Socialist Co-operative are hereby notified that we are now accepting orders by mail and will deliver groceries and coal within a radius of three miles from the Temple. Everything in both lines carried or supplied. Coal commands regular prices—the profits going into the general Treasury of the Co-operative to swell the surplus. Therefore since all members will profit all are invited to send orders. Full weight guaranteed. We want new members. Send in your membership. Headquarters 120 S. Western Av.

SOCIALIST HALL.

There will be a meeting of all the members of the socialist party of the South Side, Sunday, September 22, 2:30 P. M. Business of the utmost importance will be presented for their earnest and careful consideration. Every member is urged to be present especially the organizers and secretaries. Don't fail to come.

Committee,
Par J. W. Saunders,
Division Agent

The Socialist Cigar-makers Educational Society met on Thursday Sept. 17th at Educational Hall 342 Avenue Ave. Next meeting will be held in the same hall on Wednesday 24th Sept. 8 P. M. John Collins of the Mechanics Union will address the meeting. All cigar makers are invited.

"Dearly beloved brethren," quoth the Modern Missionary, "we will now proceed, with the aid of the military, to take up a collection of the goods and chattels of the poor benighted heathen. The lot will be sold at fancy prices at the next church bazaar." Meanwhile, brethren, let us pray.—The Tocsin, Melbourne, Australia.

Every strike is proof that the system under which we live, is wrong and in order that the strike may become a thing of the past, the people must own these public utilities that require their labor. The first of these to be taken possession of, is the government itself. If a few business men can successfully carry on the business of the community, there is no good reason why all the people cannot do it better.—Oklahoma Socialist.

Bricklayers, Attention!

All Bricklayers are requested to be present at the Socialist Hall, 70 S. 3rd St., on Sept. 21st, 8 P. M. South Side Club will be organized. Comrade Jos. Wanhope, Editor of the Workers' Call, will address us. This is an intellectual treat. Bring your friends.

Notice.

All those who took tickets for the opening entertainment at Socialist Hall, 70 West 3rd Street will kindly return tickets unsold and settle for those sold in order that committee may make their report.

Address Jas. Saunders, R. Div. Art. 101 W. 65th Street.

Kitchener's "Shocking" Language.

Wonder if the fellow who wrote this editorial in the Chicago Tribune didn't have his tongue in his cheek while constructing it?

"All people of humane feeling must have been shocked at the language used by Lord Kitchener in reporting the results of the operations of his armies against the Boers in South Africa. With a lack of dignity and sensibility which is entirely inexcusable he declares that, 'all the divisions have had good bags' and then, exactly as if he were listing the game killed by a hunting party, he goes on to state that the 'bag' consists of so many hundred burghers killed, and so many wounded. Among civilized people it is not customary to class enemies who fall in honorable battle with quail and rabbits. The noble Lord who commands the British forces in South Africa seems to have allowed his 'speaking blood' to get the better of him. He should remember that the Boers killed in the two Republics have wives and children, whose feelings a brave foe is bound to consider. Certainly Lord Kitchener's language is unnecessary, and, as it will inevitably further alienate the sympathy of all people of kindly and generous feeling, it is a bad blunder from a political standpoint. It is almost incomprehensible that the authorities in London should not only give out a report couched in such language, but that they should allow it to pass without correction."

The evident conclusion from the above is that murder is at all right so long as you don't refer to it as a "bag." We have had a long experience of the loathsome hypocrisy of the bourgeois press but this seems to be about the limit.

At its last business meeting the seventh ward Branch unanimously endorsed the editorial in the issue of the Workers' Call, Sept. 14th, entitled "To whom it may concern," stating that they considered it to be representative of the stand taken by the Socialist Party of Chicago in the present juncture.

SOCIALISM VS. ANARCHISM

OUR FRIEND THE ENEMY.

An Incident Illustrative of the Internal Hostility of the Capitalist Press.

What have we as socialists to expect from the capitalist press? This is a question upon which many members of socialist bodies hold very wonderful ideas. They hear it said so often that the press is a "mighty weapon" or some such stereotyped phrase, that they get the idea that the wielders and possessors of this weapon, can be persuaded or cajoled into forgetting the class interests which they have to uphold, so far as to deal "fairly" with socialism, to repeat in their columns the interpretation which we ourselves place upon the movement.

It was a conception of this sort that no doubt inspired the foolish clause in the foolish resolution which was properly tabled at the West Side picnic, wherein it was stated that as the press had used the words Anarchism and Socialism as synonymous terms, the socialist press was asked to give "the widest publicity" to our absolute disavowal and repudiation, etc., etc.

This can be explained on no other hypothesis than that the press writers are really ignorant of the distinction between anarchism and socialism, and that all that is necessary is to point out the error, to have it rectified at once.

However, the fallacy of this idea can easily be demonstrated. The events of one week nowadays, provide sufficient material for printing bubbles like the above. The socialist invariably describes himself as one who points out facts for his hearers or readers to draw their own conclusions from. Let us say if we cannot find some such which will illustrate the point. And to find them we need not go outside of the week following the West Side picnic.

On September 12, the Chicago Tribune published an editorial on the Theory and Practice of Anarchy, which appeared, stating that whenever a propagandist of the deed got in his murderous work, there was a popular tendency to include Socialism in the general condemnation. This however, was a mistake. The Tribune then drew a distinction between Socialists and Anarchists, with the latter of which we are not particularly concerned. The socialist, however, was described as wishing to have the "state control everything." It was added that the "socialist urged many foolish irrational and impulsive policies, but they are not dangerous," (whether this latter refers to the "policies" or the socialists, is rather doubtful, but the reader must take what the Tribune chooses to give him and be thankful.)

Anyhow here was a clear distinction such as it was. Few Socialists, we venture to say, would assert that this distinction was something to be particularly grateful for, but at all events one party member who seems to be thankful for small (very small) mercies, endeavored to show that so far as he was concerned a charge of ingratitude could not be laid at his door. In the issue of the Tribune, September 14th a letter signed with his name appears, in which he personally thanks the Tribune for its editorial distinguishing between socialism and anarchy.

Now be it understood that there is no question whatever of the "right" of any one to personally express his thanks anywhere and for anything he sees fit. That is his business. A letter in the public press is not above criticism, but nevertheless there is no occasion even to criticize this one. We are principally concerned with the capitalist press and its attitude towards socialism.

Once the "distinction" was drawn it might be reasonably assumed that it would be borne in mind afterwards. Let us see if this was so.

In the same issue of the Tribune, which contains this letter of thanks, and also upon the same page, almost in line with it, and separated only by two or three columns, the following, purporting to be the true history of Casagosa appears:

"While in Chicago he became interested in the socialist movement. When he went back to Cleveland his interest in the movement increased. He read all the Socialist literature he could lay his hands on, and finally began to take part in socialist matters. In time he became fairly well known in Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit, not only as a Socialist but as an Anarchist of the most bitter type."

About a month ago Casagosa attended a meeting of Socialists in Cleveland, at which a lecture was given by Emma Goldman, the woman whose anarchistic doctrine have made her notorious all over the country."

We have made no argument against the utility of the capitalist press to "set us right" with the public. There is no necessity for it. All that is required is that the press speak for itself, and that the socialist reader grasp the full import of the above. This "history" of the assassin placed in juxtaposition with the letter of thanks is sufficiently eloquent.

One thing alone is yet wanting. A further letter of thanks is still due the Tribune for the scathing and well deserved contempt with which it has met the mistaken efforts of those who imagine that its columns can be used for the purpose of drawing distinctions between Anarchism and Socialism.

At its last business meeting the seventh ward Branch unanimously endorsed the editorial in the issue of the Workers' Call, Sept. 14th, entitled "To whom it may concern," stating that they considered it to be representative of the stand taken by the Socialist Party of Chicago in the present juncture.

Why not take a smash at anarchy through the ballot box, by voting the socialist ticket?

Local Party Progress.

Reports of Organizers of the North, South, West and 4th District Divisions, on public meetings, party press, financial returns, and general agitation for the past week. A record of growing activity.

SOUTH SIDE.

Agitation meetings on the South Side are bearing good results. More meetings are being held with an increasing number of attentive listeners, a larger number of Workers' Calls are being distributed, and if the comrades would only attend these meetings more regularly and in greater number, they could be made more productive for the cause than they are at present. Steps are being taken to bring about the much desired end, for particulars see notice in the Workers' Call. Special attention is called to the opening of the new headquarters at Socialist Hall 703 W. 3rd St. Sept. 15th.

Comrades J. Wanhope, A. M. Simcoe, J. Collins, B. Berlyn, C. L. Brown and others spoke. The speakers were warmly received.

Early in the afternoon the crowd filled the hall until there was not even standing room.

The audience was very attentive but would often break out into loud bursts of applause when some point was made by some speaker. The people were generous in their contributions. Not being satisfied with one collection one stranger in the audience moved that a second collection be taken up which was carried. Every one went away pleased.

In the evening the entertainment proved to be a complete success. Much is due to the assistance rendered by the Socialist Orchestra, and those gentlemen who were present.

NORTH SIDE.

Tuesday evening meeting at North Avenue and Clark Street was a success. Comrade Morris alone addressed the crowd that gathered. Cards were distributed and a collection taken up.

Wednesday evening the meeting at Oak and Sedgwick was not held on account of the rain.

Thursday evening the usual good meeting was held at Walton Place and North Clark Street. Cards were distributed, a collection taken, subscriptions secured and a new member taken in. Morris spoke.

Friday evening the meeting at Diversey and Sheffield was a success. Comrades Zimmerman, Morris and Harold spoke. A collection was taken up and one hundred calls distributed, one subscription was taken.

Sunday at 4:30 P. M. as a result of the excitement, and an over zealous police officer, we were counseled to discontinue a meeting at Center and North Clark Street.

Sunday night the Sheffield and Wrightwood meeting was not held. Breaker thought it unadvisable.

Next week's meetings WILL BE HELD.

All North Side comrades are asked to attend ALL MEETINGS on the North Side in the future. YOU ARE NEEDED.

WEST SIDE.

The meeting of the West Division held at the Temple Sunday morning, September 15th was well attended, all the wards were represented but the 12th, Comrade Gillespie was elected chairman. Reports were all favorable of business and out door meetings with the exception of those held for Saturday night which were abandoned on account of rain.

On the question of holding the branch business meetings on the same dates of each month all over the city it was decided that since the majority of the branches in the West Division already do so to request them to hold them every Friday or where that is not possible every first and third Friday of each month.

To put more system and uniformity in the agitation, it was decided to close the outdoor meetings promptly on the 26th of September and begin the indoor agitation on the 15th of October. All branches are requested to take notice of this and to secure a hall for the winter as soon as possible and notify the underground, but no speakers will be billed before the 15th of October as for the two weeks intervening is necessary for the speakers to rest up after a season of hard and fruitful work. No meetings are however to be arranged for Fridays as those days will be devoted for business meetings.

All organizers are requested to be on hand early next Sunday, September 22, so that all work may be transacted before the State Convention will begin its session.

A TRAVELLERS TALE.
The "Suppression of Vice" is a far off and its extraordinary consequences.

Travellers tell us that among the hill tribes of India there is a community of people who consider it a disgrace to be seen eating. I have made careful inquiries into the habits of this people, with the following results:
It seems that the members of this tribe admit, like all the rest of the world, that eating is necessary; but they call it a Necessary Evil. Their great aim is to drive vice underground. None of the stores on the main street of their village supply any kind of food; but on the outskirts are a number of houses to which the people report after dark to buy food surreptitiously.
Everybody goes to one of another of these houses, but all are careful not to be observed lest they be cast out of society.

It might be supposed that, in a community where eating is regarded with such horror, gluttony must be unknown. But on the contrary, we find over-eating is more common there than anywhere. The thoughts of all the people are usually occupied with the subject of eating, and they seldom permit their minds to wander far from it. Whenever a few children get together they begin to tell each other naughty stories about eating. In school, when a passage is read which even distantly suggests food, a girl goes over all the young faces.

IT IS THE SAME WITH GROWN PEOPLE. Not only are they always telling indecent stories about food, but even their dreams are constantly disturbed by thoughts of it. So ravenously do they eat that their stomachs are always out of order, and their frames exhausted with over-expenditure of energy in eating. Moreover, disease is very prevalent, owing to the bad quality of the food. Being supplied only by the scum of society and in out-of-the-way holes and corners, it is as bad as the whisky which people drink under prohibition, and brands all kinds of disorders. It is also very costly, because those who sell it are liable at any time to be raided by the police and severely punished, and they cannot be expected to take such risks for small profits. Those who sell the food are naturally despised as the vilest of mankind, and have no standing in society. But they know how to revenge themselves on the respectable. Young people throw the eating houses under cover of night, and the inmates take every opportunity of leading them into bad habits, teaching them to drink and gamble, and even try to poison their guests against their mothers and sisters. These illicit dealers have an inveterate hatred of the respectable merchants of the community, whom they try to injure in every way. Being themselves outcasts, they try to pull all others down with them. No deplorable has the condition of affairs become in this community, that all good people are discussing means of checking the Social Evil, as they call it. Vigilance committees have been formed to drive vice still farther underground. Every month the "keepers of eating houses" are brought before the Police Magistrate and fined. Sermons are preached from every pulpit describing the lives and characters of those who sell food, and pointing them out as examples of the awful consequences of eating. But it is all in vain. Vice is driven farther underground. MEAT EATING GOES ON AS BEFORE. There are many enlightened people in America who ought to be able to suggest a cure for this great evil.

KARL MARX...
Biographical Memoirs by W. Liebknecht.

CHICAGO EVENING POST: "The Biographical Memoirs of Karl Marx," by the late Wilhelm Liebknecht, socialist deputy, is a good translation for the Standard Socialist Series. It is a small book, but it contains solid, thoughtful reading. The life of Marx is the life of labor movements from the earliest agitation of such conditions in Germany, France and England. There is great beauty and pathos in the description of the family life of the great socialist.

BOSTON IDEAS: It is a most interesting sketch of the every-day life of a man of genius who necessarily, because of the active nature of his thought, lived his life constantly among public interests and his biography, therefore, is full of expression of what he intrinsically was. It has been admirably translated by E. Untermann, who has faithfully preserved the spirit of the original. Liebknecht's manner of writing renders the picture of Marx to us in a more vital way, and with more living color, than could otherwise have been the case. Living with Marx as much as he did, in sympathy with him and his ideals as thoroughly as was the case, the narrative of such a man is strikingly glowing and expressive. The book is of prime importance to all Socialists, and to all whose sympathies lead ever so little in that direction.

NEW YORK JOURNAL: Of those to whom the arguments of "Capital" are familiar, not many are acquainted with the personality of the man Marx. Yet behind every book there is a man, and the man is often greater and more interesting than the book. Five years ago Wilhelm Liebknecht, who by intimate association with Marx was better qualified than any other man living to make the world acquainted with the actual author of "Capital" wrote a little volume of biographical memoirs of the great revolutionist.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE: Liebknecht shows the simplicity of Marx's life: he was a Titan in the field of constructive thought, but a child in his intercourse with men—direct, impulsive, tender-hearted, and devoted to his wife and children, who shared both his poverty and philosophy. This first English translation preserves the spirit of the original admirably and keeps the flavor of the many anecdotes scattered throughout the memoirs.

SOUTHERN MERCURY, Dallas, Texas: After giving a long summary of the contents of the book the Southern Mercury says: "Liebknecht gives in a most charming style all the details of the sketch just touched on in this article. The biography of Karl Marx will prove an interesting book to students of advance of civilization."

THE OUTLOOK, New York: All interested in socialist literature will be glad to have in English these memoirs of the greatest socialist by one of his closest associates.

ADVANCE, San Francisco: If any one wishes to spend a pleasant evening chatting with Liebknecht about Marx, he or she can do so better than get hold of this translation by Untermann. The reader is transported bodily from his own fireside to the lively scenes in the Marx household, and amongst the little group of revolutionary exiles that gather about it. One spends a most delightful time listening to the Old "Soldier of the Revolution" recounting anecdotes of his association with "Mach"; as Marx was familiarly known. The picture of the person and times presented is perfect in its vividness.

PRICE ONE CENT

A CAPITALIST ENVIRONMENT

By Professor ERNEST UNTERMANN.

Written for the Workers' Call.

We are the creatures of our environment, so we have been told a thousand times. The sights, the sounds, the smells, the tastes, the feelings that convey the impressions of the outer world to our brains, coupled to the sights, sounds, tastes, smells and feelings that tell to the lot of our ancestors, make us what we are. Each one of us needs his own peculiar environment for his normal development to full powers. We feel this truth every day. We acknowledge it unconsciously by striving to get away from surroundings that impress us unfavorably and by seeking such as satisfy our instinctive longing. But under the present state of society 99 per cent of the race are barred from evolution to perfect manhood and womanhood by the way they get their living, and the remaining one per cent by their economic control lock the rest of humanity out from their Eden, thereby condemn themselves to stay forever out of the paradise of highest development. For we must act and re-act on one another, and the capitalists who wish to continue the system of private ownership, although humanity is now ripe for collectivism, must bear the consequences of their selfish folly.

How many of us shrink with disgust from the squalid houses, the filthy gutters, the reeking air of the slums in which we are forced to live! How many of us sigh in vain for a chance to live in the country, surrounded by green fields, shady trees, flower gardens; for a chance to breathe the invigorating air that passes over hundreds of miles of wooded prairie and forest, and for a glimpse of a clear sky that is not obscured by smoke, dust and steam! And how many of us have to carry this yearning through all their weary lives without the hope of realizing it, bound body and soul by the fetters of capitalism! How many of us feel that we could grow well and strong, if we could only move to a more congenial locality, work a few hours less a day, and take a little better care of our body that is now wasting away under the strain of capitalist production? How many of us long for books we shall never read, sights we shall never see, music we shall never hear, food we shall never taste! In short, how many of us are in a state of environment which we need for our higher physical and mental development, doomed forever to pass our lives amid the repulsive conditions we loathe—in order that others, of the same blood and flesh, may reap unearned profits!

All who are bound by economic fetters and cannot change their place of abode without incurring the danger of starvation, must submit to this influence, be it good or evil. And no human being on earth can escape its baleful influence. The American president who is assassinated, and the striking miner in Idaho who is shot down by a sheriff's posse; the man out of a job who is thrown out of his mortgaged home, and the Boer in South Africa, who is driven into the desert; the American admiral who is court-martialed for winning a battle in the absence of his superior; or the Chinese general, who is beheaded for losing it; the millionaire who dies of apoplexy from gluttony, and the pauper who dies of starvation from lack of food—all have killed all the same in the force of capitalism.

But let us confine ourselves to our immediate environment, from which we cannot get away just now. It acts on us like a constant hypnotic suggestion. However much we may resist while we are conscious of the evil spell, this influence continues to influence us until we are fast asleep, and then and there the hypnotic suggestion is irresistible. Soon or later we weary of our resistance and give up the hopeless struggle that keeps our strength—and in that moment another spell of our prison life with a bang, never to open again. Farther and farther away recedes the possibility of appealing to something better, until we reach the quiet grave at the end of the long journey, and our eyes are closed.

Young and old, weak and strong, black, white and red, we are all under the influence of this environment. It acts on us like a constant hypnotic suggestion. However much we may resist while we are conscious of the evil spell, this influence continues to influence us until we are fast asleep, and then and there the hypnotic suggestion is irresistible. Soon or later we weary of our resistance and give up the hopeless struggle that keeps our strength—and in that moment another spell of our prison life with a bang, never to open again. Farther and farther away recedes the possibility of appealing to something better, until we reach the quiet grave at the end of the long journey, and our eyes are closed.

From year to year, from generation to generation, this influence kills the life principle in us by slow degrees, until the capacity for progress is exhausted and development becomes retrogression, evolution reverts to degeneration.

Those who don't know how the masses live, often revert against the equal and fifth and sixth of the slum inhabitants and wonder at their inertia and apathy. But let them work under the strain of modern production for a while, and they will have their own opinion. Let them drag their weary bodies after day to a cheerless home and a meagre supper; let them sleep at night in a close room, disturbed by the rumble of heavy wagons, street cars, elevated railroads, by the howl of the drunken man, the wail of babies and the groans of the sick; let them painfully raise their stiff and aching bodies at the first dawn and drag themselves back to their slave task; and so on day after day, night after night, with occasional periods of involuntary idleness and hunger, or sickness and hunger—and they will understand whence comes the dull eye, the lagging step, the spiritless expression and the apathy. They will understand that one great longing fills the breast of such a man to the exclusion of all others—to lay down and rest. Never mind washing, never mind undressing, never mind recreation—just swallow your supper, taste as it may, and then stretch out at full length and get what rest you can. Reading? Information? Striving for higher things? Bah, what are they to such a man!

Such life can have only one effect on mortal flesh—nervous degeneration, propagated with increased intensity in the offspring. Such life separates the nerves from their connection with the rest of the body, and impairs the human will in a dark veil. Such life makes beings that become easy and susceptible victims of hypnotic suggestions, whether that suggestion be communicated direct from man to man or by the suggestive objects around them.

Is there one elevating element, one ever so faint trace of beauty, one feeble hint of a higher life in the objects that surround a child of the slums? No, dirt, foul language, saloons, policemen, and glaring posters on walls and fences. These posters and the dime novels that circulate freely among these pre-disposed victims of suggestion, for how many secret crimes against body and soul may they be responsible? The posters of the theaters are especially lurid and their influence reaches far beyond the slums. They paint a whole city with their lurid suggestions.

Look at the stage posters that are just now displayed in all parts of Chicago. They may be artistic but it is the art of the inferno. An art not calculated to elevate, but to arouse low desires. A bait thrown out to the heated imagination in order to draw the money out of your pocket. Look at the dime novel titles of the plays that are dished up to the public. "A Gambler's Daughter," "Across the Pacific," "Under Two Flags," "The Eleventh Hour," etc. And what do the posters depict? Ruffians pointing revolvers at you, gamblers armed to the teeth, officers fighting about a girl, gentlemen secondhand and rascally ladies who shoot, poison, cheat each other, sit on one another's laps, expose themselves in the most abominable calculated positions—in short, all of them appeal to the carnal and brutal side of human nature and not one that gives a noble suggestion. Do you think these suggestions pass unheeded? Go and watch the children at play and listen to their talk and you will get a revelation that will send a shiver of hopeless despair down your back. You will no longer wonder at the apathy of the masses, but blame it as the only thing that prevents them from reveling in blood and slaughter and rape every day of their lives.

The lessons taught in school also bear the mark of capitalist environment. Generals and other military heroes are celebrated in word and pictures. Military drill is a part of the education in most of the higher schools that are patronized by the bourgeois element. The hired song of patriotism is a standing challenge to fight. The school readers from the primer to the textbook on history are teeming with glowing accounts of battles and daring exploits. Gymnastics are cultivated, not for the purpose of harmoniously developing all the faculties of the individual, but to the avowed end of producing a so-called "stalwart manhood" that "delights in brutal sports and willingly follows the call to murder lookless and unknown fellow beings at home and abroad at the command of the captain of industry."

as Pestalozzi, Froebel, Greeley, and others, found in these words the keynote for their life's work. And it remained for a practical Christian professor to enlighten us twenty-two centuries after Aristotle on the real aim of life: "The chief lesson of the last century," write "Chas. W. Dabney in the 'World's Work,'" "was that education increases the wealth producing power of a people in direct proportion to its distribution and thoroughness. The power of different states to earn money is in direct proportion to the length of the period that the average citizen of each state has attended school."

"To earn money" that is the ideal of capitalist society held up by capitalist teachers through capitalist textbooks sold for the purpose of making money out of the pupils and their parents. It is this ideal that creates the slums, makes the criminals, and teaches us to be successful by pushing our own brothers to the walls. It is this ideal that creates the unemployed, the tramps, the prostitutes, and makes the percentage of criminality highest where the capitalist through his power of

A STUDY OF CHICAGO BILL BOARDS.

Could Coolidge have derived any "inspiration" from this sort of thing while in Chicago?

"Earning money" has taken away all opportunities for the masses to earn money. Let a man be gradually reduced to this slum environment. Let him live in it just long enough to loathe and resist it thoroughly. Let him be exposed to this frame of mind to the suggestions of such posters as the above mentioned, let him brood over his wrongs, which he feels are due to his position outside of him, let the press vilify or blame individual representatives of the people for present prosperity or business depression; let that man suddenly come face to face with a display of wealth, luxury and comfort, such as he covets and misuses—and tell me what is to save him from the mad suggestion: "Kill and revenge yourself on the representative of the people for your sufferings!"

And when the mad deed is done; when the murderer stands against his own deed; when reason and madman's fight for life and death in his reeling brain, then society exacts the final price in this tragedy and stones for and murder by another. First they raise a devil, who raises the devil, and then they stone the devil.

The socialist doctrine all responsibility for any murders, whether committed in war, or in peace, collectively or individually. Whether patriotism or nationalism, tyranny or revolt, capitalist greed or legal hypocrisy be the cause that kills—the taking of human life by human beings is murder, always and everywhere. Those who kill hundreds of thousands of human beings annually from a society whose highest ideal is not to increase the power to "earn money." Therefore we appeal to our fellow beings with the suggestion: "Change the system and create an environment that will assure every human being of the food, the shelter, the clothing and the surroundings which will be healthy life and remove all cause for CRIME against PROPERTY. In such a society we won't need any more poster suggestions. There will be no longer criminals and 'honored' people, but only people of perfect or imperfect health. And the healthy will support the ailing and give them every opportunity to get well. Only in such an environment will the human race be able to develop that perfect manhood and womanhood, which will make it possible for the human brain to make another step in the direction that led humanity out of the branches of the trees in the primeval forests, to the Lick telescope, the Edison phonograph and Marconi's wireless telegraph."

Mass meetings will be held every Saturday and Sunday nights at Socialist Hall, 101 West Third Street, 3 P. M.

Report of Committee on Constitution.

RULES.

1. No person to speak on the same subject more than once.
2. No person to speak longer than five minutes at one time.
3. Robert's Rules of Order to govern except as herein modified.

The report was amended by adopting the rule that the members of the Joint Committee calling the Convention should be elected as delegates.

The report of the Committee on Rules was then adopted.

The Committee on Credentials then presented its report showing 33 delegates representing 24 branches from the Socialist Party of Chicago and the Local of the Social Democratic Party with headquarters at Springfield, Mass., and 42 delegates representing 35 branches from the Social Democratic Party with headquarters in Chicago.

The Convention then voted a permanent organization by the election of James B. Smiley as Chairman and Charles H. Kerr as Secretary.

THE STATE CONVENTION

Held at Socialist Temple, Sunday Sept. 22d, 1901.

The State Convention of the Socialist Party of Illinois met at the Socialist Temple, Chicago, on Sunday, September 22, 1901, and was called to order at 10:35 A. M.

J. B. Smiley was elected temporary Chairman and Philip S. Brown temporary Secretary.

On motion, the Convention voted to elect a Committee of four on Credentials, and comrades Westphal, Knox, Kerwin and Morris were elected.

On motion the Convention also voted to elect a committee of four on Rules and Comrades Brown, Evans, Carr and Smith were elected.

The Convention then took a recess until 12 M.

On re-assembling the Committee on Rules reported the following order of business:

1. Report of Committee on Rules.
2. Report of Committee on Credentials.
3. Election of permanent chairman and secretary.
4. Election of Committee of seven on Constitution.
5. General discussion on resolutions.

Comrade Duncan R. Smith called the attention of the Convention to the fact that an attempt was being made to organize "An Invisible Army of Voters," a secret organization outside the control of the Socialist Party.

In informal discussion ensued in the course of which a delegate stated that he had received a letter from the Appeal of Reason office informing him that the proposed organization had been given up.

Many delegates, however, favored some expression on the subject and Comrade Kerr offered the following resolutions, which were adopted.

"Resolved, that the Socialist Party of Illinois congratulate the editor of the Appeal to Reason on his decision to abandon the organization of a secret political society, and that it calls upon all socialists to put all their energy into the work of the party itself."

The Convention then proceeded to the following:

"In view of the fact that the present hysterical capitalist press, its organization, and mouthpieces are making an open attack upon the rights of free speech and free press by which means alone, the minority are safeguarded against aggression, therefore, Resolved: That we the Socialists of Illinois in Convention assembled pledge ourselves to fight by all legal means in our power all attempts to abridge the rights of free speech, press, and assembly as guaranteed by our constitutional bill of rights."

Therefore we call upon all members of the Socialist Party and their sympathizers to contribute to a fund for the purpose of carrying out the fight.

The resolutions were adopted and Comrades Simons, Washop and Morris were elected a Committee to receive funds for the purpose stated.

The Committee on Constitution reported through Comrade Brown.

It was moved and seconded that the constitution be adopted as read.

On motion of Comrade Evans the word "Local" was substituted for the word "Branch" wherever occurring.

On motion of Comrade Knox of Winnetka the section specifying the number of members required for organizing a Local was reduced from ten to five. The Constitution was then adopted.

NOT YETUS KITTLE

At last the Chicago American has broken silence, and framed a reply to the "weeklings and incompetents of journalism" and the "plotocratic press" in general.

The American was not goaded by taunts into doing this. It has a sense of decorum which its competitors cannot comprehend, and which prevents it from hitting back over the coffin of the dead president. At least that's the reason it gives for its former silence, which when all is said, is about as good a reason as any other which might be invented.

But in any case "The American People" to whom its editorial of justification is dedicated have been treated to a perfect sample of clever demagoguery as ever came from the pen of a "radical" journalist.

The American takes back nothing. It reaffirms and justifies its former attitude under a cloud of generalities about "the common people" the "predatory rich" the "rascals" the "democratic ideal" etc., etc., ad infinitum.

But it does not retort on its adversaries with the undoubted fact that they have attracted quite as much attention to the "individual William McKinley" through numerous praise and glory factory, as it has through vilification and denunciation. That is one defense the American cannot and will not, because it dare not, avail itself of.

It is true that "business reasons" wholly dictated the onslaught made upon it by its "respectable" competitors, but we are more than that "business reasons" also lie wholly behind the clever report which it has at length made.

For while the report is clever, it is not effective. We said last week that it could not be so. No capitalist journal can dare to divert attention from the individual to the system which produces him, and is responsible for his actions. And the American will not do so. It intends to remain a capitalist newspaper upholding the system which robs, degrades, and stifles the working class. It will attack individuals so that the system may escape.

It is going to stand for the "common man" against the privilege of the "aristocratic man," who we presume is "an opportunist." It is going to cry out against the MAN who "takes things" in the interests of the MAN who "makes things."

But it is not going to say one word about the antagonism between the CLASS to which these individuals belong. It will not appeal to "class prejudice," but it will protest against "class injustice." These things have no distinct meaning, as if they have any meaning whatever, are synonymous; which is equivalent to saying nothing.

now comes Edison who re-assures the public that Niagara will remain as it is, because as he says "it would not pay" to interfere with it in the way Kelvin predicted. When this assurance is sifted down it will be seen that it does not amount to much. Above all men Edison is the one man who more than any other has been identified with new processes which in relation to production would make "it pay." All that he really means is that at present it won't pay to meddle with the Falls. But it is well to remember that they are only safe while this condition exists.

would have suffered infinitely more at the pens of eminent cartoonists than Mr. McKinley, for the double reason that Bryan's position offers more possibilities for ridicule, and that the Republicans are able to employ the cleverest cartoonists in the land, as they are in possession of more surplus product wrung from labor than the Democrats.

And then very probably another Colossus would have strolled along to shake hands with Mr. Bryan—and then—and then—why then the American would have a chance to say to the others what the others are now saying to it. And both sides would as usual "denounce" the "socialists."

The American editorial is only "clever" because the "American people" to whom it is addressed are not "clever," whatever they may think to the contrary. Did they really understand it, they would be at a loss to know why the American wasted a whole page of space to explanation, when the words "Viva L'Anarchie" in the biggest type the office boasts of (and it is famous for big type) would have done just as well.

THE TWO JOURNALISMS.

It is not generally known, and indeed it is not intended that it should be generally known, that there are two sorts of capitalist journalism in existence, one chiefly engaged in the manufacture of "public opinion," the other circulating mainly for the purpose of giving inside information to the exploiting classes.

The contrast between the attitude assumed towards individuals in these two types, is sharp and distinct. The first acknowledges in most exaggerated language the importance of the individual. In their columns President McKinley, Edward VII, the Czar of Russia and Kaiser Wilhelm are represented as the arbiters of the destinies of nations. Their orders, ukases, visits, deaths, etc., are supposed, to be fraught with the most portentous blessings or calamities as the case may be, to the nations over which they "rule." They are the center of things in their particular sphere, the hub upon which the social and economic life of nations turns.

The other sort takes an utterly different view of the importance of these so-called "rulers," but as they are not nearly so widely circulated as the first, the "public" is almost altogether ignorant of their attitude. But to those the individual is of no importance whatever. The thing that is important and which they make no attempt to conceal is the interest of the capitalist classes of the countries of which they write. The class is everything, the individual nothing. In these publications the "ruler" becomes a mere puppet.

Upon our desk lie several copies of the New York Journal of Commerce. It is a paper which is not widely read. It is especially gotten up for the "inner circle." It doesn't rave about the "stamping out" of anarchy or talk of President McKinley's Christian character, or dilate upon the blessed words put into his mouth by the scribes employed for that purpose by the other kind of journalism devoted to moulding "public opinion." No, it merely treats him as a cog in the business wheel, a cog which has been broken but replaced at once by another. It doesn't contain resolutions of sympathy to any marked extent, but it does say that stocks, bonds, shares, railroad and other securities are unaffected and likely to remain so. In short it says that the interests of American capitalism have not been in the least affected by the death of William McKinley.

It handles foreign matters also, for capitalism is international. It says that the recent interchange of courtesies between the Czar and Kaiser doesn't amount to anything, and the editorial opening with this statement immediately switches off to such matters as the Ragged Railway, the Deutsche Bank, the guarantee given by Turkey that Russian capitalists alone shall construct railroads in Asia Minor, and the conviction behind German utterances that "commercial interests gradually convert themselves into political possessions in weak states." The editorial writer doesn't seem to care a straw about how the Kaiser curbs his mustache nor does he exhibit the least concern as to whether the anarchists will avail themselves of the opportunity to "remove" the Czar while the latter is on his travels. He merely treats them both as automata, rigged with wires which are pulled by business interests.

And the visit of the Czar to France he handles in the same manner. There is nothing whatever said about the big French army review or the imposing appearance of 100,000 French soldiers inspected on that occasion. Nor does he even hint that this would be a favorable moment for Kruger to plead the cause of the Boers with the mighty autocrat of all the Russias. But he role of a person in a embarrassed circumstance visiting his "uncle." These are the very words used. Behind the furs and feathers, the gorgeous uniforms and solemn ceremonies, the roar of saluting batteries and all the pomp and panoply of war, the Czar is merely seen as the agent of Russian capitalism sent to secure if possible, the "nexus" between man and man—cash. Indeed the editorial is worth reproducing here in the major portion of it:

Some time ago there was a proposed visit of the Czar to France which was abandoned, and in connection therewith it was announced that it had been found impracticable to float another Russian loan in Paris. His Imperial Majesty is now on a tour of wealthy countries, and the "Deutsche Warte" says that as a result of his visit to Germany waters a "syndicate" consisting mainly of Germans has, with the sanction of the Government taken over $10,000,000 of Russian railroad bonds. A St. Petersburg dispatch to the Berlin "Neueste Nachrichten" says that a Franco-Russian loan of $300,000,000 has been arranged; the Czar is in France, but will not visit Paris. It would be interesting to learn how much larger the loan would have to be to get him to the capital. St. Louis is said to have extended the Kaiser on the subject of a visit to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and to have been very summarily rebuffed. The Czar would be hardly less of an ATTRACTION to the fair than the Kaiser, and if the moneyed men of St. Louis could arrange to float a Russian loan of sufficient size, the Exposition might have the MOST DISTINGUISHED GUEST that ever visited the United States. TERMS COULD UNDOUBTEDLY BE ASCERTAINED FROM M. DE WITTE.

In the first sort of journalism the Czar is a mighty potentate; in the second he is a monkey who may be placed on exhibition, if terms can be arranged with his keeper.

The "public opinion" created by the first sort of journalism has of course no suspicion that foreign "Journals of Commerce" are just as prone to talk of President McKinley as this New York financial organ does of the Czar. Of course all "good citizens" would resent the suggestion, but capitalism, when behind the scenes, is not deterred by any such scruples. It knows exactly what the "ruler" really is.

So these two forms of capitalist journalism, with two distinct functions exacted by side. One deals with fiction, the other with fact. THE FICTION is that the common interests of "all the people" are bound up in and represented by the individual ruler.

The FACT was stated fifty years ago by Marx and Engels in these words: "The executive of the modern State is but a committee for managing the common affairs of the capitalist class."

And the financial organs of capitalism such as the "Journal of Commerce", are in themselves the strongest testimony to the truth of the latter statement.

Mr. W. B. Conkey has again refused to recognize the union amongst his employees. When will the workingclass learn that "nothing is arbitrary" is now an essential article of faith in the creed of capitalism?

FOR THE HOUR OF THE HOUR.

As the season of our out-door agitation is drawing to a close, it is now necessary that ALL the comrades of the South Side Division should come together for the purpose of formulating plans for the coming fall and winter campaign. Also with a view of ascertaining the results of our last season's work. Consequently it is urged that every comrade of the South Side Division be present at Socialist Hall, 743 W. 3rd Street (one block east of Walnut Street), Sunday, September 23rd, 2:30 P. M. sharp.

MAN EATS BY THE WAY.

Many events are now happening to disabuse the minds of the working-class of the fallacy that they are the "people." This is well illustrated in the case of one O'Neill, a painter who lost his job for not working on September 19th, the date of McKinley's funeral. He heard the proclamation of the Mayor calling upon the "people" to abstain from their usual vacations on that day for the purpose of paying respect to the murdered president. He believed that he was one of the "people" and obeyed.

But a rude awakening was in store for him. He was employed by that noble philanthropist and Christian citizen, John V. Farwell, who would brook no delay in the work for which he had employed O'Neill. Mr. Farwell no doubt went to church, and officially mourned for the murdered president, but his wage slave was discharged for assuming that he also was included in the call.

The Cigar Makers International Union has issued a circular asking Unions to go slow in the matter of strikes. Even the cigar makers with their splendid organization find it hard to maintain the ground gained. The really important strikes are invariably lost. Some unimportant points are occasionally conquered, but important points like New York, Dayton or Montreal seem hopeless in spite of the strikes and spirit of solidarity displayed by the membership.

The Educational Club organized among the Union Cigar Makers yet help to enlighten the membership and show them the real nature of the struggle they are engaged in, and the Trust will do its share in the work of education.

The Virginia State Convention has decided to suppress free speech. But that will not interfere with that notorious anarchist Senator Tamm advocating the lynching of colored workingmen in the South when it is necessary to terrify them into submission.

"Business" was "not altogether suspended" while the whole country was in mourning over the death of the president. For instance the Steel Trust hrena-like was busily engaged in crunching the bones of the skeleton of the Amalgamated Iron and Steel Workers' Association.

When night falls upon the field of economic struggle, and the victorious capitalists will survey the scene of slaughter, what scenes will meet their eyes? There will be the remains of the various autonomous Unions who fought bravely and hopelessly against the ever growing power of capitalism armed with the trust, while chained to the chariot of the victor may be found the various Unions that still pretend life, like the Railroad Brotherhood, etc. The victor may then lie down in peace thinking the world is his.

But at dawn he will hear a shaking amongst the dry bones, and the slain will arise in a new form, not as Printers or Ironworkers or Shoemakers to be crushed in detail, no longer trying to defend their position in the swamp of wage slavery, but marching direct for the "citadel of capitalist power," i. e. the power of the state.

It is curious and interesting to observe, how differently some crimes are regarded. In the same paper which bristles with headlines stating that anarchy must be "exterminated" and made forever impossible, the following headlines also appear: "Fall season of holdups begin." Probably few readers outside the socialist's ever gave a thought as to why one sort of crime was to some extent identified with conditions while the other was represented as being totally causeless and isolated.

According to the press an immense amount of capital will shortly be invested in plants for the manufacture of bullet proof silk underwear intended to preserve rulers and high state officials in Europe from the attacks of Anarchist assassins. The individual capitalists who invest in these plants evidently have reached some very definite conclusions as to the possibility of "stamping out" anarchy. It is money that really talks nowadays on such matters.

Seeing an account in the Chicago Chronicle that the assassination of John D. Rockefeller, J. P. Morgan and others of that ilk, was premeditated in conjunction with the "plot" to murder the President, we hasten to assure the Chronicle that the possibility spoken of might indeed very well exist. We do not remember to have seen anything on the subject in socialist papers, but we have a distinct remembrance of one journal, the "Philadelphia Press" if we are not mistaken, offering the suggestion only a few months ago that "Rockefeller and Morgan could only decorate one lamp post each" or words to that effect. We are glad to be able to put the Chronicle in possession of a genuine "clue," though we suppose they will hardly care to follow it up any further, seeing that the "Philadelphia Press" can hardly be classed as a Socialist paper.

During the making of Pekin by the allied Christian powers, the French Bishop who was stationed at the Chinese capital sealed the palace of the unfortunate Yeh Li Sen, plundering it of its treasures of sacred objects. The Bishop had some intention of getting the collection out of the palace, but he was not allowed to do so, only by seeing them in Mr. Siquers, secretary of the American legation. Mr. Siquers is now anxious for some one to tell him how he can get the things into this country without paying the legal 50 per cent duty. We hope that some one will come to Mr. Siquers' relief. It would be a pity for this little drama of Christian morals, to miscarry in the last act.

OUTDOOR AGITATION.

Interference With Meetings Again Materialized. Two Episodes of Last Saturday.

Local Socialist activity has again attracted the notice of Chicago capitalists, which is now, under cover of the excitement occasioned by the murder of President McKinley endeavoring to suppress the outdoor agitation which has been carried on during the summer by the party. At the bottom of this hostility lies the well founded fear of the local politicians that Socialism so assiduously advocated, may make a breach in the capitalist fences during the coming local elections, that will not be easy to repair. We assure them that their fears are fully justified.

At any rate last Saturday saw the opening of the attack. At a meeting in progress at Milwaukee and Armistead Avenue, two well known Republican leaders made a vigorous attempt to stampede the audience by hurling the epithet of "Anarchist" at the speaker, Comrade John Collins, who was expounding the doctrines of Socialism. They made all sorts of physical demonstrations against the speaker, and threatened lynching, in the hope of getting the crowd to take up the cry. Comrade Collins held his ground and the attempt utterly failed the two disturbers sneaking off when offered the speakers' stand after the latter had concluded his address.

The meeting was in many respects a remarkable one. Before its opening some difficulty was experienced in finding a comrade to introduce the speaker, but a young lady in the audience who was interested in socialism solved the difficulty. Miss Swenson, who is about sixteen years of age, courageously mounted the stand and in the coolest and most distinct manner possible announced the object of the meeting and the name of the speaker, a service which compelled the admiration and respect of the audience.

Then came the interruption above related. After its failure, the crowd numbering over seven hundred, gathered around the speaker and listened most attentively to the address, which evidently made a far greater impression than it otherwise would, had the interruption not taken place. A comrade who was present informs us that he observed a local prominent church member standing in the rear of the crowd while the heeler were attacking the speaker, and adding to the excitement with shouts of "kill him," "lynch him." After the disturbance was over this disciple of the meek and lowly one also sneaked off.

The second meeting which was held at Paulina and Milwaukee Avenues, was also disturbed, this time by a police officer whose ill judged zeal may cost him dearly, if the party push the case as they at present intend. Comrade Weisner was speaking when the officer arrived and asked for the permit, which was shown him. He then went away but returned shortly and rushed the audience off the sidewalk. The speaker invited the crowd to stand on the street and was threatened by the officer who called him "anarchist" and told him to mind his own business. He then went away for the second time. He returned once more and asked the speaker to step down from the stand as he had something to say to him. The speaker complied and was at once informed that he was under arrest. Comrades Fox and Evans took up the address and continued the meeting to the end without the slightest interruption.

Meanwhile Comrade Weisner was hauled to the station, where he was three times refused. A charge of "disorderly conduct" was entered against him and on Monday morning a fine of $15 was imposed. Ball was at once procured and the case appeared to the Criminal Court.

Several meetings on the North Side were also prohibited by the police, the permit of Chief O'Neill not being recognized. The Socialists of Chicago have had a long experience of this sort of petty annoyance, but have always been successful in conducting open air meetings in spite of it, and they are determined to overcome it in this case also. The silly pretext of "anarchism" as a reason for suppressing our meetings will have just the opposite effect from that intended. In fully confounding Socialism and Anarchism the press has drawn much attention to our propaganda, in fact has given us effective advertisement free, gratis, and for nothing, as the saying has it. We shall not be slow to take advantage of the fact, knowing that when through curiosity, the public attend our meetings they will in most cases see the fraud that the capitalist press has tried to impose upon them. In the mean time the fight that has been thus thrust upon us will be fought upon our side with all the skill and energy we possess.

So far we have not noticed that any capitalist paper has hailed Professor Trigg or the cause for stating that Rodovsk was neither a lawyer, politician, or idealist, but a "business" man.

Socialist Pointers

Why 'shouldn't' the clergymen endorse the American? It prints their pictures.

Don't let your interest in the yacht race prevent you from circulating the Workers' Call.

Hearst and his capitalist competitors have at least one virtue. They tell the truth about each other.

Now if all those who really wish to abolish anarchy would only vote the Socialist ticket, how soon it would disappear!

The idea of the total abolition of government is preposterous. How could the different religious creeds be kept apart without it?

That eminent critic Professor Trigg says that "business is often conducted in defiance of statutes." Isn't this "doggerel" too?

Up to the present we have not heard that Mr. Hearst has purchased a clergyman to write a sermon on the evils of yellow journalism.

The right of free speech must be preserved, of course, but the speaker should be careful to say nothing which might offend the ruling class.

"Business" apparently stood still for five minutes last Thursday. Then it went on creating products as usual—presidents and anarchists included.

Kitchener may not be able to suppress the Boers by proclamation, but that of course is no reason why the capitalist press cannot suppress anarchy by the same method.

When the economic specialists of the future conduct an autopsy upon the corpse of capitalism, they may be expected to find unmistakable evidences of gangrene.

Kitchener's formula of "regretting to state" may come in handy for capitalist journals of the future, when describing the results of an election.

That Chicago clergyman who declared that "Anarchy cannot be suppressed by anarchy," gave a good illustration of how a man can say too little and too much at the same time.

Money has to be "cramped out" before being put in circulation. A similar process, under capitalism, is responsible for the production of anarchy.

Count Tolstol thinks that no "Christian" can become a soldier. When he succeeds in converting the Russian government to this theory, we will take the matter under consideration.

The Tribune says that "Johann Most is merely a rabid echo of Karl Marx." Now if Marx had ever edited a paper like the Tribune, there might be something in this theory.

A dispatch states that "New York is in revolt against the corrupt gang which is misruling the city," which is equivalent to saying that nothing unusual is happening in that city.

A correspondent of the Inter Ocean suggests that all Anarchists shall be branded on the forehead with the letter A, and strange as it may seem, he doesn't put Rev. before his name.

Perhaps the report that Paul Kruger is almost destitute may to some extent account for the lack of interest displayed by the "rulers" of Europe in his cause.

If Lipton's stockyard employes can't attend the yacht race, could not the packing house machinery be speeded up somewhat and let them attend the race in that manner?

The business department of this paper is able to take care of just 20,000 more subscribers. When that number is secured we will ask our hustlers to stop, but not till then.

Shaffer says the steel strike was lost mainly on account of the action of Comper. It will be the policy of the trust to let this opinion go uncorrected.

If Oom Paul is really destitute and still persists in paying a visit to the United States, some charitable person should send him a copy of our immigration laws before he starts.

Workmen who desire to see the magnificent train constructed for the Duke of York's tour through Canada, had best get a pair of heavy shoes and strike the road for Montreal.

We hasten to explain that the "map-shot" friend who was rebuked by President Roosevelt, is not the person who writes the columns in this paper, which appears under the title.

We would suggest to the Marguerite Club that before opening their campaign, they get some pointers from the pages which illustrated the life of John Alexander Davis.

"Anarchists as a rule, do no work of a useful kind" says a contemporary. We fail to see why this, if true, should be counted against them seeing that there are millions of people throughout the world who are held in lesser just because of this very fact.

"TOO BUSY TO DENOUNCE".

Explanation Proffered to a Correspondent Who Suggested to a Socialist Speaker His Idea of What Was "Fitting", and Was Told That There Was "No Time".

Chicago, September 18, 1901.
THE WORKER'S CALL.
28 North Clark St., City.

A few nights ago at the corner of State and Congress Street, I suggested to one of the most speakers of the Socialist party that it would be fitting just at this time for these speakers to denounce the attempted assassination of the OFFICE of President of the United States. This particular speaker replied that "Socialists had no time to express such denunciation. They were too busy."

Now, my object in offering the suggestion was to get some definite expression on this subject. I wanted to discover the spirit which actuates the movement. If Mr. Debs had been elected to the office of President some time ago when he was nominated by the Socialist party he would have been just as liable to assassination as was President McKinley, for anarchists are just as antagonistic to the form of Government they PROPOSE as they are to the present system. If Mr. Debs had been elected and afterwards assassinated, these socialist speakers would undoubtedly have taken it upon themselves to denounce the deed not only as the murder of an individual, but as an attack on the representative of the majority.

Mr. Bryan, who was Mr. McKinley's political opponent in the last campaign, has manfully denounced the act as an attack not only on the man, but upon all forms of government. I think that Socialists should take the same position. Of course, there may be those who wish to use Socialism as a cloak for Anarchistic doctrines.

Very truly yours,
A. E. MASSEY.

It is rather a difficult task to answer the letter of this correspondent in a manner calculated to give him the sort of satisfaction he is evidently looking for. The answer which he received from the street speaker showed merely that the latter did not agree with him upon the subject of what was "fitting", and nothing more. And it could by no means be construed into any sort of sympathy with assassination upon the part of the speaker, by any unprejudiced hearer. Why did Mr. Massey suppose it was "fitting"? His letter shows by its tone that he suspects that the Socialists in general have some speaking, cowardly sort of satisfaction in the murder of the President. Had he taken the slightest trouble to inquire into the tenets and doctrines of Socialism, he would have found that there was no necessity whatever of attempting to suggest a "Fitting" purge of this character to any socialist speaker.

We do not know who this speaker was, but nevertheless we can easily suggest cogent reasons for his answer. Most of our speakers prepare beforehand a certain line of thought upon which to speak in public, and therefore do not care to be switched off upon subjects or certain phases of subjects with which they had not intended to deal. In view of this, the plea of "too busy" is quite valid.

But we shrewdly suspect that the speaker resented the suggestion. Let Mr. Massey put himself in the place of a man who for months or maybe years, had been expounding a philosophy which absolutely repudiates murder and assassination as both inhuman and vile. A man who had appealed constantly to the intelligence of his hearers alone, who had persistently pointed out the use of the bullet only as a means of economic emancipation, who had been identified with a movement which always did and still does fight shy of any "weapon" in its armory. Knowing this thoroughly, let Mr. Massey be confronted by a man who never took the slightest trouble to know anything about Socialism, but who had apparently swallowed all the rot that appears in the capitalist press upon the subject. Let such a person suggest to Mr. Massey that he thought it "fitting" that he (Massey) should clear his shirt of any sympathy with the murderous lunatic who assassinated the president, because he (the questioner) had an idea that there were those who wished to use Socialism as a cloak for Anarchistic doctrines. "Would Mr. Massey resent such a suggestion? If not, we can only say that Socialists are more sensitive than Mr. Massey."

"The Socialists have no time for 'denunciation'." What is "denunciation" anyhow, and what does it accomplish? What have all the hysterical ravings of the public, press and politicians accomplished? Can it destroy anarchy? Can it induce the life of any ruler or leader of the Anarchist assassin? The Socialists say no—and can prove that negative to the satisfaction of any reasonable human being.

And when the socialist deals with this subject he speaks instead of "denouncing" and in this sense the latter is to him a waste of time. He points out what anarchy is, the reasoning from which it springs, the secret of its persistence, its inheritance in modern society, and the only means for its extinction, the changing of the economic basis of society from private to collective ownership of the means of production—in other words the inauguration of the Socialist Commonwealth. And this he considers infinitely more ends to befitting. He may be mistaken, perhaps Mr. Massey can prove this, though we doubt it, but such is his belief.

The surgeon who attended the President immediately after the outrage, "had no time to express denunciation."

They were too busy." But nobody infers from this that they were secretly satisfied with the assassination, or that they were even lacking in feeling. Had they neglected the wounded man to "denounce" the attempted assassination of the office of President what would the public have thought of them? Socialists consider themselves as standing in the same relation to society as the surgeons to William McKinley. They are experts in economic science, as the surgeons are in medical science, and the case is pressing. They may again be mistaken of course, (again we say Mr. Massey is invited to demonstrate it if he can), but such is their belief.

The question raised about Mr. Debs is in reality unthinkable to any socialist, though of course Mr. Massey can hardly be expected to understand why this word is used. We will however try to explain. If Mr. Debs were elected President, it would mean that a majority of the people of the United States were Socialists. In such an environment Anarchy would have long disappeared. It is only a transient phase through which the world is passing, and when Socialism is strong enough to elect a president, not only anarchy but its cause, capitalism, will have vanished from the earth.

But the human mind can make abstractions. It can suppose the impossible. Let it therefore be supposed that a Socialist President did fall under the stroke of an Anarchist assassin. Would the socialist "denounce" the act in the sense that Mr. Massey evidently means—that is in the manner in which the murder and murder of William McKinley is now "denounced" in press, pulpit, and on platform? We venture to say no. They would most likely regard the crime as a case of "atavism," a bequest from a past order of society, and would probably incarcerate the perpetrator for life—unless perhaps the science of that period could evolve a cure.

As for Mr. Bryan, he has been before now "denounced" as an "Anarchist," but this has not been by the socialists. Perhaps he feels that he owes it to the Republicans who have thus branded him, to make his disavowal of the act public. As to the "manliness" of his course, that is a matter of opinion. He has "denounced" the act. Certainly. But has there been or will there be any beneficial results from such denunciation? We socialists maintain that there will not, and stand prepared to give reasons therefor.

Let us say for perhaps the thousandth time, Mr. Massey, that all socialists regret and abhor the act which deprived Mr. McKinley of life. Let us say for the thousandth time that as a party we are the ONLY party that has stood like a rock against murder—and the conditions which produce it, whether the victim be president or pauper.

But let us say also, and mark this well Mr. Massey, that when those who might easily know and therefore should know what socialism really is and what it teaches, attempt to place our speakers or our party in the position of men justly suspected of condoning murder, or even regarding it with indifference, such attempts will meet unreservedly and we are becoming impatient of this stupid folly, this unbecoming inquisition. There is an excuse for this attitude of ours, but none whatever for yours, for your letter shows you to be a person of average intelligence, quite able to understand it as you depict. The literature of socialism is cheap, abundant and easily procurable. You can inform yourself fully if you really wish to be informed.

If you want to understand the "spirit of the movement" you must first understand socialism, which it is very evident from your letter you do not now. You can get no "definite expression" until you comprehend the ground-work, the basis from which socialists reason. And when you have comprehended it you will be preserved from the errors into which you have fallen in your letter—first that you are competent to judge of what is "fitting", or what position the socialists should take—second, your positive though unfounded assertion as to what the socialists would, "undoubtedly," do in the Debs hypothesis which you have constructed, and third, your ridiculous belief that it is possible to use Socialism as a cloak for Anarchistic doctrines.

In conclusion let us say that the writer of this bears you no ill feeling or malice—no, not even "righteous indignation." You will not be offended if we say we have no time for that sort of thing—that like the speaker on the street corner we are "too busy". The society for which we strive is one in which murder shall be unknown because the economic conditions which have produced it and the thousand other ghastly evils of the present, shall have passed away for ever. In other words we are seeking to realize the "true brotherhood of man," understanding by this, not the canting, meaningless phrase which is today preached from the thousand subsidized pulpits, but a brotherhood founded upon better material conditions for all, upon a just economic system of production and distribution.

But this ideal can only be realized by dealing with and mercilessly exposing the wickedness of the present system, by ruthlessly uncovering its structure and showing where the evil lies and how it may be and must be removed. And if in doing this, our language is not all it might be, please remember that the same remark applies with a thousand fold more force to present society. We want to change it. Will you not?

THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Translated for the Workers' Call from "Maison Du Co-operateur Socialiste."

CHAPTER III. SPECIAL CHARACTERISTICS OF A SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE.

There are institutions which are necessarily anti-socialist, as, for example, standing armies. On the other hand there are some which can be either bourgeois or socialist according to the spirit prevailing in them. To this latter class belong co-operatives of consumption.

A Co-operative of consumption will be non-socialist if the co-operatives, organized for any other reason than the desire to hasten the transformation of society. It will be socialist if the co-operatives make it contribute to the bringing in of the collectivist or communist society.

If people join in co-operatives for the sole motive of buying at a lower rate their objects of consumption, their co-operative will be non-socialist. If their association has a motive higher than the reduction of the cost of living if they do not associate themselves for the simple pleasure—which is of course proper enough—of buying at lower rates their bread, wine, meat, etc., but because this association is for them a weapon against the present organization of society, then their co-operative will be socialist.

In the eyes of the non-socialist co-operatives, co-operation is a sufficient end beyond which there is nothing to seek. In the hands of the socialist, co-operation is nothing but a means of socialist action, a powerful lever capable of shaking the capitalist world on its foundations of individual property and of social injustice.

We do not wish to be co-operators for the satisfaction of diminishing a little the infinite misery of the proletariat; this satisfaction is not sufficient, we wish to be co-operators that we may co-operate more efficiently in the social revolution.

Every co-operative will be socialist that is undertaken as a means for driving at that supreme end.

What are the practical characteristics which correspond to this theoretical spirit? What are the signs, what are the acts, what are the regulations which enable us to distinguish the socialist purpose in a co-operative?

1. In a country where the socialist exists, and unity has been effected, it is necessary first of all that the co-operative be affiliated with the party, either directly or through a federation, or through an organization. This affiliation ought not to be merely formal; it ought to manifest itself in some better way than by an inert, passive adherence to the principles of the party.

A socialist co-operative ought to co-operate with the activity of the socialist party, at all times by all means at its disposal.

2. A socialist co-operative loses no opportunity of carrying on propaganda and working for socialism.

Let us take two or three examples. The Avenue de la Paix, in the 18th District of Paris, a Co-operative affiliated with the socialist party, contributes to the support of strikers; it sent a considerable sum to the Glass Workers' Union; it assisted a sister society, the Alliance of the 18th District; it subscribed for five shares in the Working Men's Shoe Store.

In Belgium the socialist co-operative called the Vooruit of Ghent seized an excellent occasion for socialist propaganda when it sent daily wagons loaded with bread to the relief of the strikers of Borinage.

Similar actions were taken by the Maison du Peuple of Brussels, when the quarry men of Quenast went on a strike. These quarries were very religious people, submissive to the clerical power which is so formidable in Belgium. The co-operatives of the Maison du Peuple saw in them, as was right, only laborers struggling against capital, and decided to aid them. Every morning the wagons of the great co-operative set out for Quenast loaded with bread and decorated with red flags. Today this district has become socialist.

The Maison du Peuple puts at the disposal of the socialist party of Belgium its vast assembly hall; it gives its hospitality to the bureau of the labor unions, it offers to the laborers its lodging room and its library.

Political and social struggle, economic struggle, trade union struggle, intellectual struggle—all these forms of social struggle are gathered under its vast roof.

This is a model to be followed by all the Co-operatives which belong to the socialist party in proportion to their strength.

3. However varied may be the work of the socialist Co-operative and however developed its propaganda, this work and this propaganda by their very nature are limited to a single place, or at least to a district of narrow limits. New propaganda and work are necessary everywhere, and especially in places where there are, as yet, no such vigorous groups as the Co-operatives.

The work and the propaganda of the party must be organized on State and National lines. It is then necessary that the socialist co-operative contribute to the State and National work of the socialist party by furnishing it with pecuniary resources, since there is no other practical way of co-operating at work that must extend over the territory of a large district or of the entire country.

This has been clearly understood by more than one socialist co-operative. In 1895 the Avenue de la Paix, for example, passed the following resolutions at its General Assembly:

cess shall be turned over to the Committee for socialist propaganda."

The Maison du Peuple of Brussels by virtue of its rules distributes to its members only 75 per cent of the annual profits, of the remaining 25 per cent at least one half is devoted to socialist propaganda, that is to say, not less than 12 1/2 per cent. We prefer this system (leaving the percentage to be determined according to circumstances) for it has the merit of plunging the socialist idea and socialist work with the repeated acts of daily life, since the co-operative cannot buy its bread or other necessities without by that very action contributing to the fund of the federation or the general committee, without performing the act of a militant socialist.

We thus see how in its spirit and its actions, in theory and in practice, a socialist Co-operative of consumption is distinguished from a non-socialist Co-operative. The bourgeois co-operative conceals itself with co-operation for the present profits that it brings to him. The socialist co-operative uses co-operation as a suitable means for reaching an end different from these means. That end is the social revolution.

From Local Minneapolis.

The following resolutions against anarchy were unanimously adopted at the last regular meeting of the local Minneapolis Socialist party and ordered sent to the Times for publication:

"Whereas, The president of the United States has been stricken down by the bullet of an assassin, the foul deed striking at the very foundation of the government,

Therefore, Be it resolved by the local Minneapolis Socialist party, that we with all other right minded citizens, sincerely deplore the tragic end of our president, and sympathize with those who have lost in him a husband and friend.

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to anarchy and in favor of all just measures for its extermination.

Resolved, That never before in the history of our country has there been an event that called for more sound reasoning and true patriotism to the ideal of just government.

Resolved, That we cannot rid this country of anarchy by acts of violence, by force, or any reactionary measures that deal with the question merely as an effect—that anarchy exists, is, by the law of cause and effect, a self-evident proof that there is some cause that produces it and this remedy must be discovered before the remedy can be applied.

Resolved, That we call upon all the citizens of the United States to carefully study the present unjust economic basis of our modern commercialism where poverty exists in the midst of plenty, and where neither vast wealth nor extreme want are the result of merit or demerit, with a view to establishing a more just and equitable system.

Resolved, That we boldly affirm that the Socialist co-operatives commonwealth is the only logical solution of the anarchy question, and we invite the public to carefully study its principles and purposes.

IT IS PROSPERING.

Business of Socialist Co-operative Hall is Increasing. More Funds Could be Used.

The membership is now 15—a gain of 13 since September 1st. Daily receipts are growing—being double now what they were a month ago. The delivery system is working well, the first week bringing several orders back for coal and groceries. Enough orders for delivery this week are at hand to keep the comrades engaged, which is very gratifying and encouraging. Manager Higgins has added to the stock and is steadily looking out to increase the variety of goods carried.

The cash local trade is fair and we are confident that in store quarters this feature might be vastly increased until it equaled at least the trade of the comrades' members. Other quarters are therefore sought for, but we feel that the moment we open store with frontage to a street, this calls for more money. Will the comrades who have paid 50 cents or $1.00 on their membership endeavor to contribute, say $3.00 more to help swell the working capital? 75 members at $5.00 each means a working capital of $375.00, but of this sum only some $175.00 has as yet been paid in. We could use $200.00 more to very great advantage.

Come forward comrades, those of you who can!

As to coal. We will furnish it in all sizes at 75¢ per ton for large orders and 85¢ per ton for small, and small quantities. These are September rates. We guarantee weight—here is what we are doing: Did you burn four tons last week?—order 4 1/2 from the Co-operative; did you burn 5 tons?—order 5 1/2 from the Co-operative. It may be a little 7 x 2000 equals 5 x 2000 every time, that's all.

Soft coal and hard and soft wood also furnished at full weight of measure. No capitalist looking for gain back of the Co-operative; hence we offer all co-operative comrades and their friends their full quantity, their true quality, and their price—divided on Dec 1st.

If 1-2 per cent of the profits go to propaganda, (probably as donations, to the C.A.S.) 12 1/2 per cent is not made as returned to all co-operatives holding membership or non-membership cards in accordance with their purchases. Are you a member? If not—why not? Co-operation is one feature of socialism and has been endorsed by the International Congress of Europe—it is therefore strictly orthodox and in good socialism. Give us your support and assistance. Help us build up a co-operative institution—owned, managed, run and regulated by Socialists that shall become a power in this city—a power for propaganda—a standing challenge to competing capitalists and their ilk throughout Chicago. The watchword: "Consumers, Combine for Socialism!" Mail in your name and 50 cents on your membership of $5.00. Follow this by a trial grocery order and wind up the first week of your membership by sending a coal order. Do all this if you can—or do what you can of it—but do it now, that's the point! Address: SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE, 120 S. Western Ave., Phone Healy 563, J. M. CROOK, Sec., 196 N. 2nd Ave.

Probably the best way to silence the clamorous protests of the South Side citizens against the "obnoxious odors" of the land rendering plants, would be to give them a few shares of stock each in the concerns. The agreeable odor of the profits would doubtless neutralize the "obnoxious" odors of the land.

Italian Socialists on Carnot.

In order to show the position taken by socialists in Europe, on the occasion of the murder of the chief of a state by the adherents of anarchy, we reprint the following proclamation issued by the Italian Socialist Party after the assassination of President Carnot. We reprint from the "Seattle Socialist" and it is perhaps needless to say that the position taken here thoroughly represents the attitude of American socialists upon such actions.

The Socialist Party to the Workingmen of Italy:

Down with assassins! Humanity now understands that life is sacred, and does not tolerate brutal violations of this great principle which is morally the soul of socialism.

He who struggles for the right to life, in exchange for his labor, condemns every assault upon human life—whether it be the work of bourgeois exploitation in factories, or at the bombs or daggers of unintelligent revolutionists.

The socialist party, which has this principle for a shibboleth, which expects everything from the class-conscious organization of the working class, execrates the crime committed against the person of the president of the French republic; as a brutal deed, as the negation of every principle of revolutionary logic.

It is necessary to arouse in the proletariat the consciousness of their own rights, to furnish them the structure of organization, and to induce them to function as a new organism. It is necessary to conquer the public powers by the means which modern civilization gives us.

To revolt, to throw at haphazard a bomb among the spectators in a theatre, or to kill an individual, is the act of barbarians or of ignorant people. The Socialist party sees in such deeds the violent manifestations of bourgeois sentiments.

We are the adversaries of all the violence of bourgeois exploitation, of the guillotine, of musketry discharges (aimed at strikers, etc.), and of anarchist outrages. Hurrah for Socialism!

Superintendent Cooley writes a letter to the students in which he "denounces" anarchy, and urges them to obey the laws and become good citizens. However as he didn't advise them to subscribe to the Workers' Call, it is not likely that they will be much benefited by his appeal.

All party members having cash or tickets for the West Side picnic will please settle at the Workers' Call office.

W. KENNEDY.

The constitutional convention of Virginia, in session at Richmond, has voted to eliminate the ancient clause which "guarantees" free speech. The Constitutional Convention of Virginia is behind the times. It must be a very uncommittal body which fails to recognize that in capitalist society it is superfluous to be over-particular about such a little thing as a mere constitution. It was needless for the ruling class of Virginia to constitutionally arrogate the "right" of free speech. The judicial and executive servants of capitalism may be depended upon to attend to this matter as emergencies arise. The action of these Virginians was entirely unnecessary.

Educational Hall.

On Friday, October 4th, the 25th Ward Club begins its regular Friday evening lectures at Educational Hall, corner Milwaukee and Armitage Aves. Miss Mary Colson will begin the season on that evening lecturing on the subject, "Public Morals."

Educational Hall promises to be a close rival to the Temple. A good program has been arranged, including the best speakers in the Party, musical and vocal entertainment. The 25th Ward Club is well prepared for the coming campaign. Educational Hall is reached by the Western, Milwaukee, Armitage Avenues and Jefferson St. car lines and by the Metropolitan Elevated. The Hall will accommodate from 200 to 400 people. A library will be opened in a few weeks as will also the children's Sunday school. Socialist Clearinghouse Committee will meet at this Hall.

To Ward Organizers.

A copy of a part of the City Constitution has been sent to these committees for suggestions. Please bring this before the next meeting and set out in case.

Local Party Progress.

Reports of Organizers of the North, South, West and 4th District Divisions, on public meetings, party press, financial returns, and general agitation for the past week. A record of growing activity.

NORTH SIDE.

The only meeting held on the North Side this week following the excitement was at Franklin and Oak Streets and good sized crowds listened to Conrad San and Morris. A collection was taken up and calls distributed. Cold weather spoiled the rest of the meetings, and with the exception of one at the corner of Oak and Franklin, Clark and Walton Place and Wrightwood and Sheffield Aves all other meetings will be called off.

Clubs should get ready for indoor meetings.

The speakers club will meet on Tuesday evening instead of Monday at 137 North Clark Street, basement.

All North Side members should attend and learn something about Socialism and Socialist tactics.

All clubs will keep up their orders for calls.

Clubs at their business meeting should listen carefully to the reports of the Division Organization, and arrange their business meetings for the 1st and 3rd Monday evenings in the month.

Organization Committee meets at 137 North Clark Street on Saturdays at 6:30 P. M. All delegates must not fail to be present at next meetings.

SOUTH SIDE.

Open air meetings on the South Side this last summer and including this last week have had good and bad results—good for socialism and bad for Capitalism—and the capitalist class has not been slow to realize this fact. More especially have they recognized the value of this particular work the last two or three weeks—as a consequence they have at different times tried to break up our meetings and have as many times failed. But owing to the cold weather we shall be compelled to hold our agitation meetings indoors after this month. Therefore every ward branch is urged to prepare for these indoor meetings.

Comrades W. E. McDermott and R. T. Sims held a crowd of about 200 last Saturday at 3rd and Halsted Streets, for about two hours. I had the pleasure of listening to these comrades who although they have taken to the soap box but recently certainly made things hum while they were at it. This only shows what the comrades may do if they will only muster up enough courage to make the start.

WEST SIDE.

Owing to the fact that the State Convention was to convene promptly at 10 o'clock the work of the West Division Committee was rushed through so as to give all such organizers as were delegates an opportunity to participate in the work of the Convention from its beginning.

Bad weather and burial of the dead, president contributed to the abandonment of the meetings the past week. As the out door agitation will close officially on the 30th of this month organizers and comrades as well as the speakers are urged to do their utmost to make the remaining meetings a success.

So far only the 11th, 12th, 13th, 24th and the 35th Wards have sent in their list of membership, those wards who have not yet done so are requested to do so at once as it is the desire of the committee to place the collection of dues and canvassing for Workers' Call subscriptions on a systematic basis as soon as possible. To simplify matters on the recommendation of the Division Organizer, it was decided to make a request on the ward branches to allow the organizers to take charge of dues stamps and Call cards.

The financial report for the week ending Sept. 23 is as follows:

Balance from Sept 15.....	$2.55
13th W. B. for dues stamps.....	2.00
13th W. B. for Call Cards.....	1.00
14th W. B. for dues stamps.....	1.00
14th W. B. donation.....	1.00
15th W. B. Collection.....	1.75
16th W. B. Collection.....	1.00
18th W. B. dues stamps.....	1.00
24th W. B. dues stamps.....	2.25
Turned over by the Picnic committee per Kennedy.....	42.00
Total.....	$54.00

Expenses:

To Ex. Com. on stamp acct.....	2.25
To Ex. Com. W. Call acct.....	1.00
Total.....	$3.25
Balance on hand.....	$50.75

Local Socialist Units.

On Tuesday, September 24, P. M. at Elks Hall, 1148 West 43rd Street the Amalgamation of Branch 5, S. D. P. Chicago Board and the 5th Ward Branch of the Socialist Party took place. The combination will be known as the 5th Ward Branch Socialist Party, the members of Branch 5 wishing to meet together in the future as they have for so many years in the past. The meeting was most harmonious and gave good promise of effective agitation in the future. As both Branch 5, and the 5th Ward Branch dissolved to effect amalgamation, a 2 1/2 list of officers was elected (by acclamation) as follows: Organizer, Comrade Nelson, Fin. Sec., Rasmussen, Treas., Nelson, Asst. Organizer, Roberts. Five delegates to Central Committee were also elected—Robert, Roberts, Anderson, Brown and Hubbard. Future meetings were arranged for and other details discussed after which the meeting adjourned.

Funds Wanted.

To the Members of Section Chicago: Friends and Sympathizers:—

The arrest by an over-zealous Police officer of Comrade Welcher and his detention in the station after being fined $25 on an entirely different charge than was first preferred against him, has caused an expense for bail bond and appeal of some $15.

This money has been loaned and must be returned to the Comrade who made the loan. Also MORE MONEY is needed to hire an attorney to fight the case. Comrade Welcher was arrested while speaking from a stand under the auspices of the Socialist Party, and the PARTY MUST PAY HIS EXPENSES.

Also this matter of arresting a Comrade for NO OTHER REASON than because he is a SOCIALIST speaker must cease.

AND IT TAKES MONEY TO END IT.

CAPITALISM AND DISEASE

A Story of Poisoning for Profit. Typhoid Epidemic in Baraboo, Wis. Infected River Water Pumped into the Mains. President McKinley's Death. A Story of the Local Press and Public. Advertisement as Inevitable Consequence of the Competitive System.

For the last few weeks the air has been full of denunciations of plots, conspiracies and assassinations. The cowardly murder of President McKinley has roused a demand that all conspiracies against human life or public order be punished with the greatest severity. For this reason the present seemed to me to be a peculiarly fitting time to expose one of the most dastardly plots against human life that modern times has brought forth.

These came to my notice during the past summer an instance where a plot to poison an entire town was conceived and carried out until twice as many men and women and children lay helpless and sick almost to death while a score of victims gave up their lives.

The men who were at the bottom of this diabolical conspiracy were no half-crazy political fanatics who had seen or experienced the world's suffering and woe and hoped by some mad deed to help the life of society. On the contrary they were the most favored by wealth and education of any in the little community in which they lived, and their only motive was greed for more gain. You think this all sounds like some crazy drama. Listen and see if what I have said is not all true.

The city of Baraboo, Wisconsin is located about 150 miles from Chicago. In a little valley surrounded by great bluffs that shield it from the fiercer blasts of winter. There are only about 4,000 people in the place, the streets are broad and shady and the open country on every side gives that combination of country air and room, with city conveniences, which should make for the greatest possible physical well-being on the part of its residents. Yet when I visited the place during the past summer it was like a visit to a plague house. The black shadow of typhoid fever lay over the city like a pall. Every day told of new victims to its grasp. Every one lived in horror lest his turn or that of some member of his family might be the next victim of the scourge.

Twenty years ago, or among some savage tribes such a thing as this might have happened with no blame assignable to any individual or set of individuals. But today every physician knows that the first case of typhoid is an ordinary community demands that there be an investigation of three things at least—the ice, water, and milk supply. The second case in a city of the size of Baraboo would demand that every possible means be used to ascertain the character of these supplies, and the third case without determining the source of contamination is a sign of hopeless incompetence, or criminal malpractice on the part of every physician in the city.

Modern methods of bacteriological analysis have rendered the detection of the typhoid germ comparatively easy. The result of a proper examination with culture growths of the resulting bacteria, gives certain results. Yet in this city there was a health officer whose special business it was to make such investigations. He issued bulletins after bulletins stating that the water was pure and usable, and claimed to be unable to locate the source of contamination. At last when there were over twenty cases in this little community he was forced by a tardily aroused public sentiment to secure an adequate examination. It was then found that the water that flowed through the pipes was little less than deadly poison. The number of cases of typhoid increased rapidly to over two hundred. Death seemed to have claimed the place as his own. It was proven that the company that was supplying the water was pumping it directly from the river, below the point where the city sewage was emptied. This was strenuously denied until the bacteriological tests showed the identity of the water in the pipes with that in the river, when the same excuse was made that the supply pipe “leaked” at the point where they crossed a branch of the river.

It was then developed that the health officer had very obligingly gone down to the wells from which the company said the water came, to get his samples for examination, instead of taking it from the hydrants which were supplying the water actually used.

This is a simple recital of the facts. Whether the health officer was kept from doing his duty because of the preeminence of the owners of the water plant or whether, as was freely alleged, there was a closer connection, I know of means of knowing. This is not a minor point after all. But here is the situation. A population of 4,000 people being steadily poisoned for gain. Men, women and children alike falling sick and dying.

But this poisoning is but a mere incident in a great system of murder. U. S. food commissioners have discovered that almost 50 per cent of the substance sold for food contained ingredients so poisonous, that poisoning them is a crime.

It is always a sorry spectacle to see an individual whose abilities in certain directions have been recognized by a portion of his fellow men, desert the department in which he was a reputation for wisdom to voluntarily enter another where he must perform appear as an ignorant mischief maker, through lack of knowledge.

We are constrained to make the above observation through perusing an article purporting to deal with Socialism and Anarchism, which appeared in the Daily News of last week from the pen of one Theodore B. Thiele.

STAMPED AS A STREET SPEAKER

Science Favorable Moment for Springing Question and Attracting Attention of “Business” Men.

Just at present the reporters on capitalist papers are writing wonderful things in their daily walks abroad. They probably have to, in order to hold their jobs, and the latest effort eclipses anything of the sort we have yet noticed.

An Italian it seems, was discovered in Union Park engaged in the marvelous task of preaching doctrines of Anarchy and Socialism at one and the same time. Just how he managed to do this the veracious scribe says not, but anyhow the Italian was only one of the actors in the little drama which was vented for the edification of the public.

After this curious hybrid had expounded his double doctrine, for a while, an American boy of fourteen who was working somewhere for three dollars per week, stepped out of the audience and brought about the collapse of the speaker by the very original inquiry of why he didn't go back to his native land if things did not suit him here.

The Italian fled, pursued by the jeers of the audience, and a bystander, pleased with the “argument” put up by the boy, asked how he could help him. The boy said he would like to get an education, and the other presented him with his card and said he would help him to secure one.

This is the story as it is related in the press. The possibility of preaching Socialism and Anarchy at the same time, might perhaps go down with the average newspaper reader who knows nothing or cares to know nothing of either, but it might be supposed that a system which compels a boy of fourteen to go without an education in order to earn three dollars per week, might very well be criticized adversely by any sort of a speaker. However we merely intended to give an artistic verisimilitude to an otherwise bald and unconvincing narrative, by making this juvenile victim of capitalism pose as its defender, and looked at in this light the story is undoubtedly a very creditable work of imagination.

The appearance of this story in its distinct proof that the ancient methods by which ambitious juveniles attained fame and fortune are becoming played out. The “young person” need no longer hope that by picking up a pin in the office of the merchant where he applies for work as an errand boy, he will be placed on the road to affluence—not even if he has a widowed mother and nine small brothers and sisters to support on the prospective salary of $1 per week that he expects to get for his services. Such methods are no longer to be depended upon. The up to date aspirant must equip himself with the argument above mentioned—and go out on an expedition of discovery, find the proper combination, a fellow preaching “socialism and anarchy”, and a disguised “business” philanthropist listening. Then he should wait for a favorable opportunity to spring his question. It is a rather roundabout way of securing an education, to be sure, but we have the testimony of the capitalist press that it is effective.

However, if there is any youth of fourteen, working for three dollars per week, who really wants an education, we can suggest a much shorter way to obtain it, and when it is obtained, will be an education worth having. This is our suggestion. Seek out a street speaker who is talking SOCIALISM alone, (it is far easier to find him than the other kind) and after listening attentively, ask what question you see fit. You will then get the rudiments of an education which will be of greater service to you in the future than anything you could get from any petty labor skinner who hates socialism, but who being quite aware of his intellectual limitations, dare not tackle its exponents in public.

Socialism and Crime.

The criminal statistics for the German Empire have just been published, and Vorwärts carefully analyzes them. As might be expected the poorest parts of the German Empire come out worst. Thus, for instance, the worst is Bavaria. Then the writer compares the States, looking at them from the number of votes given for Socialist candidates for every 100 votes cast, and the result is the following table:—

Name of State	Number of Socialist Votes per 100 Criminals
1. Saxony	69.5
2. 11 N. German States	44.5
3. Thuringian States	44.1
4. Hesse	33.9
5. Alsace Lorraine	22.7
6. Württemberg	20.4
7. Baden	18.9
8. Bavaria	18.1

It is seen by this that in Bavaria and Baden, where the “Crisis” rule, there is much crime, and that here the Socialists have few votes. It should be remembered, that the eleven North German States, including Berlin, Hamburg, and Bremen, have nearly a third of the population of the Empire.—London (Eng.) “Justice.”

A Judicial Suggestion.

The subtleties of the legal mind are equal to any emergency, as a general rule, but not always. For instance here is the recommendation of a legal gentleman in Kentucky regarding the disposal of “solgoes”, which appears in the New York Herald of September 15th.

Office of Robert B. Peary, City Judge, The Princeton City Court, Princeton, Ky., September 14, 1901.

To the Editor of the Herald: On receiving the sad news of the death of our beloved President, William McKinley, I wish to say that there should be no delay whatever in getting rid of the loved President, and it is unnecessary to waste any time on him at all.

And after discussing the mode of punishment that should be inflicted upon the assassin, Leon “Solgoes”, should be this: First, to make a box just the length and width of the assassin, and make it out of three-inch well-seasoned oak lumber, put together with 40-D nails, and then saw the box in two with a red hot cross-cut saw, running it at the rate of one stroke per minute, and by the time the box is in two pieces, and if “Solgoes” does not think that hell has broken loose in old Georgia, I will set up the elder and ginger cakes.

ROBERT B. PEARY.

Judge Peary thinks there should be “no delay”, and then calls for an interval of one minute between each stroke of the red hot saw. Evidently his indignation has got the better of his judgment, when he neglects to preserve the unities in his recommendation. It is easy to see that the judge is a mere tyro in torture or he would certainly have suggested something which would tend to lengthen the pleasure of the performance, something lingering—something with boiling oil or melted lead in it for instance.

A Violent Circle.

The Chronicle says that one of the cures for anarchy is “to permit every citizen to sell his labor for the highest price and buy what he wants in the cheapest market.” This much is not denied now even to the idiotic writer of the editorial that contains the above “gem”. If he would think long enough to analyze that sentence he would discover what a foolish statement he has made. Labor power, being an item in the cost of production, is always of less value than the price of any article on sale. Therefore, when the citizen buys what he wants in the cheapest market, he thereby cheapens his labor power, and even the highest price he may be able to sell it for is less than the price he pays for the article of which it forms a portion of the whole.

This being the law operative under the present system, the advice given by the Chronicle is simply the statement of a procedure whose operation has caused the evil which it is intended to eradicate. As the vast majority of CITIZENS are affected adversely by the operation of this law the need is that they be enlightened as to the detriment the system which includes it is responsible for, and by the power of their CITIZENSHIP they will soon cover the entire system under a shower of ballots and drown it forever.

Notice.

On Sunday, October 6th, at 8 p. m., A. M. Simons, editor of the International Socialist Review, will deliver an address at the Socialist Temple, 130 E. Western Ave., on “American Economic Supremacy.” The speaker has made a most exhaustive study of this subject, and has carefully verified his facts beforehand at the cost of an extensive and laborious research. The terror created in European markets, the fact that the cheapest labor in the world is to be obtained in the United States, and the foundation for socialism that is based upon these facts, will be described and demonstrated beyond fear of contradiction. All who wish to know to one of the most instructive lectures ever given in the Socialist Temple will do well to be present on next Sunday.

An Interesting Correspondence.

Eastern State Penitentiary,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Comrade:—I was pleased to see your letter in the last Challenge as indicating what is being done in your beautiful city for socialism. I like your aggressive spirit and active effort to get Mr. Wiltshire's paper circulated among your friends. It is the one grand cause of our time, and there is nothing that can give one greater satisfaction than to feel he is helping it along. I visited your city in 1895. Have a cousin there by name, Charles Stephens, whom I wish might become interested in the new emancipation. I do not know his address, though I remember he was in the meat retail business and was a member of the Universalist Church. He ought to be a comrade.

It was during my summer vacation at Park College, near Kansas City, Mo., that I made the above visit. The next year but one I was taken sick with malaria and compelled to return to my Pennsylvania home. In the fall of '97 I entered Princeton University and four years afterwards graduated with honors in the department of Mental and Moral Philosophy, which secured me a position to teach those branches at Lafayette College, Easton, Pa. After four years successful teaching I was thrust out of my position by the President—a very narrow, sectarian autocrat—in order to give my place to one of his undertrappers who, by the bye, was not able to hold the position but six months before the students, who stood by me, drove him out. How like a scab—though my position resembled more that of a locked-out than of a striker. The whole affair was intended not only to favor a youth with a strong "pull," but also to inflict social and professional ruin upon me out of private spite. Of course I had to appeal to the Trustees, but having no "pull" or "influence" other than my students and colleagues in the faculty, it was useless. All those seductive influences known to the patronage dispenser were set to work to defeat and crush me. But I need not go into details. They are similar to what always has and always will continue to happen as long as one arrogant aristocrat can hold the destiny of a fellow being in his arbitrary hand. Before the fight ended the chief college building burned down, and purchased testimony enabled them to fasten the charge upon me. I was sent here for nine years to prevent me from talking. I have been here for about two and one-half years. I was in an utter state of despair until last winter I got hold of a copy of the Challenge and through it other socialist literature like Comrade Mill's Correspondence School in Social Economy and the International Socialist Review, etc., and since then I have been recovering myself and am growing every day in the new faith. My cell is now transformed into a little workshop for socialism, and now I begin to feel there is something to live and work for after all. These victims of capitalism in this place are a sight and a study. It only deepens the clear truths I read respecting the social causes of crime. I try to turn the attention of the more hopeful ones to socialism as you may see in the Challenge of the 31st last. Besides I am writing a book in the interests of the cause which I hope to have ready for publication by the time I leave here, December 30, 1904. All this takes my thought off from thoughts of revenge upon those who sent me here, and centers it rather upon that system of society which always has and always will produce and uphold just such persons. Am treated first rate here; assist in keeping books in the offices, which affords me various privileges, one of which is to write any letters I wish, paper and stamps furnished. Hence this letter of encouragement and application to one who is active in the field. Keep up the good work, and believe me I will soon be helping more directly, I hope.

Fraternally,
George H. Stephens, A. M.

Minneapolis, September 15th, 1901.
Geo. H. Stephens, A. M.,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Comrade: Your very interesting letter of August 24th I should have answered before, but did not more from lack of time than anything else. I have read it to many of the comrades here, and we all consider it a beautiful testimonial to the cause of socialism, especially your reference to thoughts of revenge being centered on certain individuals. This is indeed the true spirit of socialism, and I trust you will continue to grow in the faith and become a power in the emancipation of mankind. Our hearts are all with you in your present position as a victim of our unjust system of society, and may the good work you are doing among your present associates bring forth large fruitage.

It may be of interest to you to enumerate some of the things we are doing for the cause in this locality.

The excursion that I spoke of in my letter to the Challenge was gotten up by the locals of Minneapolis and St. Paul, and was a delightful affair. It was an ideal summer day, the sun shone radiant and warm, and while in the city the boat was too intimate for comfort, the breeze up the water tempered the atmosphere to refreshing coolness. Everyone was animated by the beauty of the scenery along the Mississippi, and everything seemed to conspire to bring joy and pleasure to all participants. The trip was enjoyed with music by a band of ten pieces; there was music, dancing, a cake-walk, and all kinds of refreshments served. The steamer left Soldiers Home at Minneapolis at 8:30, and at St. Paul was attached a double-decked barge, and then we proceeded down the Kather of Waters to the St. Croix river to Lake St. Croix, stopping at the towns of Hastings and Prescott.

It was a trip thoroughly enjoyed by all, and left a pleasant recollection in the minds of each and every one. We returned to St. Paul at 9:15 p. m., each going their separate ways with brighter hopes and more brotherly feelings on account of the days' recreation.

There were about 600 people on the excursion and it netted the organization about $30.00. The captain of the boat said it was the best conducted excursion he had during the season.

Every year there is a state fair held here, which is largely attended by people of this and adjoining states, and this year we conceived the plan of having a headquarters for the socialists on the grounds.

Comrade Lockwood, our organizer, and his wife were in charge. We had a tent about 50x30, which was fitted up with drawings and socialist mottoes by Comrade Lockwood who is an artist. A large photograph, a very fine instrument was a very attractive feature. An immense sign "Socialist Headquarters" above the door of the tent could be seen for blocks away. A great deal of literature was sold and given away; a number of subscriptions taken for socialist papers. The tent was open day and evening and much interest was shown in the cause.

Crowds after crowds would gather around the tent to listen to the photograph and at frequent intervals Comrade Lockwood, who is an eloquent speaker would give them a short talk on socialism. He also made several dates to lecture this winter in different localities throughout the state. In fact the great good that was done for socialism is incalculable.

But I must tell you a little incident that was really amusing, and also shows the lying propensities of the capitalist press. The sign in front of the headquarters was stretched across two flag poles. On one pole was the socialist flag symbolizing the brotherhood of man the one color that courses through the veins of every human being regardless of nation, color or creed. On the other pole was to fly the American flag in conformity with custom, but the comrade who was to send it out failed to do so, consequently the red flag waved alone. At the news of the assassination of Pres. McKinley one of the comrades suggested to Comrade Lockwood that it might be policy to take it down, inasmuch as the misinformed did not clearly distinguish socialism from anarchy. Lockwood acted on this suggestion and took it down. Not another soul mentioned the matter or made any objection, but lo! and behold the St. Paul Pioneer Press the next morning came out with an account stating that an angry mob visited the tent and demanded that the flag be taken down. The Chicago American on Sunday Sept. 8th under large headlines told how a mob attacked the tent, raised it to the ground, tore the flag in shreds, scattered the literature broadcast, pelted the occupants with mud and stones, and they would have been severely injured but for the intervention of the police who escorted the socialists to the cars and this probably saved their lives. Enclosed find clipping from Mpls Journal giving denial to the incident. The whole affair was a pure fabrication from beginning to end and shows up in clear light the methods pursued by the lying capitalist press.

We have opened up a permanent headquarters at 125 Nicolet, Mpls., with Comrade Lockwood in charge. We have a hall for public meetings and a free reading room and library. The reading room is open all day and is well attended. We expect to have big meetings this winter, classes for study, entertainments etc. and push the grand cause along in every possible way. Our reading room is open all day to the public and many are already taking advantage of the opportunity to learn socialism. We also have street meetings attended by large crowds and the audiences are enthusiastic and eager for the truth.

On account of the assassination of McKinley, the public press have in many instances mixed up socialism with anarchy and we are doing all we can to correct the wrong impression. I mail you a copy of the Mpls. Times containing an article on this subject and I enclose one by Comrade Lockwood. Other comrades are doing the same thing and I think they will do much good. I would kindly ask you to return Lockwood's article as it is the only one I have. I also send you some pamphlets which I think are very good. Also a circular explaining the automobile scheme of the Lockwood's which is being pushed by the Appeal to Reason. $714.00 has already been subscribed.

In conclusion let me say that if there is anything I can do for you I am at your service. Any books or pamphlets you may wish and cannot obtain I will gladly send them to you.

We all extend to you the hand of comradeship and feel deeply your unjust detention, but be of good cheer. Your service to the good of mankind may yet compensate you for your most

THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Translated for the Workers' Call from "Manual Du Co-operative Socialisme."

CHAPTER IV.

Advantages of the Socialist Co-operatives of Consumption.

We have shown in the previous chapters that it is possible to establish socialist co-operatives of consumption, just as it is possible to publish socialist papers, to make socialist parades in the street, to organize socialist unions, the tool does what the workman wishes it to do, and it will be socialist if the worker is socialist.

But is it worth while for the socialist workman to establish co-operatives of consumption?

The answer is plain. We should not neglect any means of propaganda, or of work, but it will be a still plainer duty when we shall have shown the advantages which can be drawn from these associations by the allied workers for the socialist party.

We may distinguish—

1. Personal, immediate advantages those which non-socialist co-operatives also derive from their association.

2. Collective advantages and those of a less immediate character, from which the whole socialist party will profit because they result from the socialist spirit of our Co-operatives. For that matter, the "personal" advantages also react upon the collective life of the socialist party and finally contribute to its progress.

1. PERSONAL ADVANTAGES.

1. For the same expenditure the co-operator consumes objects of better quality than those that can be bought on socialism. He also made several dates to lecture this winter in different localities throughout the state. In fact the great good that was done for socialism is incalculable.

It is impossible to enumerate all the adulterations imposed upon goods, some of them at least are known to every one. The milkman passes the customers of Paris with 500 quarts of milk, but thanks to the clear water which he adds to it, he sells 1,000 or 1,200 to the consumers. The wine merchant baptizes his liquids generously and by way of compensation gives them a little brighter color by the aid of fuchsine. The distiller poisons a whole district with his doctored alcohol, sometimes diluted with water, but sharpened with a dash of vitriol; he thus finds a way to make his poison a little more dangerous. Certain grocers add dust to their ground pepper, flour or plaster to their powdered sugar; one of their fraternity established at Vignron was convicted for selling under the name of tea, certain leaves colored with Prussian blue.

A child is in need of cod liver oil, its parents deprive themselves of necessities in order to procure for it a costly remedy, and the child overpowers its disgust to swallow bravely a drug which should restore it to health. Now according to Louis Bertrand there are in Paris two cod liver oil factories which buy up at a low price all the decayed fish, osseous, clams, etc. Are you surprised after this if the remedy is not always efficacious?

Without citing further examples let us simply say that there appears every month in Amsterdam a publication of an argument; namely, the International Review of Adulterations. Reading it is edifying.

What means have the isolated workman to detect adulterations? He has none. He is helpless before the fraud of the great manufacturer as well as before that of the small merchant who is impelled by the necessities of competition to adulterate his goods. On the contrary, the Co-operative has the necessary resources. In the first place it cuts off one course of adulterations by suppressing the shopkeeper. Moreover, it can have its chemist analyze the product furnished by the vine grower, the chocolate merchant, the importer of coffee or of rice, the manufacturer of wool, cloth, or shoes. It is a customer, difficult and dangerous to deceive; the discovery of a fraud would expose unscrupulous merchants to the loss of an important market and the risk of a disastrous lawsuit. The fear of the chemist which this powerful socialism may consult, is for the less conscientious the beginning of wisdom and fidelity.

Thus the workman will have more healthful foods and more durable clothing if he enters into a Co-operative of consumption.

3. Will he pay a higher price for them? No; on the contrary he will find a pecuniary profit and he will have a second personal advantage of buying these objects cheaper through the Co-operative.

As a matter of fact there is a sensible difference between the price of the same object bought at wholesale or at retail. This difference varies between limits which are difficult to define. From a very partial inquiry made in 1894 the conclusion was drawn that an object sold for 10 francs at the factory was resold at from 12 to 22 francs by the retailer. Taking the lower figure of 10 percent we come to the conclusion that the retailers in France levy upon the consumers a national tax of $1,000,000.00. There is nothing surprising in this. France reckons up more than 100,000 grocers (1 for every 30 families) more than 50,000 bakers (1 for 124 families) and as many butchers, without counting the other retailers who sell objects of necessity. Altogether for every ten families there is a retailer.

To suppress these "parasites" is to lower the cost of living. It is thus that the socialist Co-operatives of consumption have reduced the price of bread in the proportion of 35 to 30.

But it will be said, is not this "suppression of the parasites" to be despised? Certainly it is to be despised if the workman should be the first victim of a social association. But this consideration cannot stop socialism. If the socialists do not hasten to multiply their Co-operatives the little retailer will gain nothing by it. For the capitalists are establishing department stores everywhere, and are offering objects to the consumer at a rate which defies the competition of the small merchants. This is the movement of capitalist concentration, the precursor of collectivization, which is creating everywhere vast bazaars on the ruins of the little shops, such as the Louvre, the Bon Marche, the Printemps, and other stores which have sprung up in the last few years in the principal cities of the provinces. Small trade seems to be doomed. Here in Paris a large bakery with its plant here in the suburbs has opened in the twenty arrondissements forty sales rooms in which it offers bread at the rate of 25 centimes per kilogramme while the small bakers charge 35 centimes.

Twenty-five centimes per kilogramme is a small fraction over two cents a pound. It will be seen that our Chicago prices for bread offer an immense margin of profit—(Translator).

This factory if well managed must destroy the small-scale bread business in Paris. Will the socialists observe with folded arms this transformation of the Parisian bread industry? Will an absurd sentimentalism cause them to leave the advantage of it to certain far-sighted capitalists? In Paris and in the provinces we must make haste, otherwise we shall meet the same obstacles as our comrades of Lege; they did not start their co-operative bakery until after the capitalists had superseded the small retailers by establishing a bread factory. Thus the socialist Co-operative of Lege had much more trouble in developing itself than its sister societies of Brussels, Ghent, and Jolimoit.

The backwardness of the socialists need not encourage the small retailers to think that they can overcome the economic difficulties that await them if the socialists refuse the opportunity the capitalists will embrace it joyfully. It would be far better for the small traders if the socialists anticipate the great financiers: our wish is to transform society in the direction of justice, while the capitalists desire to make it last by rendering the position of capital more lucrative day by day, and the condition of the proletarians day by day harder, and it is into the latter class, whether they like it or not, that the small bourgeois are destined to fall.

To sum up, the suppression of the retailers will effect for the Co-operative as a second advantage a lowering of the cost of living; for equal expenditure a higher standard of living.

It was formerly feared that this lowering of the cost of goods might depress wages by virtue of the "iron law," the inexorability of which is recognized to-day. The want justified this fear.

Sometimes we hear this objection to a Co-operative of consumption:—The worker needs credit when he is sick, or when work fails him, or in case of a strike; now the Co-operative does not give credit.

Every true Co-operative properly organized must sell exclusively for cash. In the first place, this is just, for to sell for cash to some and on credit to others is making the first pay for the credit of the second, it is selling at a higher rate to the first.

In the next place it is necessary, since otherwise a part of the assets of the Co-operative consists in accounts against insolvent people, and it is likely to perish at the first storm, as was the case with the Co-operative of Lourches, which failed because having trusted its members for merchandise to the amount of 5,000 francs, one fine day it was short 1,000 francs in paying its bills.

It is then the absolute duty of a Co-operative to refuse any credit to its members, under penalty of injustice towards them and disaster to itself. But this suppression of credit is far from being a disadvantage; for the workman, debt is the most troublesome of expedients, because it is the most deceptive. If the credit accorded by the retailer may sometimes be of service to the workman, it is necessarily for a very short time, for the small merchant is himself deprived of capital. We know the serious disadvantages of debt: are they compensated by the advantage of credit?

In the case of a long strike, and especially in case of a long lockout, credit is soon exhausted and debt remains a heavy burden on the shoulders of the workman.

In case of a sickness of average length, the use of credit is more manifest. For the workman may take up his work before he has lost the good will of the retailer, and again he may not. In any case the debt remains there and it must be painfully paid.

How about the Co-operative?

In the case of a long lockout: it is to be hoped that a day will come when a powerful federation of socialist Co-operatives will be established, capable of organizing for its members insurance against loss of work. For the moment the Co-operative is powerless.

In case of a prolonged strike it is probable that the striker will find a support among his associates in the socialist Co-operative, since it on principle supports all strikers. It is of course understood that if all the members are simultaneously on a strike the Co-operative will not be able to maintain them unless it had laid aside substantial reserves.

In case of sickness: A well organized Co-operative relieves its sick members. For example the Union of Lille furnishes them bread and groceries during sick weeks, which is far better than the credit allowed by retailers. The Maison du Peuple insures its members against sickness, for an average monthly charge of one cent it sends the doctor and supplies the medicines. If then the Co-operative suppresses credit, on the other hand it suppresses the disadvantages of debt while assuring the necessities of life to its members, at least in certain cases, and during a time which will be longer in proportion as the Co-operative will be more flourishing. The suppression of credit is thus seen to be on the whole not a disadvantage but a benefit.

IV. Finally the instruction provided by the Co-operative is an important service rendered to the co-operator. It affords a place for meetings and for healthful amusement. In winter warmth and light are found there. At all times there are comrades, groups for discussion and books. While the isolated workman goes from the factory to the saloon because he has no other place of resort, the co-operator goes "to the society". Instead of brutalizing himself with alcohol to the profit of the saloon keeper in the first instance and finally of capitalist society, which latter has nothing to fear from an unfortunate overwhelmed by the most economical of slow poisons, he goes to join his comrades, to discuss with them, to listen to a socialist orator, to read the books from the socialist library in short, he enlightens his conscience, develops his intelligence, and makes himself a more ardent and more vigorous soldier of the social revolution.

This fourth advantage is not merely personal: the whole socialist party profits from it, for it is far better for it to be composed of soldiers widely conscious of the role that the proletariat must play in capitalist society to hasten its disappearance.

The other "personal advantages" also profit the socialist party. The workman, who is nourished more healthfully and more abundantly, offers greater resistance in the struggle against the tyranny of capital. It is perhaps for this reason that the Co-operative of consumption have not made wages decline. The socialist party may readily count on this increased energy.

Deprived of credit and freed from debt to the small merchant the co-operator belongs more entirely to the socialist solidarity. Finally, by the very fact that he has already reaped numerous advantages in an institution moulded after socialist principles the co-operator remains faithful to the party. He is conscious of improving his own personal welfare while preparing for the future of all, and this solidarity which links him to future socialist generations completes and fortifies the solidarity which unites him to the combatants of his own time. The socialist party finds in this a guarantee both for the present and for the future.

How to Work for Socialism. This is a question which probably every reader of the Call is interested in, and probably the best answer that can be given is that of Comrade Mills—circulate the party papers.

Now, the remarks that are to follow are intended for you. Do you know that the success of this paper depends upon you? Do you know that the growth of its subscription list depends upon you? It is a fact that if every reader of this would start out today (not tomorrow) and get one subscriber, this paper could be put on a paying basis immediately. If every member of every local in Chicago would get one subscriber now, and they were not asked to do any more for socialism for another month, more would be accomplished for the cause than has been accomplished in the past six months. The trouble is, we are not co-operating enough. A few faithful readers are working continually while the majority think they have done their share for socialism if they attend the business meetings and pass resolutions. Stenographers while learning in the colleges are compelled to write many hundred times a sentence which it would be well for all socialists to take as their motto: "NOW is the time for ALL good men to come to the aid of the party."

Let every local in the city take up as their first business at their next meeting, this proposition: EVERY MEMBER MUST PURCHASE A WORKER'S CALL SUB. CARD, AT ONCE. Then watch results.

Finally, every comrade who reads this should start out at once to get at least one more subscriber—this applies to comrades all over the country. If you do this you won't feel so lonesome.

A Montreal dispatch contains the information that the government of Great Britain has contracted with a steamship company for the transportation of 500 peppers from the Whitechapel islands each week, to be landed at Canadian ports. Perhaps the visit of the Duke of Cornwall and York to his supposed future subjects was for the purpose of cloaking this business venture.

Within two years the Commercial Pacific Co., recently incorporated at Albany, N. Y., will have telegraphic communication from the Pacific to China, Japan, the Philippines and the Hawaiian Islands, if their expectations are realized. By the cable that they propose to lay, the direction of the currents of extracting surplus value from the labor of the inhabitants of the East can be facilitated. Industrial evolution will thus be given a boost and carry with it an educational feature for workingmen's solidarity.

Local Party Progress.

Reports of Organizers of the North, South, West and 4th District Divisions, on past meetings, party press, financial returns, and general agitation for the past week.
A record of growing activity.

NORTH SIDE.

The regular meeting was held at the corner of Oak and Franklin Streets on Wednesday evening. Comrades Sand and Morris spoke. A collection was taken up, and one hundred calls distributed.

Thursday evening as usual the meeting was held at Walton Place and N. Clark St. A good crowd listened to Comrades Morris and Sand. A collection was taken up and one hundred calls were distributed. A discussion lasting until 11:30 p. m. then followed.

The meeting at Racine and Diversey Friday evening, was spoiled by a fire, which took place in the store at the corner where we generally speak.

On Sunday at Wrightwood and Sheffield a very good meeting was held. Comrades Sand, Morris and Zimmerman addressed a very large crowd. A collection was taken up and calls distributed.

The Out Door meetings on the North Side will be continued as long as the weather permits. At the meetings of the Organization Committee this was decided on. Also the purchase of 200 calls of last weeks edition.

So far the 21-23-25 and Karl Marx Club have arranged to hold their meetings on 1st and 3rd Monday Evenings: 2nd and 4th, have not arranged as yet.

Special business will be considered at the next meeting of the Division Organization Committee all members should NOT FAIL TO ATTEND.

WEST SIDE.

The meeting of the West Division Committee held on Sunday, September 23, was a very lively one. All branches reported making arrangements for indoor meetings. The first branch to start its winter agitation is the 23rd which will commence holding regular weekly meetings at its headquarters, Socialist Hall, corner of Milwaukee and Armitage Avenues, Saturday evening October 6. The 13th Ward reports securing a vacant store for headquarters for the winter at Western Avenue and Hirsch Street, other branches have elected committees to look up suitable halls and all indications point to as strong an indoor agitation as was carried on during the summer. All branches are now holding business meetings Fridays but the 9-10 and 19th wards and they in all probability will do so shortly.

Ward organizers will please take notice that just as soon as a hall is secured the undersigned should be notified so that the speakers can be booked and same must be done at least one week in advance. No meetings should be arranged for Fridays as on that day every socialist is expected to attend the business meeting of its Ward branch.

On motion it was decided that each ward organizer should secure the services of a comrade who will be willing to furnish bonds at any time when a speaker is arrested.

Comrade Kennedy reported for the picnic committee which was accepted and instructed to send bills to all such branches as have not yet paid up in full.

The 14th, 15th, and 17th Wards have not yet sent in their list of members and are therefore urged to get them in as soon as possible. The Division Organizer wishes to start up the roster of the South Division Organization Committee met on Monday evening and decided to dispense with the services of a paid organizer. Reports of organizers showed satisfactory results throughout the Division and much effective agitation is being carried on.

It is intended to keep the present headquarters and use it as a base of operations for propaganda work during the winter, the work to be divided amongst the various sub-committees.

On next Saturday evening at 8 P. M. Mrs. C. H. Kerr will give the address in the Headquarters. On Sunday at 8 P. M. Comrade Knox will be the speaker of the evening.

THE EARTH--THE HOME OF MAN

Extracts From Lecture Delivered Before the Class of Social Economy at Schiller Hall, Thursday October 10th by Mrs. May Wood Simons.

What is meant by a science or by a scientific method? Probably most of us would be unable to give a definite answer to this question although we are constantly speaking of a scientific treatise, of the science of society or of scientific socialism.

The history of the growth of science is the history of the beginning and growth of accurate knowledge. The savage saw many things around him; some of them he observed accurately; but they remained for the most part isolated objects of images in his mind. He did not to any extent compare things, seek the cause of divergent events or arrange his simple knowledge. It was an unclassified, rather chaotic accumulation of facts.

Slowly the human mind began to compare one thing with another, to see differences and to draw conclusions as to cause and effect. It began to formulate statements and to put certain objects and events into the same class—things became animate and inanimate or with life and without life, or as we say, organic and inorganic. Again those objects that had life and moved about were called animals and the stationary life was spoken of as plant life.

The accuracy of any science has depended upon the number and accuracy of the facts gathered and the correctness of the reasoning used. From time to time statements regarded as scientific have had to give way before others that have been the result of wider and better observations. I know of no better short definition of a science than that given by Titchener of Cornell University. "Science is knowledge that has been arranged and classified according to certain rules."

We can have knowledge only of those things that come within reach of some one of our senses, hence science is limited to knowledge of material things, their changes and nature. The whole body of science when correlated constitutes philosophy in the what I believe to be the true sense of that term.

A few of the sciences give us knowledge particularly of the earth as the dwelling place of man, of its growth, development or evolution.

But nearer to us than Astronomy and giving us more definite knowledge of the earth itself, comes the science of geology, the study of the formation of the earth's surface.

As the earth began to form from its nebular condition its surface was no doubt one vast expanse of water. Now the old theory concerning the formation of the land, which seems most absurd to us, was that this warm sea held all the elements that go to make up the land in solution and that these substances settled themselves into continents. This theory was advocated by Werner and prevailed at the beginning of the last century. Werner could not however by this theory account for the fire rocks or as they are called, igneous rocks. Where did they come from? Hutton was the first to answer this question.

He pointed out that as a thin crust was formed over the earth's surface, the heated substance below some times burst through, forming volcanic islands in the expanse of water that as the earth cooled further it shrunk and wrinkled, these wrinkles forming mountain chains rising often miles above the sea. These were worn down by the sea and the soil, deposited in layers below the water, was afterwards raised above the water by upheavals of the earth, thus forming what are called stratified rocks. He showed that this same process is going on now, that this process is progressing as fast today as it probably ever did.

For example the coast of Patagonia is slowly rising while Greenland shores are sinking.

When man first began to find bones in the rocks and see that they did not belong to any animal now existing, at was believed for a long time that through great deluges all the animals were swept away at different times.

But the discovery of the fossil remains of the Cataclysmic theory. The past century has completely destroyed this theory. It has shown that nothing appears or disappears in this sudden fashion. As certain species of animals are today gradually disappearing, so they have lived through all time. The same is true of the plants.

Thus since the beginning of that principle, the discovery of what marks the 19th century and that has revolutionized all thought, the theory of evolution. This theory holds that all things grew out of earlier conditions and have a cause, that whether it be of animals and plants or society, effect follows cause.

One form of society has grown out of another as unerringly as night follows the day and the roots of its form were determined by that earlier stage. So today the Socialist holds that capitalist society contains in itself the conditions that must produce a socialist state. That hence socialism is no utopian scheme to be fitted on to society but it is the next step in its evolution.

"CLASS HATRED"

An Inquiry Into the Capitalist Position on "Classes"

STRANGE CONTRADICTIONS.

Existence of Economic Classes as Unwelcome Truth to the Upholders of Capitalism.

Socialists are accused of stirring up class hatred. Let us examine this charge and see whether it is an objection to socialism or the reverse.

In almost every capitalist speech that is delivered before workingmen it is triumphantly claimed as a peculiar advantage that "there are no classes in this country." Very well; if it is a good thing for a country to be without classes, then the socialists are right in their dislike of classes and in making the abolition of classes the foundation stone of socialism. So far the socialists and the holiday orators of capitalism are in perfect accord. Both preach the no-class doctrine; both disapprove of the existence of classes; they vie with each other in their hatred of classes, and must equally bear the praise or censure merited by such teachings.

AN ERA OF MURDER

Minister Wants It Brought About Through "Moral Sentiment"

AS A "CURE" FOR ANARCHY

How Religion Debauched by Capitalism Becomes Involved in Its Contradictions.

"I hope that the moral sentiment of the country will become so strong, that some of these days when a man declares himself to be an anarchist, he will be shot on the spot."

Now from whence do you think, reader, the above aspiration emanated? If you had been asleep, say for the last five weeks or thereabouts, it might perhaps be difficult to guess. But if on the other hand you had been an observer of current events and sayings, you would venture the suggestion that it came from some one occupying a pulpit.

And you would be right. It is an extract from a speech delivered by the Rev. Dr. J. R. Bigham at a regular weekly meeting of the Methodist ministers of Atlanta, Ga., when the topic "Anarchy: its causes and cure; from a Christian Standpoint," came up for discussion.

WAR AND BUSINESS

Peace in Europe Declared Adverse to American Interests.

LESSENS DEMAND FOR GOODS

Gratifying From a "Humanitarian" But Unsatisfactory From a Capitalist Standpoint.

Speaking of the "Business Situation," The Economist of Chicago, tells of some weak points in the industrial affairs of the United States, and instances a few concerns that are falling off in dividends. Looking into the cause for this state of affairs leads it to a discussion of the situation in Europe. Germany is said to be going through a period similar to that here experienced from 1893 to 1897. Russia, having gone far beyond the limits of its own capital, is again and again calling upon the other nations to assist it "in its noble fight for a greater commerce and a higher civilization." The Czar and the Kaiser have agreed on peace between their armies so that war on their wage-slaves parts may go on against the war which America is carrying on against them with its wage-slaves. On this point the Economist says: "But gratifying as it will be from the humanitarian standpoint, the peace of Europe would not necessarily imply large purchases of American commodities. Nor is there any promise in the economic conditions of the countries across the Atlantic. On the contrary, there is every evidence that for a time the purchases of everything except our agricultural products will be moderate. This is cut off one of the sources of demand on which the formation of industrial concerns, and the revival of industrial activity in the United States has been based. Here we have a cold-blooded statement of the fact that peace in Europe from a humanitarian standpoint may be gratifying, but that from the standpoint of the capitalist of America it is bad for business. War means business for American capitalists, and business means war for the American producers.

The Economist thinks that in general affairs are in an admirable condition, and there are of no importance, and it shall prove later on that they are evidence of decay underneath in our industrial system, which, in the least, no ordinary eye can now discern."

The socialist may not have an extraordinary eye, but from the workingman's standpoint the industrial system is anything but "admirable," and to him the decay of the old system is measured by the increase in the forces of socialism. Whether or not the "spots" discovered above are due to the activity of the socialists abroad (which is no doubt the fact, owing to the internationality of the capitalist system), would not be made known, but if such be the case there is ample cause for the "inconspicuous" implied prophecy which shall be proven "later on." THE SAME OLD SONG.

THE SAME OLD SONG.

but that new laws can. If this hope is held up before them, if they are not dissuaded, as they are continually in the capitalist press, from organizing political action and obtaining legislation of material benefit to themselves, the workingmen will find in the ballot a cure and peaceful cure, not for all evils, but for all economic evils.

It is sometimes claimed that socialists are making slow progress with their class hatred doctrine. However, that may be, they are making progress, and are the only ones who are making any progress at all toward removing the irreconcilable antagonisms inherent in every form of exploitative or class-ridden society. Socialist Hanger-on.

The Socialist Hanger-on will hold its 10th anniversary concert and ball Sunday Oct. 21, at Grand's Hall, 121 N. Clark St. One half of the proceeds of the sale of tickets sold by party members will go to the Workers' Call and one half to the speakers' defense fund. Branches and individual members should take steps immediately to obtain a supply of tickets, which sell for 10c. Tickets may be had at this office.

Enter "The Comrade."

After two weeks of delay the "Comrade," a new Socialist monthly magazine published in New York has at length made its appearance. It was worth waiting for. The magazine is certainly the handsomest Socialist publication that we have yet seen, the cover designed by the well known Socialist artist, Walter Crane, being especially admirable. A large number of the best known socialist writers in the country have contributed to the first number, which is illustrated with various sketches, drawings and cartoons, of much artistic merit. The contents will be found unusually entertaining and instructive, comprising mainly of short stories, verses, reminiscences, etc., all of a high literary order. The editorial explains the mission and purpose of the paper. It will not deal with economics, but will endeavor to mirror socialist thought as it finds expression in art and literature to quote the words of the writer.

Certainly the initial issue of the Comrade gives good promise of future success for the venture. It cannot be said exactly to "fill a long felt want" as the popular phrase has it. "The Comrade" has entered the field just as the Socialist movement was beginning to develop the necessity for such a journal, and we venture to predict that in the field with broad sympathy and rapidly in the future. We have taken the liberty of reproducing from the columns several epigrammatic paragraphs which may be found in another part of the paper under the title of "Come from the Comrade."

It is reported that the Carnegie Co. of Homestead will enlarge its plant plant to double the original size, the new plant having given the Carnegie assurance that it will not "work" it. It is not stated whether or not the Carnegie Co. will be allowed to operate the plant, which it seems to be an important auxiliary in its arms plant.

Mark Hanna's Speech.

Mark Hanna has again topped us recently in the cartoon department of Hearst's Chicago American, disguised as John Bull, lamenting the failure of Lipton to capture the American cup. By and bye we expect to see "Tody" reproduced in the pages, and would suggest that if Hanna is to personate John Bull, the President might appear as Mischewer or some other British "hero" of a similar type.

PHONE KANSOLPH 22.

Sam Gompers has been requested to prepare a paper setting forth the legal position of labor, and forward it to President Roosevelt. The laborer who really understands what he wants has no need of Gompers as a transmitter. He can prepare his own paper. And he does it too on election day by placing a cross on the ballot where the name Socialist Party appears. Neither is he indebted to Gompers for the assistance.

It would seem that the apex of hypocrisy has been reached when the capitalist press tries to disparage the Chicago anarchists by insinuating that they are seeking to make profit out of the curiosity displayed by the public to secure the first copies of "Free Society" issued after the release of the editor. It might be imagined that they considered that the only legitimate exploitation of the murder of William McKinley was especially reserved for the capitalist press with the false extra, and the ghoulish speculators of Wall street.

It is now reported that the "Chicagoan," edited by Comrade Whitehead, has been excluded from the mails as second class matter. If we know anything of Whitehead, there is going to be the inevitable sort of a fuss over the exclusion, which will ultimately defeat its own object, and advertise the Socialist cause to a very considerable extent. In the meantime those fatuous individuals who habitually refer to the post office as a "socialist institution" have been provided with material for reflection.

A Boston organization calling itself the "Social Alliance" is getting up a petition to the Governor of the State of New York asking that Coughlin be imprisoned for life instead of going to the electric chair. What we most wonder at is that the capitalist press so far has not seized the opportunity to confound this organization with the Socialist Party. It is an old trick of theirs to write "Social" for "Socialist" when they wish to confuse the working class. Besides as a general rule Socialists are opposed to capital punishment though it is by no means an essential article of faith with them.

Chicago is no longer to be the "Mecca" of tramps. The police stations are to be closed during the coming winter to these homeless wanderers and the "charity" commissioners are represented as being greatly pleased thereto. We venture to predict that this move will show results in a goodly increase of dead men during the cold weather, which will in turn generate a demand for more police protection, so that the capitalist wiseacre will discover that the "burden on the community" will be about the same, no matter how they attempt to minimize it. The "tramp problem" is just as broad as it is deep, to the capitalism which creates but can never solve it. They can merely suppress it in one form, to reappear in another, the babe can be transformed into a criminal, but still the result is a "problem" with which capitalism is incompetent to deal.

In the first of the series of sermons on "socialism" Archbishop Corrigan of New York declared that the idea that "all men are born equal" is "fabulous." On the other hand Archbishop Liedtke of St. Paul, in his article on "Personal Liberty and Labor Strikes," in the current North American Review, explicitly admits the truth of what his countryman in New York denies, and adds further that "by nature no man is endowed with authority over his fellows" so that we have very frequently seen exploited in Anarchist literature, and so on, and so forth, the two prelates will not hold a straight lever, this incident, for the reason that there is no real disagreement between them. Both are engaged in holding up the present system of capitalist exploitation, and even if they contradict each other in the process, it is fairly certain that none except the socialists will exhibit any inclination to point out the discrepancy.

The editor of the Missionary Review and the superintendent of the Moody Bible Institute addressing the Christian Convention which opened in this city last week engaged in the usual pastime of depicting the evils of the present day. The murder of McKinley and the horror of life in South Africa were the principal events that evoked their pessimism. The Bible Institute man's belief in the growth of evil seemed to rest upon the idea that three years ago the "world would have been up" and stopped the war in South Africa in the interests of humanity. Just upon what grounds he based this assertion does not very clearly appear. But it has certainly as much in its favor as the declaration of the Missionary Herald man that the assassination of President McKinley "portends either a great revival or the second coming of the Lord." At any rate it is fairly clear that before the great social problems of the age, the representatives of orthodox Christianity stand in hopeless impotence.

MAGIC POTENCY OF BUTTONS.

At last something is to be done for the Boers, over and above the sum of $12.48 which was sent to them last year by America's lovers of liberty. "Public opinion" is to be aroused, and the American Transvaal League has stirred up its hoards for that purpose. It is about to circulate buttons upon which the stars and stripes are stamped in red, white and blue, with the motto, "Make England fight fair" inscribed. There is nothing particularly ridiculous in this idea any more than most others which have been suggested and tried. There is quite as much reason to believe that capitalist expansion can be checked by wearing buttons, as by passing resolutions of sympathy or "scoring" Great Britain in public speeches. If this method is found successful in evincing the British from South Africa, the popular expression "don't care a button" will also have received notice to quit.

But the Transvaal League is not alone in its recognition of the potency of the button in dealing with social and economic phenomena. If wearing a button will have any effect upon checking British aggression, might it not also be employed in "stamping out anarchy" (undoubtedly. And it seems the Rev. M. S. Johnson of the First Presbyterian Church of Austin has already caught on to the idea. He is getting out his particular button for that purpose. It also contains the stars and stripes in red, white and blue, with the words, "Government and Religion" inscribed. It is stated that the reverend gentleman expects everybody "not in sympathy with anarchy to wear one of his buttons, and of course if his expectations are realized, it will be as easy job to spot the buttonless man and "stamp him out" promptly as an anarchist. The prospects of the clerical mind are really too vast for contemplation.

BUSINESS PHILANTHROPEY.

Last week a good woman who was deserted by her husband, gave birth to four children in this city. The unusual event of course attracted considerable attention, and naturally the poverty of the mother also became obvious at once. One of the daily papers, seeing business, immediately started a fund for the relief of the mother and each poured in at once to such an extent, that the matter was liberally exploited in the columns of the same paper, by the "clever" writers employed upon its staff, who outdid themselves in sentimental rhetoric about the charitable instincts which prompted the public to rush to the rescue. Without questioning the latter statement, it might properly be asked, why this particular case was selected by the paper in question. Had this woman not given birth to quadruplets, would her poverty have attracted any attention whatever? Or suppose it had been known, would the paper have called attention to her necessities?

Here is something which did actually happen during the time that the money was pouring in upon the mother of the quadruplets. A woman stole several small articles from a department store and was arrested in consequence. In court she told the judge of her struggle to keep her family of two little daughters from starvation. She stated that hunger drove her to steal, and presented in the future to steal quietly rather than to do so again. The court ruled that she be held to the grand jury, but it is not on record that any of the daily papers have started a fund on her account. While the readiness of the "public" to relieve distress may be admitted, it seems that the case must present some unusual features sufficient to induce the press to call attention to the matter or in other words charity of this kind must have a "business" basis.

THE "PUBLIC" IN THE CAPITALIST PRESS.

In gathering the material for a Socialist publication, the current events of the day and their interpretation from a socialist point of view, naturally obtrude themselves as the subjects most likely to attract the attention of non-socialist readers. After a while it becomes, from force of habit, easier and more agreeable to lay bare the inner workings of some event which the capitalist press covers with a cloak of bombast and sham. Socialism being primarily a protest against false pretenses, it is not strange that a very large portion of the columns of its press should be devoted to this purpose. The Workers' Call has dealt very liberally with such subjects—in fact perhaps too liberally. Not in the sense that it has been too harsh in uncovering and exposing the real nature of these questions, and forcing disagreeable truths as conclusions from them, but that too much indulgence in this sort of criticism may lead to some extent to the ignoring of the equally important truth that socialism has a positive and constructive aspect.

It may very well be that the "Call" has not recently given this side of the subject the attention it deserves, and if this is admitted, we would take leave to remark that the opening paragraph of this editorial does not wholly contain the reasons for such omission. The positive side of Socialism cannot be very well explained except in the form of what is known as a "theoretical article." A general protest against theoretical articles, from our subscribers has been to some extent responsible for their rare appearance.

Theoretical articles contain much of what is termed "dry" reading. They are often difficult to understand especially to the non-socialist reader. But it is nevertheless a fact that unless the aforesaid reader is willing to study and consider the positive side of socialism, which must necessarily assume a more or less theoretical form, it will be very difficult for him to comprehend the basis of socialist thought. The critical articles will impress him with the idea that the editor and other socialist writers are merely pessimistic individuals who find their amusement in running a snail at every single institution that society (capitalism) holds sacred; that like the Irishman in the riot at Donnybrook fair, we are proceeding upon the principle of "wherever you see a head, hit it."

Now the Workers' Call is essentially a propagandist paper. Neither the editor nor those who employ him wish to see a single tame cryalated in which the non-socialist reader cannot find a plain statement of what Socialists want and how they intend to get it. If there has been any such, we can only say that the omission has escaped our notice.

To make sure that this defect shall not be permitted to recur, we give notice that in the future every issue of the Workers' Call shall contain at least one theoretical article setting forth in the clearest and most definite language possible, the aims and object of the Socialist Movement, and the reasons for its existence. Such article will henceforward be found upon the third or fourth page of the paper under the heading "SOCIALIST PARTY PLATFORM."

We recommend the careful perusal of this article to our non-socialist readers, fully confident that it will satisfy their inquiries. Afterwards we shall construct other articles commenting upon it, as occasion demands.

"STARTLING DISCLOSURES."

So the Grand Jury has at last made its final report, and the rottenness of capitalist municipal politics is again being trumpeted forth as if it were the most startling and unexpected condition of affairs that could possibly be imagined. The "public" had no feeling whatever of the real facts. They supposed in their innocence that the police force was an incorruptible bulwark of law and order, that the license department and the revenue collected therefrom was conducted with "strict integrity," that the oil inspector was not a thief, and that collusion between the bailiffs and jurors of Cook county, was undreamed of. The unsuspecting "public" has been rudely awakened. The lid has been lifted from the mud-slip pot and the rotting stench almost pervades the stupor and disgusted public, who of course opposed the performance of drabbing the beast to focus forth. Instead of the filthy beast which has so rudely assailed their nostrils.

This "public" is the same phantom whose "opinion" against strikers is so widely cited in the capitalist press as a deciding factor on the merits of conflicts between brother capital and brother labor. It is a creation of that press alone. Its very existence is as completely fabulous as the horrid attitude which is attributed to it. Unless one is prepared to say that this public is wholly composed of the imbeciles and idiots of society alone, it would be impossible to find any reality corresponding to it elsewhere.

Is there any person of average intelligence who has lived in this city even for one year who is unaware of the connection between the police force and what is known as the "criminal" class? Any one who does not know that tribute is levied upon the disorderly houses and their unfortunate inmates? Why this unsavory connection has been exploited for years in the very press which now fabricates a "public" standing in an attitude of surprise and horror regarding it. Less than six months ago these very papers were filling their columns with accounts of political tribute being levied upon prostitutes to facilitate the election of the present mayor, the police force being used as collectors. Any man who really wishes to know can easily satisfy himself as to the existence of this form of blackmail by merely interrogating a number of the unfortunate women who have been thus exploited. If he watches a little more closely he can without much trouble get secular demonstration of a fact which is in reality such a matter of common knowledge that he who would deny or even doubt it in private conversation, is laughed at as a simpleton.

As for Oil Inspector Burke, the most surprising fact is not that he was suspected of fraudulent embezzlement, but that he has been indicted upon that charge. It will be still more surprising if he is convicted, and most surprising of all if he is punished. What sort of man is it that has not known for years that this man received political positions not for competency, but for political services rendered? Who is it that does not know that he has done just what he was expected to do? That the position was actually given him because it furnished the best opportunities for "grafting," and that it was intended he should use it. The adult inhabitant of Chicago who does not know these things is either deaf or blind or idiotic. They have never been kept secret; on the contrary they have been proclaimed loudly thousands of times.

Are the disclosures of Balliff Lynch ancient jury bribing a cause for astonishment? In the case of Thomas Carbine yet forgotten? Has all remembrance of the night of Dan Coughlin faded away? Does nobody recall the connection of the Illinois Central Railway with that little episode? It may be that the modus operandi of the bribery is of some interest, but the bare fact of systematic jury bribing is about as much of a secret as the death of Queen Anne, or that Holland is now a possession of the Dutch.

The pretence that these things come as "surprises" to the public is necessary to the preservation of the capitalist system. It must foster the delusion of the possibility of their permanent suppression, upon pain of being itself placed on trial. Let the idea once get abroad that this rottenness and putridity is inherent in the system itself and the answer of the public will express itself in socialist votes. And it is this danger that the press really tries to guard against, by inventing a horrid public as spectator of fraud that can no longer be concealed. The facts are all the other way. Nobody is surprised. The periodical recurrence of these so-called exposures has long ago taken them out of the sphere of the unexpected. Just at present the public, or at least the majority of the public, the working class, regard them with apathy and indifference. And when they at length take action in the matter they will strike at the system which produces not only the petty municipal thieves, but also their larger prototypes who despoil the paupers under the mask of rent, interest and profit.

The mortality amongst the Boer children in the British camps is said to be alarming, which shows that these things are quite as unsavory as the workings of the districts of our industrial centers, except that in the latter localities "society" exhibits no particular alarm over the waste of life.

If you wish to test the intelligence of your neighbor try him with a few copies of this paper.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE.

"Russia," says the Chicago American of October 3rd, "handles labor strikes somewhat differently than does the United States." The item then goes on to state that Russian workmen, having struck for an increase of wages at Nieschwang (a Chinese seaport lately seized by Russia) the administrator declared that all who struck work should be arrested and punished as rebels. This of course is outrageous and could never happen in the United States. But—

The Chicago American of October 4th, that is the next day's issue, contains a telegram from Tampa, Florida, (which we believe is in the United States) asserting that hundreds of striking cigar makers in that city have been arrested and offered the alternative of thirty days in jail, or of going to work in the factories. Most of them have gone to jail. "Public Sentiment" says the dispatch "is with any method no matter how violent to make the strikers work, and save the cigar trade here." Truly the difference between America and Russia is startling.

At the last meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor a proposition to amend the constitution of that body so as to allow it to reward the "friends" and punish the "enemies" of organized labor in the ranks of the capitalist parties, was brought up and turned down. It was defended by three avowed Democrats, and opposed by all the others who spoke on the question, yet the capitalist press pretended to see in this a defeat for the socialists. Great heads!

"Labor is scarce." So says the capitalist prosperity howler, but just the same the Scranton, Pa. Traction workers on strike, were easily replaced by imported men. But "labor is scarce."

President Roosevelt is endeavoring himself to the respectable white citizens of the South who are generally prominent in negro lynching and similar functions. He is doing all in his power to assist in disfranchising the colored workmen in the Southern States. The "respectable" North and South are getting together—let the working class do likewise.

Bobby Burke the Democratic "boss," has been indicted for embezzling the funds of the city which came to him as oil inspector. Surely the Grand Jury cannot have been informed of the purpose of the office.

And Mayor Harrison is indignant at the partiality of the Grand Jury and hints that if the Republican office holders in the County Building were investigated they would also be liable to indictment, which is not at all improbable.

When the Democratic and Republican politicians thus accuse each other of roguery and embezzlement their word may be accepted without question. Such observations are about the only ones used in their business which contain any truth whatever. When the Socialist party acquires power it will deal impartially with the thieves in both sections of the capitalist parties.

His Honor Carter Harrison, Mayor of Chicago has refused to permit Emma Goldman to hold public meetings in the city. Emma says she will lecture in private and that many "well to do" people have already invited her to speak in their parlors. Most likely these people are amongst the number who welcomed Prince Kropotkin to Chicago and not only attended his lectures but defrayed the expense of a banquet in his honor, and it is said that the Mayor himself was rather more than an interested spectator in the latter proceeding. Indeed if we mistake not it is claimed that he contributed liberally to the banquet fund. Now if Miss Goldman could only attach the title of Princess to her name, it might be possible to induce the Mayor to reconsider his decision. He could hardly object to her ideas seeing that they are practically identical with those held by Kropotkin.

It is of course a pretty conceit that the "still small voice" of conscience was mainly responsible for the voluntary return of jury briber Lynch to Chicago, in order to surrender himself into the hands of outraged justice. It is possible of course, though hardly probable. Now if the "still small voice" can only induce the respectable capitalist crooks who employed Lynch for this purpose, to follow his example in this respect, the above theory would certainly take on a stranger appearance of probability. Modern "business methods" however which in reality are mostly based upon the ability to cheat without detection, are not likely to produce a "conscience" inconvenient to its possessor.

Gems from "The Comrade."

NOTES BY THE WAYSIDE.

THE PASSING OF CAPITALISM by Isador Ladoff. 100 p. Paper 5c. Cloth 60c. Debs Publishing Co. Terre Haute, Ind.

With the limited time at our disposal, it is impossible to give this work the notice that it deserves. In the one hundred and sixty pages of reading matter which it contains, the author deals with no less than thirty five different theories connected with the subject he has chosen, which appear in as many different chapters. As the structure of the work is by no means coherent, a review, to be at all sufficient would entail a separate treatment of each chapter which, as we said before is a task for which the time at our disposal is altogether insufficient. However as Comrade Ladoff has condensed an extremely large amount of information in each chapter a careful perusal of the work will certainly repay every student of social problems, and whether the reader agree with every conclusion drawn or not, it will be impossible to deny that the author is not only possessed of a wide scope of economic and sociologic information, but also entirely capable of applying it in an equally comprehensive manner. While the author is certainly not in accord with what may be termed in the main the policy of the party at present, there is little reason for doubting that most of the dissentient views which he holds and voices with positive conviction, are still sound. As firm believer in "immediate demands" and the immense field opened for socialist activity in municipal affairs, his presentation of this subject is certainly entitled to careful consideration, and it will hardly be maintained by any reasonable party member that the last word has been spoken on this matter. The author advocates of the "farmer's plank" is we think not so defensive, though it is also true that the relation of Socialism to the agricultural proletariat is not yet clearly defined, and much remains yet to be done in the matter of investigation, collection of data and material, before even a permanent generalization of the Socialist position on this subject can be expected.

In his criticism of the "narrow dogmatic socialism" to whom "Capital" (though he understand it not) seems an inspired book, the author is unsparring, though in our opinion, rather exaggerated both as to the numbers and importance of the aforesaid individual. Comrade Ladoff also displays a horror of formulas, or expressions commonly used by socialists, that through frequent repetition have become such. For instance, he would substitute for the expression "class conscious" the phrase "race conscious," which hardly seems to be a satisfactory amendment, and which savors of some confusion between the means through which social evolution operates, and the end to be attained, via the Co-operative commonwealth. But it is undeniable that he who runs a tilt against expressions which have a tendency to become mere formulas, largely divested of their real content, and repeated parrot like on every occasion, is performing a valuable service. But nevertheless we prefer "class conscious" to "race conscious" as being more correct, more expressive, and more applicable to the operation of a movement whose end is not yet consummated. The era of "race consciousness" is not yet here. It will be possible only when through "class consciousness" the negation of "class" is brought about. But perhaps in writing on a subject like the "Passing of Capitalism," it is difficult to avoid getting ahead of social evolution now and then.

These criticisms, the result of an admittedly hasty perusal, must however, be taken for what they are worth. We do say though that the reader who invests in a copy of this book, will not only find a veritable mine of information on social and economic subjects, but will also be brought face to face with many interesting questions which are yet debatable and to which attention must be given in the immediate future. Whatever may be thought of the author's position on these matters, it is certain that he has made an interesting contribution to the literature of the Socialist movement.

Very Much Alive.

The 12th Ward Branch held a most successful entertainment in its Hall on Saturday, October 5th, at 5 P. M.

The speakers of the evening were Comrade Mrs. Hunt and Comrade Keusch. Coffee and cake were served and a collection amounting to $4 taken. Dancing, singing and athletic feats were indulged in until the small hours of the morning, all of which goes to show that the 12th Ward Branch is very much alive, all suppositions to the contrary notwithstanding.

A SINDELAR, Secy.

The attempt to run a machine gun on an automobile carriage from Highland Park to Washington, D. C. having failed, the necessary conclusion is that this method of transportation will not be used, when artillery is required to overcome strikers in the interests of capitalist law and order.

It is now reported that J. P. Morgan is negotiating for the possession of the rich iron beds of northern Sweden. The Swedish government is expected to balk this scheme by taking possession of the mines and thus excluding foreign capitalists. Comrade Morgan is doing good work in forcing towards socialism those who attempt to keep their possessions out of the clutches of the combination which he represents.

The Reason Why and Why Not.

Plain Words to Trades Unionists and Other Wage Workers. Leaflet Issued by Section, Oakland, Cal., Socialist Party. Read Through and Reflect.

You are wage-workers. I understand. You seem to be what we would call average wage-workers. Oh, you are mechanics, are you? But you are wage-workers nevertheless, and as much dependent on the employing class as the so-called common laborers to whom is paid a dollar a day for shoveling dirt. It is not your skill, nor the size of your wages, but your dependence on another class for your chance to earn a living that I would have you keep in mind.

Let us describe your life to you. No, I am not a fortune-teller, nor will what I tell you be a matter of guesswork. I am a middle-aged man who, beginning in his seventh year, has worked with you and your class, in a series of callings, for the larger share of his life, and you know that experience is the best of teachers.

To begin with, You get up early in the morning, wash your face at a common washing place, wipe yourself on a towel used by the whole family, eat your breakfast in a hurry, go away to work, follow all day the direction of some one else, come home at night tired and dirty, eat your supper, and after awhile go to bed. You will repeat this monotonous round for as many days in the year as some man or firm finds it profitable to employ you. You will average to be out of work from one to four months in a year, and will spend your job time looking for another master.

At your work you are in constant danger. The truth of this is proven by the fact that an average of over 50,000 people per year are killed or wounded in the United States alone. This does not include the vast number whose health is destroyed by the nature of their callings and who die on the average at a very early age. Had as many soldiers been killed and wounded in the Spanish-American war as met a similar fate while at work during the same time, it would have been classed as one of the great wars of history, but the killing or wounding of the workers hardly excites comment.

You work so hard, and for so many hours that you must be a person of great physical vigor if you have any inclination to study. The brain does not work well when the body is tired. Hence I find that the reading of the working class is mostly confined to the newspaper and light fiction, while vast numbers never read at all. This state of affairs leaves your class in a mental condition that puts it at a decided disadvantage in any contest for its rights which it has with the employing class.

As for your home, My daily calling takes me into the homes of the workers, the well-to-do, and the rich. The homes of the workers seem pitiful when contrasted with the others. The delicacies, refinements and elegant bits of cushion in the homes of the so-called better classes, are almost unknown in the homes of the workers. The capacious rooms, the separate sleeping room for each adult, with the wash-bowl, pit her, towel and individual toilet articles, together with a score of things that the doing without would be considered a positive hardship by the well-to-do, are almost unknown in the homes of the workers. Your rooms are stuffy and few in number, your furniture is poor. In the cities the houses you live in are crowded together, and you are lucky if not more than two families live in the same house. The street with its dangers is the playground of your children. In multitudes of your homes there is an insufficiency of sunshine and pure air.

The difference between your average daily diet and that of the well-to-do classes is discovered by comparing the supplies found in the stores and markets of the working class districts, with those found in places patronized largely by the rich—by comparing the food found on the tables of hotels and restaurants where the working class eat, with that found in the reports of the rich. Inferiority and adulteration is the hall mark of the former, superiority and purity of the latter. The rich get what they want in the way of food because they have the money to pay for it. You take what you can get because you lack the money to buy better.

Nowhere is the contrast between the workers and the wealthy more marked than by the differences in their clothing. The former are the patrons of the second-hand and cheap ready-made clothing establishments—the latter are the patrons of the fashionable tailors and dressmakers. The cast-off clothes of the wealthy are better than the best worn by the average worker. Working girls and women, following the natural instincts of their sex by trying to look smart, attempt to imitate their richly dressed sisters, but limited by their purse, deck themselves in clothing of poor material, and too often of the veriest shoddy. Every day we see women and girls wearing hats that cost more than the entire rest of the average working woman. The rich woman's handkerchief, a tiny film of lace, often costs as much or more than the best dress of her working sister, while the handkerchief was produced at the cost, perhaps, of the eyesight of some poor French or Belgian girl working for starvation wages. While it is true that costly millinery and clothing of rich women give work to poor girls, the latter are but poorly paid for the severe strain upon their life energy.

Now I come to your recreation. This is a Sunday morning in August. I picked up the morning paper and glanced over two full pages in five printing of the names of "society" people strolling at the hotels of the fashionable summer resorts in the mountains, at the springs, or by the seaside, together with a list of those who have departed for Europe. Every Sunday for the past three months I have seen a similar list of names, but my wage-working friends, I have not seen your names in that list, nor the names of your wives or sons and daughters. You and yours do not appear to take a summer vacation. None of your class seem to frequent summer resorts except as servants. To find you and your sons during these hot months, I must go where you are at work. I shall find your wives bending over the washbasin or iron-board; your daughters I will find in shops, stores, factories, canneries, laundries. How is it, don't you care for rest and recreation? Don't you think your wives and daughters would enjoy a rest, and an outing as well as society women, and don't they deserve it quite as much? Have you never thought of these things? Or do you think it your natural fate to dig and delve, to sweat and sacrifice with never a rest until Gabriel toots his horn?

I want to call your attention to the vast number of children of school age in the United States—a number running into the millions, who are not in school. I saw a plausible argument lately, intended to prove that the reason there are 50,000 children out of school in San Francisco is not because of any neglect by organized authority. The argument was somewhat as follows: The school age is between 5 and 17, but children are not admitted to school until 6, which would account for several thousand; and that the average child quits school at 14, and goes to work, which would account for several thousand more (in this case 13,000) between 14 and 17 who are at work. However, the main point of interest to you in the argument was covered up, viz: that the children between the age of 14 and 17 who are at work, and not in school are entirely the children of the wage-working class—your children, my wage-working friends. What is true of the San Francisco children is true also of the millions of children out of school in the United States.

We now come to the social evil which should be of tremendous interest to the working class. Conservative estimates place the number of outcast women in this country at half a million. An overwhelming proportion of these come from the working class—so many in fact that the balance are hardly worth considering. This statement is not intended as a reproach to that class but to show the inevitable results of bad economic and social environments. Lombroso, doubtless the most scientific criminologist of the age, proved by many tests that the mental capacity of the average outcast is considerably less than that of the average normal woman. In fact that the outcasts as a rule are ill-balanced organisms throughout. Tracing this statement of facts back to the causes introducing these ill-balanced organisms, we find that the struggle for existence is the great factor, affecting both parents, and especially the mother, who overworked and often underfed, and in her environment subjected to many evils that react injuriously on her unborn child, followed by the pressure of a bad economic and social environment upon the child itself, fully prepared by heredity to resist.

One could go on adding to this article paragraph after paragraph, detailing the evils which under an irrational and unjust industrial system must continue to oppress the working class. These evils spring from the system inevitably and can only be remedied by its destruction. It is through the competitive struggle for existence that such a vast number of human beings are kept in a condition of abject wretchedness. As well might we expect to avoid mosquitoes and malaria while dwelling by a swamp as to hope for just conditions for the masses of the people while we continue our mad game methods of making a living. We cannot suppress the law of cause and effect. If we would escape effects we must first destroy causes. The causes of existing social evils are not found in abuses of the present industrial system, as many suppose, but are inherent in the system itself. Continue any gambling game long enough, and however fair the players, and some one will quit with a full pocket and all the rest will be broke. So continue competition long enough and a handful of men will own all the wealth of the nation and all the rest of the people will dwell next door to hunger. Re-divide the wealth equally and continue the principle of competition and you are only repeating the old game which will inevitably end with the old results of monopoly and misery. Hence it is evident that the only sensible thing to do if we would permanently rid ourselves of bad social and economic conditions is to abolish the system that produces them. For private ownership which inevitably results in private monopoly, substitute collective ownership, a monopoly shared equally by all the people. For competition which inevitably ends in the enrichment of the few and the impoverishment of the many, substitute co-operation—production for the use of all the people instead of for the profit of a few people. Herein lies the remedy. Anything short of this is only a palliative.

Understanding the evils, their causes and their remedy, what is the next step? The next step is to apply the remedy. How shall we do it? Four things are necessary—organization (trades unions), education, federation (unity), political action. Each is a necessary part of a complete whole. Omit any one of these four factors and however strong you may seem to be at any special time, reaction from the permanent achievement of the purpose outlined above is sure to follow.

Organization is the soul of action. "Knowledge, (education) is power," "In unity (federation) is strength." Through political action your rights receive the sanction of the law and the power for their enforcement, without which they cannot be enjoyed only by a constant struggle.

The work of industrial organization began a long time ago. It has done much good and prevented much evil. The trades unions have long been a buffer between capitalist greed and the working masses. Without their resistance the whole working class under modern capitalism would have long since sunk into a condition of degradation worse than chattel slavery. As an army in war times fights the battles of all the people, so the trades unions in their struggle against capital have been fighting the battles of the whole wage working class. The shortening of the hours of labor, the raising of wages, the improvement of sanitary conditions, the better protection of life and limb secured through the battles of the trades unions is just so much won for all the workers. Hence, the wage worker who, during a strike, takes the place of a striker, thereby gives aid and comfort to the enemies of his own class. What shall we say of such a man?

There can be but one rational inference from the above paragraph, viz: that all the wage workers from the commonest to the most skilled, should be organized into unions; should be educated to a broad knowledge of their rights and interests, and their relations to each other; and these unions should be so completely federated under the principle that "the injury of one is the concern of all," that in any battle between capital and the workers there would be no break in the line of labor.

Though trade unions have been organized in this country many, many years, they are yet very far from having achieved the conditions outlined in the preceding paragraph. Probably not more than one worker in fifteen is a member of a trade union. I believe that estimate conservative. The farm laborers and the common laborers of the towns and cities are not organized at all. The trades are but poorly organized outside of the larger cities. Federation of these unions themselves is still very incomplete. Many a just strike has been lost by unions for lack of support, moral or otherwise, from other unions. While I write, the Amalgamated Association of Steel Workers is engaged in a gigantic strike for the very principle of unionism. Yet it is very uncertain what measure of support will be given the steel workers by the American Federation of Labor. Why this uncertainty and hesitancy about coming to each others support? It is because of a very incomplete education within the unions themselves as to the real rights and interests of the working class as a whole, and of the relations of mutual interdependence of all branches of workers. Hence in any struggle between capitalism and labor, up-to-date, the former always has had a large army of organized labor upon whose neutrality it could rely, and in addition a vast army of unorganized labor from whom it could draw recruits to whip that particular union with which it was battling.

How poorly the laborers, both organized and unorganized, understand their real interests is manifested by their actions on election day. On that day we find the strikers and the police who club them and the militia who shoot them, together with the scabs who take the strikers' places, all voting each other to vote the same ticket voted by members of the capitalist class, against whose greed and tyranny they strike—tickets nominated by the latter and pledged to their interests. Can you conceive of anything more absurd? We hear the cry, "no politics in the union." We hear the capitalist politicians vehemently advising the workers to "keep out of politics," and as vehemently promising to do wonderful things for the workers "if you will only vote for us." We hear them shouting, "The interests of capital and labor are identical," until the workers are persuaded to vote squarely against their own interests, and the fruit thereof is to find all the forces of organized society from the judge with his injunction to the army with its galling guns, arrayed against them whenever they engage in a bitter struggle to maintain their rights.

At last the workers, through the teachings of the Socialists, plus their own bitter experience, are beginning to learn something. Slowly the light has dawned upon them until many workers through-out the land are considering independent political action. With this thought in mind, finding a labor party—the Socialist—in the field with a definite and thorough program, comprehending all the rights of the workers, they naturally turn to that party. But that does not suit the capitalist politicians at all, nor those labor leaders who work cheek by jowl with them, and who go to date have so vehemently track the workers from the path that leads to the socialist party. That scheme materializes in the shape of an independent union labor party.

Now if these labor leaders honestly seek through political action to secure the workers in all their rights, then why organize a new party at all? Such a party is already in the field, organized nationally and in nearly every state in the union, and cast 108,000 votes at the last presidential election. It is also organized internationally, and holds an international congress every two years, which in 1900 was attended by delegates from twenty-six nations. It cast in Europe nearly 1,000,000 votes, has several hundred members of parliaments, controls several hundred cities, and is working out reforms never dreamed of by any other party. It stands for all that the trades unions do and much more. It stands for the collective ownership of all the means of production and distribution, for co-operation, for production for use instead of for profit, for the right of all men and women to a chance to earn their living, and to enjoy the full product of their labor, and for leisure for all for recreation and self-improvement.

Now if these labor leaders do not propose to take a stand in their proposed new party for the full rights of labor, then why organize a new party? If their purpose be honest why not learn something from history? We have had many political reform movements with half-way programs, such as the Greenback, the old Union Labor, Peoples Party, Workingmen's Party of California, the Henry George movement, etc., etc., which for the time being furnished a vent for the discontent of the people, but in due season fell into the traps and snares set for them by the capitalist politicians and went the way of all the earth.

Any person with extensive experience in the labor movement could forecast accurately for you all the arguments that will be used to convince you that you should join a union labor party instead of the Socialist party, and those arguments will be as similar and as senseless as the argument used heretofore to keep you from all political action whatever. So, also after your party has been formed and your ticket nominated, one can easily forecast the arguments that will be used by old party politicians with all non-union workers, and all of the professional and small proprietor class, to show why they should not vote your ticket; and those arguments will be as subtle and ingenious and difficult for you to answer, for the partial program of your movement will give you a weak base to fight from. Only a party with a thorough and complete program can meet and conquer capitalism in argument.

The history of the People's Party splendidly illustrates how easy it is to destroy a mere reform or patchwork movement. That party had a platform containing much sentiment and but very little of economic value. The central idea was to reform or patch up the present economic system. Within the party were many opinions, in fact, as many opinions as the party had speakers and writers, as to how the patching should be done. That condition of indecision enabled self-seeking politicians to play "good lord and good devil," to many different kind of people for their votes. When the party had gained a certain measure of strength, a capitalist party, the Democratic, took a single plank from the People's Party platform, the silver plank and put it in the Democratic platform. Fusion was effected and from that moment the People's Party began to die. In 1896 when the two parties fused, the People's Party controlled several states, it had between twenty and thirty members of the U. S. congress and Senate, it had a press numbering over one thousand papers, it had hundreds of speakers in the field. To-day the party is dead, it has but two or three members in congress, the most of the leaders together with the rank and file have gone back to the old parties.

A similar fate could never have happened to the Socialist party. That party has a clearly defined program, its central idea aims for a complete abolition of the present economic system. No patching-up business for it. It emphasizes that the economic struggle is a class struggle; that there can be no identity of economic interests between the capitalist class and the wage working class; that the larger share of labor's product going to the capitalists as profit, the smaller the proportion that will come to the workers as wages; that laws which protect the economic interests of capitalists as capitalists will never protect the economic interests of wage workers; that a government pledged to the service of capitalism will never do justice to the wage workers in any struggle between these two economic forces. "With principles thus clearly defined, a false note from speaker or writer is quickly detected, followed by a sharp calling to account, and an immediate amendment or the withdrawal of the party's sanction.

Throughout the world capitalism has never had the slightest influence in controlling the councils or in shaping the policies of the Socialist party. It has never been able to effect a fusion with the Socialists, so there is no danger from the straight line leading to their purpose. Remembering that the continued strength of capitalism depends upon its success in deceiving and misleading the working people, is it a wonder that it manifests a venomous hatred for a party it can in no wise influence?

In conclusion I ask, in the face of the fact that there is a labor party already in existence, with a complete and thorough program demanding the full rights of labor, why do you go to date have so vehemently party that for many years has been battling, suffering and sacrificing for the cause of labor, why should you waste your time, money and votes in support of a merely local party, new born, without record, and without experience? THINK WELL BEFORE YOU ACT. M. W. W.

THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Translated for the Workers' Call from "Manual Du Co-operateur" by Scholastic.

We now come to the advantages which the socialist party may and should derive directly from co-operative action.

1. In the first place the resources for propaganda are increased in enormous proportions and that in various ways.

In 1894 it was impossible for the workers of the socialist party to rent in Paris a large hall for the holding of public meetings. The proprietors, intimidated by the clerical and nationalist groups, refused to rent their halls under whatever pretext they could find, and this fact constantly repeated, deprived the socialists of an excellent means of propaganda in times of agitation which would have been made still more so. The great meeting at the Ti-voli-Vauxhall had no successors for lack of suitable place? Would it not have been otherwise if the socialist party had had at Charente, at Belleville, at Chézy, at Grenelle, at Vaugirard, in every workingmen's quarters, a Co-operative affiliated with it, furnishing an immense meeting hall such as that which occupies the third story of the great Maison du Peuple of Brussels? Evidently we need halls of our own, in which, forever emancipated from the terror of the bourgeois proprietors, we shall be free in our own house: free to explain the revolutionary principles of socialism.

This is not all. A Co-operative is not truly socialist unless it furnishes to the socialist party assistance of every kind. One of the principal advantages is money, which is still an essential part of the struggle against capitalism. We have already seen that a Belgium Co-operative devotes a minimum of 12 1/2 per cent of its net profits to propaganda. No one will think that this is asking too much of the French socialist co-operatives, provided that the margin of profit charged on the various articles before the rebate is figured, is not too high. Take for example a Parisian Co-operative, which divided in 1899 the sum of $11,555.50 among its 4,437 members; according to the Belgium system it should have devoted $1,444.50 to propaganda. The average quota from each member amounts to 33 cents a year, which is certainly not excessive.

It is higher at the Maison du Peuple of Brussels, as shown by the figures at eight years.

Year	Members	Total	Per capita
1893	2,500	7,900	3.16
1894	3,500	11,200	3.20
1895	4,750	15,100	3.20
1896	7,000	25,400	3.63
1897	8,000	27,200	3.40
1898	10,000	33,000	3.30
1899	12,000	44,700	3.73
1900	13,000	48,600	3.73

Thus taking the eight years altogether from 1893 to 1900, the Co-operative of Brussels devoted to propaganda the total sum of 169,500 francs, each member making an annual sacrifice of 2 3/8 francs, that is to say, giving to socialist propaganda 3-4 of a centime a day or 5-4 centimes in a week. (A centime is not quite one-fifth of a cent.)

Socialist co-operators should discuss these figures and decide whether they are not willing to contribute a cent a week to the revolution. If they take this average for a basis, the propaganda fund might receive each year from 50,000 Co-operators $25,000, and so on for larger numbers.

These figures indicate clearly the resources for propaganda which the socialist party will receive from the allied Co-operatives in proportion as the institution developed. It will serve to improve and to scatter more widely the socialist press and to put out its organizers and orators in all directions, to maintain strikes, in short, to carry the voice of socialism into the smallest towns and most remote factories.

2. From the Co-operatives our party will also derive a moral advantage which is not to be despised.

The Socialist Party proposed to substitute for the government of persons the administration of things; the future society will be a union of free men possessing in common the instruments of production and administering in the interests of all, its collective property. Now it is denied that the working class has the necessary ability for carrying on properly not only this gigantic administration, but even the smallest commercial enterprise; from this the conclusion is drawn that it is necessary to maintain the wage system and the arbitrary government of persons.

It is worth to consider the contempt with which a bourgeois merchant turns into ridicule "the lack of practical spirit" on the part of socialists. According to him a socialist is an unfortunate to whom the theory and practice of "business" is a sealed book.

If by "business" is meant all the means, legal or illegal, by which the merchant struggles against the competition of his rivals of the same class (from advertising, which is often the most shameful lying, up to adulterations of every kind) then, the socialist is not a "good business man," since he organizes Co-operatives of consumption, which are intended for no other purpose than to suppress competition under several of its forms; the competition of the middle man, who are suppressed; the competition of the consumers, who are associated, the competition even of the producers, since the Co-operatives tend on the one hand to manufacture their own goods, on the other hand to unite the producers into associations, with which they may enter into agreements.

It is evident that if "business" is the art of "doing up" one's competitors, the managers of a Co-operative cannot claim to be called business men. But if business is simply the capacity for good administration, one only needs to examine our socialist Co-operatives and their prosperity, to be convinced that the socialists are as practical as the large or the small business men of the bourgeois. It is very rarely that a socialist Co-operative disappears. Almost all of them survive, most of them grow, gain in membership and increase in a still greater proportion their scale of business, creating new departments in proportion as their resources increase.

Thus the socialists prove their administrative capacity in an unmistakable way, that is to say, by administering. This proof, a constantly increasing moral advantage, the socialist party owes to its Co-operatives. This proof, we maintain, will increase in value every day. Indeed, the Co-operatives of consumption not only tend to increase continually, but they are inevitably pushing into new forms of organization.

A Co-operative of consumption must buy at wholesale, subjects ready to be consumed, but in certain cases it is more advantageous to manufacture them itself. This comes about especially in the case of bread: Many of the Co-operatives have ovens and bakers whom they employ. In the northern region of France out of 50 Co-operatives there are barely two which do not make their own bread (those of Wals-lès-Aves and Avion); the Co-operatives at Avion buy their bread at an outside bakery which delivers it at the homes of members and allows a rebate of two per cent.

In proportion as the Co-operative is called upon to satisfy more numerous wants, it is for its interest to manufacture a greater variety of articles in order to reduce the cost price. It comes into just the same position as the large merchants who find it to their advantage to manufacture for themselves the goods which they sell and the raw material from which these goods are formed. For example, the grocery house of Felix Potin has a factory just outside Paris. It cultivates its own vineyards and manufactures its wine. The Paris clothing store "Au Point Neuf" cuts its clothing by machinery in layers a foot thick; a great woollen house, at Roubaix finds it worth while to carry on for itself the raising of sheep in the Argentine Republic.

Not to go outside of Co-operatives, we recall the Federation of Manchester with its factories for food products, its two soap factories, its two shoe factories, its tannery, its factory for woollen goods and woollen garments, its annual production of six million dollars, about one-tenth of its consumption, its seven steamships which go to seek out for it the products of the entire world, its 3,181 workmen and employees. But if we consider the Federations, taken together, they have an annual production of twelve million dollars (1-12 of their consumption) employing 15,300 workmen and clerks.

No federation of the socialist Co-operatives having as yet been effected, we can only hope for such a development of production among ourselves. But this extension is inevitable. Already the Vocruit of Ghent, outside of its bakery which makes 100,000 loaves of bread a week, outside of its coffee-room and its meeting halls, outside of its branches throughout the city, outside of its festival hall (the most beautiful in the city and formerly the habitual meeting place of the financial and industrial aristocracy of Ghent) possesses its own manufacturing chemical works, because it finds it better to make for itself the medicines which it furnishes to its members, and it is building a great bazaar for novelties, above which there will be halls for meetings.

Ever if the Co-operatives of a country do not form a federation they will be interested in assisting as stockholders and in maintaining as customers workingmen's factories, such as the Workingmen's Shoe Factory, and the Workingmen's Glass Factory, no doubt if there were 250,000 socialist Co-operatives in France the life of the glass workers of Aini would be far more tolerable.

Moreover, we shall succeed in federating our Co-operatives, for, if the French law does not favor the federation of Co-operatives, at least it permits the formation of corporations in which these Co-operatives can be interested. The first difficulties are a little greater than for the English societies but the result will be equally valuable. The construction of factories belonging to the socialist Co-operatives, that is to say, to the proletariat.

Thus, by developing normally its economic institutions, the socialist party will prove to its enemies that it is capable of administering things in a practical manner while conforming to the principles of justice and of property.

3. Let us add that, as Vandervelde has profoundly said, the socialist party will show itself as something more even than a great united and living party: it will show within the capitalist society an embryo of collectivist society which, when the development of Co-operatives is completed, will become a country which had become wholly socialist would suffice to itself in the midst of the nations still subject to the capitalist regime. There again experience would come to the relief of theory. The possibility of a collectivist society would be demonstrated by its already existing in the midst of capitalism. 4. Finally, the humblest socialist Co-operative has the immense merit of forming a link between the present and the future.

It harmonizes the theorists of the Revolution who show us the final end to reach, with the practical tacticians who are sometimes mislabeled "reformers," and who reasonably demand in the name of the proletariat, immediate improvements in the conditions of the working class.

We have a right to desire these improvements, but we should ask them from ourselves, from our own strength, our own energy. "The emancipation of the laborers must be the work of the laborers themselves."

Now, the Co-operatives of consumption are a complete response to this great word of Marx; unlike the reforms which the bourgeois concede and may at any time recall, they are "the work of the laborers themselves," a work inalienable and fruitful.

They show in what way the question of reforms must be solved. They show that there are excellent reforms, reforms which the people work out by themselves and for themselves, reforms which at once improve the condition of the proletarians while preparing them for their complete and final enfranchisement. They show the absurdity of the question, "Should we sacrifice the present generation to future generations?" Between ourselves and our children there is no struggle of interests, there is no conflict of egotisms. As there exists an actual solidarity between the laborers of the different nations, there is likewise an absolute solidarity between those of successive ages. Neither this solidarity of successive times, nor the international solidarity of the laborers, needs to be created by us and through our sacrifice; it exists of itself, it is the very fact of our necessities which by forcing us to improve our condition prepares the future of the revolutionary proletariat.

The socialist Co-operatives of consumption are improving the actual life of the laborers and meanwhile preparing for the triumph of collectivism. Through them will be manifested the union of the workers not only of all countries but also of all times.

LABOR ITEMS.

And Notes From Trades Union Journals and Estimates, Translated by Charles H. Kerr.

Flow trust is now an accomplished fact. Capital $100,000,000. O yes, the trust are going to bust, all right.

The Labor Review, of Williamsport, Pa., has come out in support of the Socialist party nominees in this city.

First payment of old age pensions have been made in Sidney, N. S. W. over 1,000 persons receiving sums ranging between $1.50 and $10.50.

The New Era, of Philadelphia, has come out in support of the Socialist party ticket. It says the Wannamaker "reformers" are as bad as Quayites.

Salt trust is forming with the object of controlling all the salt mines of the world. International character of capitalism are becoming more apparent every day.

Judge Baker has again distinguished himself in the injunction line. This time the "talking gun on paper" is leveled against the strikers at the Can-key plant in Hammond, Ind.

Western Consolidated Company is the name of the newest trust which has just been formed by the amalgamation of the five largest crushed stone companies in the middle west.

Reports from San Francisco state that the Teamster's strike has collapsed, the men going back to work after failing to compel the employers to recognize the union.

Coal miners of northern Florida to the number of 100,000 are about to strike for an increase of wages, in spite of the efforts of the national government. The "nothing to arbitrate" idea seems not to be confined to the U. S. alone.

The son of a big railroad official was recently killed in the Burlington yards through being run over by an engine. He was ambitious to learn the railroad business "from the bottom up" and therefore began as a switch man.

Strike of linemen against Chicago Telephone Company still remains unsettled. President of Company asserts his willingness to treat with the strikers as "individuals." Nothing to arbitrate, as per usual.

Fifteen negroes were shot last week at Caney Springs, Tenn., by what is described as a "mob of whites." Several of the negroes were suspected of petty thefts, so the relative "sacredness" of life or property was again tested.

Paul Corcoran, one of the victims of the Idaho "bull pen," has been pardoned. He was accused of shooting a scab miner, and, after a farcical trial, during which it was proven that he was 15 miles from the spot, sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment.

Cleveland Citizen has spared no pains to make investigations as to the past history of Czolgosz. Result—He was never identified with the Socialist party but always voted the Republican ticket. Did so last fall and voted for the man he shot. Relatives are also all Republicans.

There may be a "maximum penalty of fourteen years" hanging over Bobby Burke, but that gentleman has no doubt inspected the suspending gear before-hand, and satisfied himself that it is more than equal to the strain.

LOCAL PARTY PROGRESS.

Reports of Organizers of the North, South, West and 6th District Divisions, on public meetings, party from financial returns, and general agitation for the past week.

Record of growing activity.

NORTH SIDE.

The meetings at corner Congress and State Streets will be continued until the weather prevents.

On Wednesday evening, the North Division will send speakers to the corner, and on other nights the South Division club (1st and 2nd ward branches) will have charge of the meetings. All speakers who wish to speak to a good sized crowd from 100 to 1,000, should come down to the meetings on Wednesday, Saturday and Sundays and in fact on every day in the week.

The only meetings—outdoor—that will be continued are those at the corner of Washington Place and North Clark Street on Thursday evenings where large crowds gathered last week despite the cold weather.

Another thing that should be attended to is the sale of the Pamphlet "Socialism vs. Anarchy."

This will offset the attempts to place Socialism and other confused ideas in the same category.

Copies in all quantities can be secured at the Call office. Branches and Party members take notice.

WEST SIDE.

The meeting of the West Division Committee was called to order promptly at 10:30 Sunday, October 6th and Comrade Gillespie was elected chairman. The secretary not being present, Comrade Balhouse was elected secretary, pro tem. On roll call all wards responded but the 15th and 16th. The report of organizers showed activity of branches to secure halls for winter agitation, also securing bondsmen in their respective wards in case of trouble with the police.

As there are a number of wards too unorganized it was decided to make a tour to hold propaganda meetings, quest upon all branches to contribute to the treasury of the Division so that financial aid can be given such wards in holding meetings and thereby helping them to gain and placing them all on a solid footing.

All ward organizers are hereby notified that all dues paid by a member must be accompanied with a due stamp as no one will be or is considered a member in good standing who has not the necessary stamps pasted on his membership card. There are three ward organizations in the West Division that have not received payment of dues with stamps at one time or another and thereby practically withheld support from the local, state and National organizations.

Socialist Temple Notes.

On Saturday evening, October 12 and Sunday evening, October 13, Comrade F. G. Strickland will speak at the Socialist Temple for the first time in many months. It is hoped that all of Comrade Strickland's many friends will be present. On next Wednesday night Comrade John Collins will speak at the Temple.

Comrade Strickland will probably speak on some night of this week.

A date has been arranged for the Temple on Wednesday, October 23, on the subject: Resolved that the teachings of the Marxist Testament tend toward Socialism. Comrade Walter Higgins will take the affirmative and Comrade Fred Underman the negative.

Comrade W. H. Wise will deliver his last speech in Chicago before his departure for California on Sunday, Oct. 28.

Mother Jones will be at the Temple in the evening of the 29th.

Bricklayers Club.

Meeting was called to order at 8 p. m. on last Saturday at the Socialist Temple, 120 E. Western Ave. The temporary secretary stated that the books of the former secretary and treasurer had not yet arrived as was expected, and he suggested that the regular order of business be proceeded with. Comrade Johnson was elected chairman of the evening, and resolutions were at once called for the offices of Financial and Corresponding Secretaries, Treasurer and Librarian.

The following members were duly elected: Financial Secretary, Herman Kock; Corresponding Secretary, Daniel Donahue; Treasurer, John C. Thibroucher; Librarian, Reuben Vorpahl.

An auditing committee was elected to audit the books of the former Secretary and Treasurer, and present their report at the next regular meeting, October 15th, so that books may be turned over to the newly elected officers.

The business of the club was then suspended to permit Comrade John Collins, of the machinists, to give an address. Comrade Collins' appearance on the platform was greeted with hearty applause. The speaker selected as his subject the necessity of organization, such as the Socialist Bricklayers' Educational Club, in all trades and crafts. He pointed out that under the NIGHT SHIELDS ETA present competitive system the absolute necessity that workingmen form class conscious bodies for the discussion of economic subjects, so that the working class might act intelligently when the opportunity for the removal of the evil conditions of today presented itself.

He illustrated this need further, by pointing out the fact that the children of the working class were debarrd by capitalism from acquiring education. They were being taken from the schools long before anything remotely approaching an adequate education could be obtained, and packed into the factories and department stores to satisfy the demands of the profit system. This resulted in the displacement of the fathers of the children and other able-bodied men, the labor of the children being cheaper. At this point Comrade Collins was liberally applauded.

The speaker concluded by stating that one of the best means of propaganda consisted in the distribution of socialist literature, mentioning particularly the Workers' Call as an efficient instrument for that purpose. He urged the members present to take a goodly supply of the paper for distribution wherever possible, and make a special effort to increase its circulation by securing more subscribers.

The meeting was then adjourned until Saturday, October 13th, in the same building. All members are requested to be present. Collection amounted to $2.65.

Socialists of Ohio Receive An Object Lesson Thereon

SEND LETTER OF INQUIRY

Their Candidate for Governor Loses His Position for Averting Socialism

The following letter addressed to the Union Mutual Life Insurance Co. office in Cincinnati, O., by the Socialist Party of that state, needs no preface, being sufficiently explanatory in itself:

Dayton, O., Oct. 5th 1901.
Union Mutual Life Insurance Co.,
Portland, Maine.

Gentlemen:
We are informed that you have terminated the contract of Mr. Harry C. Thompson as cashier of your Cincinnati Agency, stating: "We are positive that it would not be for the best interests of a person holding the views of a socialist or who belongs to any party organization which aims to destroy the conditions under which only it is possible for institutions like ours to exist and prosper."

Mr. Thompson is the nominee of the Socialist Party for Governor of Ohio. This action of yours is of more importance than its personal effect on him; though all people who hold human life and character as sacred as we do, will join with us in stating that it is a matter of very serious import. If a representative corporation attacks a representative individual for his views upon economics and government, we desire that the issue which you have so clearly stated should be fully considered.

The socialist beliefs in insurance but are convinced that the evolution of human life and needs, call for a re-adjustment of the manner and results of its operation. If the interests of the people are not identical with those of the corporations, it is only a question of time before the corporation must give way.

We believe in evolution and the power behind evolution. The Literary Digest for Sept. 25th contains several articles which show that economic questions are becoming of greater national importance each day, and are not matters of concern only to what you consider an insignificant Socialist Party. History records many an evolution and revolution of the common people against which rulers and money interests have set themselves in vain. Socialists are the patrons and champions of the present struggle.

We would be glad to discuss this question with you as with any other people; but do not know that this would be welcome to you. Therefore we simply ask that you kindly inform us if you wish your action in this case to be interpreted as beginning a class war. Socialism means that the interests of the whole people are paramount to those of a few individuals.

Yours Very Truly,

This letter was addressed to the above named Insurance Company on October 5th. Whether they have deigned to reply to it or not we have not yet heard, although in our opinion they will not consider a reply expedient. The same plea which they allege as a reason for discharging this particular employee will hold good in declining to reply—"It would not be for the best interests of the company" to do so.

Mr. Thompson has been discharged because the ideas which he holds would destroy the conditions under which the Insurance Company exists and prospers. It will be apparent then that the Insurance Company is in the line of self defense.

These conditions about whose preservation the company is seemingly so solicitous, are the conditions which permit a minority of the population to appropriate to their own use and enjoyment, the product of the labor of the majority, without giving any equivalent for the same. To this minority the company belongs. The Insurance Company is a mere tool.

But it requires labor to administer and operate an insurance company. Certainly, but the labor produces nothing—it is merely expended in devising ways and means by which necessary things already produced can be appropriated to the use of the few.

It is not strange that the prosperous people, connected with it should endeavor to keep it as it is, and look upon every one who would touch it as an enemy to be punished or suppressed.

It may be said perhaps that under these conditions, insurance companies are necessary. The socialists will not deny that. But they insist that the CONDITIONS themselves are either necessary or rapidly becoming so, and therefore they are preparing for their abolition.

Now what are the conditions for which Mr. Thompson stands? As a socialist he holds that those who produce should appropriate the entire value of their labor, and wants conditions established which will make this possible. And in working for the attainment of this state of society he necessarily antagonizes the "best interests" of those who prosper under the conditions of the present.

It was for this reason he was discharged from his position of cashier in the office of the Insurance company. He was championing the interests of the class which produces and does not appropriate, against the interests of the class which appropriates but does not produce—the interests of the working class as against the interests of the capitalist class. The party asks the company if the discharge of Comrade Thompson is to be interpreted as the beginning of a class war. This question is really superfluous. The company knows perfectly well that it is not the beginning, but merely an incident illustrative of the present existence of a class war. And they know also that if the working class only become as conscious of that fact as they are, that insurance companies will have to go out of business. But the fact that they have discharged Comrade Thompson does not mean that they have got rid of a combatant on the opposing side.

On the contrary they have merely given him an increased opportunity to attack still more effectively the conditions under which their "institution" prospers. They have helped by their action to bring the recognition of the existence of the CLASS STRUGGLE to many who perhaps might have still remained in ignorance of it for a time. And they have provided this paper with an illustration by which its truth can be again insisted upon in these columns.

It is little use in saying that a man's political ideas should not be made a cause for discharging him from his position. Perhaps this should not be so, but it is better to face the fact that it is so and inquire the reason therefor, than waste time in uselessly deploring what at present cannot be prevented. If the working class of Ohio conclude that the prosperity of a life insurance company or any other capitalistic institution is superior to their own, they will, in the coming election, of course, place a representative of capitalist interests in the Governor's chair. But if they have learned the lesson that the insurance company has given them, on the existence of ANTAGONISTIC CLASS INTERESTS, they will place Comrade Thompson, the socialist representative, the representative of the interests of their class, at the head of the parade.

Bismarckian Socialism.

Here is a chunk from Consul-General Gunther's report on matters economic in Germany:

"While large manufacturing establishments of shoes in Germany are combining, independent shoemakers are seeking to obtain the advantages of production on a large scale without giving up their individuality. A meeting was recently held in this city (Frankfurt) to discuss the advisability of establishing a central workshop for the local shoe concerns and a committee was appointed to devise a plan. It is proposed to start a factory with the most modern machinery where every member can have his work done. This is said to be the first attempt in Germany at a co-operative factory. It is stated that work will be pushed, and that the PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT WILL MATERIALLY ASSIST THE NEW ENTERPRISE, but in what manner is not divulged so far."

School of Socialism.

The classes of the School of Social Economy under the direction of Comrade May Wood Simons have arranged to meet as follows. Socialist Temple, 120 South Western Avenue, Monday, October 22nd, Thursday October 25th, Socialist Headquarters, 705 West 3rd Street and Wednesday, Oct. 23rd at 7 1/2 Hill Street.

This gives a class in each division of the city and makes it possible for anyone to attend on payment of a single admission. At the first meeting at each of these places the lecture on "The Earth as the Home of Man" will be given. Everyone is welcome to attend at this first meeting free of charge and it is hoped there will be a large attendance. The plan and work of the school will then be explained.

Suggestions for Propaganda Which May Prove Valuable to Other Branches

From the 35th Ward—Greetings:
It will interest our comrades throughout Chicago to learn what we, the new 35th are now doing, and what we contemplate doing this winter. Let all ward secretaries, for that matter, tell all the city what is a-going in their respective districts, so that we can learn from each other the diverse methods and ways of spreading the gospel of socialism.

The 35th is a medium ward as concerns socialist sentiment—the "roll of honor" (I mean the total socialist vote) last April numbered 24, or 5 per cent. of the 5,000 votes cast by the ward. East of the N. W. car shops where Comrades Strickland and Higgins

DIDN'T HURT THEM

Second Annual Report of the Federal Steel Co. a Significant Document for Organized Labor.

It might be as well to call the attention of Mr. Shaffer to the financial report of the United States Steel Corporation recently issued, and it will doubtless also satisfy those peculiar individuals who have been howling for "publicity" as a remedy for the "Trust evil."

The net earnings of the Trust for six months have been nearly $5,000,000, which the workers have produced and the non-workers appropriated. Here is the statement which follows, and it is to be hoped that the defeated strikers and their leader will be able to draw a moral therefrom.

"We are well satisfied with the showing and we believe our stockholders will be also. The fact that in the six months our earnings were so large may mystify many people, but as a matter of fact THE STRIKE WAS IN NO SENSE OF THE WORD A HURT TO US for the reason that it enabled us to make at minimum cost many necessary repairs, always incident to the midsummer season, while a number of the plants, forced to close by the strikers, would have been shut down in any event to effect the repairs."

"Beyond all that, the figures are a practical demonstration of the value of concentration of control, for while the strike was on we were able so long as some of our mills were open to transfer work to them which otherwise would have gone to the closed mills."

"I venture the prediction, having in mind the large orders already placed and the outlook in the iron industry generally, that in the next six months our earnings will increase 20 or 30 per cent. beyond those of the first six months."

"Incidentally I may say that we have 1,500 tons of finished product on hand which we are unable to move because of a shortage of cars. That does not look as if PROSPERITY has come to an end, does it?"

This declaration is full of significance to every workingman who will take the trouble to think for himself. It shows that in the face of the Trust the Labor Union is not only helpless but that its very efforts to better the condition of its members really adds to the strength of its enemies, and it shows further that the controllers of the Trust are fully aware of the fact. The men who produced this enormous dividend will search in vain through this statement for any recognition of themselves in any other light than that of commodities. The product of their labor goes to satisfy the "stockholders' slope, the people who own the means of production, while as for the producers they can get their satisfaction out of the knowledge that they have been whipped into submission through ignorance of their class interests. The concluding sentence also bears out to the full what we socialists have over and over again said about "prosperity"—that it exists for the capitalist class exclusively.

If the workers wish to enjoy the prosperity they create instead of allowing the non-producing classes to have a monopoly of it, they must own collectively the means of production themselves, just as the "prosperous" group of shareholders now own it. And they cannot accomplish this through the medium of an economic organization but only by using their political power in their own interests.

PLAINT OF THE POSTAL CLERK

Identification of Labor in the Post Office. Fruitless struggle for Shorter Hours in the Mailing Division. Promises Made Only to be Broken. Sullen Submission of the Clerks Becomes "Loyalty" to the Capitalist Press. An Exposure of Present Conditions by one Who Has Been Through the Mill.

The article referring to conditions of labor in the Chicago Post Office, which appeared in issue No. 123 of the Workers' Call, was no doubt a revelation to many people, but to one acquainted with the inside workings of that institution, and who has worked there and still sees a good deal of the clerks working there, the picture is not in the least overdrawn, and I can assure the reader is only too true.

The daily press has given the matter some attention, the postmaster has been caricatured as wading in a deluge of letters up to his neck and lustily crying for help. It was stated that the entire force from the executive division and all the sub-stations willingly responded to the call for help, that one million letters and 7,000 sacks of catalogues and circulars weighing 200 tons were sent out recently on one Sunday. But these statements are taken from the postmaster or high officials and the whole matter is treated as a good joke.

Of course to these officials who never work longer than seven hours per day, getting high salaries, and the men from the sub-stations who work only eight hours, this helping out in the main office may have been a novelty, but to the men in the mailing division who have toiled 10 and 12 hours every week day and every Sunday since the 1st of September, with a fair prospect of the hours increasing to 15 per day (Sunday included) up to the 1st of June, it is hardly to be expected that the situation has a humorous aspect. To them it is a grim reality, a life of drudgery.

The postmaster's talk of the "loyalty" exhibited by everybody turning out to assist in cleaning up the mail, is in reality a farce and a mockery. The cold fact is that the rank and file turned out not from a feeling of loyalty, but through fear that staying away would mean discharge, and when those who did not show up on Sunday, received notice the next day to appear before the trial board and show cause why they should not be punished or discharged for staying at home, it puts an entirely different face on the matter.

The congestion of mail, the receipt of 500 tons per day is not an accident, but the last link of a long chain of causes reaching several years back.

The mail order business which originated a few years ago with Montgomery Ward, Sears, Roebuck & Co., has today reached enormous proportions, and almost every distributing firm in Chicago has followed their example and added a mail order department to their business. The result is that the country is being flooded with catalogues and circulars advertising their wares. They advertise early and late in season and out of season—everything that happens is seized upon as a pretext for making money. When President McKinley was shot at Buffalo his "life" was immediately written up by half a dozen enterprising book firms in Chicago, taking their chances on his death. The day after the event occurred, the post office was literally swamped with prospectuses sent broadcast to agents throughout the country accompanied by glowing circulars lavishly patriotic and money making were admirably blended, telling the agents to work the thing for all it was worth as the book would sell like "hot cakes" as it was the "best money maker put upon the market for a long time."

Business is certainly good and still on the increase in the Chicago Post Office. An enormous increase in all departments and divisions in clear profits every year, as one may see through the published statements in the daily press. But how about the workers who handle this increase? Do they share in the prosperity? Not much! Still one might naturally suppose that the "government of the people" would use some of the money to employ a sufficient force that would render it unnecessary to work the present staff to death. Not so! The millions made in the Chicago Post Office are sent to Washington to cover the deficits in small post offices where business don't pay to enrich railroad companies that carry the mail to pay big salaries to officials who must be taken care of for political services rendered, but the reduction of the labor of the toiling slaves who do the actual work is never even thought of.

True, on every first of July about 100 letters are added to the working force but as stated in the "Call" this number is entirely too small to keep pace with the increase of the mail.

There is no class of workers in Chicago that are subjected to such slavish and servile conditions as the postal clerks. Fewer diggers and hod carriers, disagreeable as their work may be, are king in comparison with the clerks. The former can go home when their 8 hours is over and they have their Sundays to spend with their families, or if they work Sundays or overtime, it means extra pay. Of course the workers in the factories and elsewhere have their troubles also, but they at least have some protection to their Union.

Some extent at least, bound to respect. Not so with the postal clerk: from the time he enters the office until the work is done he is at the mercy of the foreman and knows not whether his day is to be 8 or 15 hours; he must work, work, work, until the bell rings, even though he is ready to drop from exhaustion.

The nearest corporations had as they see, rarely forget that their employees shall work every Sunday and several hours overtime each day without extra pay. It is left for "the greatest and most grateful government on earth" to exploit its wage slaves to an extent that private greed has not yet reached.

Some years back the clerks worked about eight hours per day, but year after year as the mail increased, extra hours and Sundays were added. The officials want to make a record for themselves to please their masters, the capitalists, who own and run the government; by doing big business with few men, to make money and run the office "economically," to get out the mail on time even if it requires the men to put in 24 hours per day.

Last fall when the situation became unbearable, the clerks held meetings of protest in the gallery of the office, and elected a committee to see Charles Gordon the former postmaster, about getting some relief. This committee after a long discussion, by threatening and pleading, finally secured an agreement with Gordon in which nine hours should constitute a day's work, the left over mail to be gotten out on Sundays. This agreement worked well all winter. A few days before Gordon retired an order was received in which it was stated that the nine hour agreement was no longer in force and henceforth business would proceed on the old plan.

The 12 hours workday was again resumed and the mail piled up on all sides. The men were so exhausted through overwork that some died, while others were compelled to stay home, sick for weeks. The climax was reached on the last Sunday in March, the day before the new postmaster took hold. Under the plea that every piece of mail had to be gotten out, the men worked from 9 A. M. until 12 P. M. that day or fourteen hours in all. One of the clerks in conversation with me, described the situation as follows:

"For weeks we had worked 12 hours per day, Sunday included. As I live a long distance out, I spend about 2 1/2 hours on the cars per day and am compelled to study distribution schemes during that time. The only time that I could pass with my family was on Sunday nights after 7 o'clock."

When I arrived home that Sunday night, or rather Monday morning for it was considerably past midnight, the house was dark and my wife and children gone to bed; the supper which had been prepared with special care was standing cold on the table. The children had cried themselves to sleep because as they said their papa never came home to play with them."

No worse picture of misery from over work can be found outside the Chicago Post Office.

When the new postmaster took hold, he looked the place over, saw the stacks of mail, and the exhaustion plainly discernible amongst the office force. He told them that he knew that they were overworked and underpaid, that they had good cause to be rebellious, but as his predecessor had used up all available funds nothing could be done before the first of July when the money granted by Congress would fall due. "Stand by me, boys, till then, and your case shall be attended to and a great change made," he said. And so the "boys" stood by, and toiled on full of hope expecting the good things which July would bring. Only a few who had not forgotten other unfulfilled promises, hinted at "hot air" or of course their words were not taken seriously.

Throughout the summer the mails became somewhat lighter and the hours were reduced to 8 1/2 per diem with a few hours duty every third Sunday, and hope grew stronger. A letter of thanks to the new postmaster was drafted and signed by some, and all things were lovely.

But alas! how quickly was Paradise lost. The change came on the first of September. Thenceforth 10 hours per day became the rule, and all day every Sunday. On the 1st of October this was increased to 12 hours daily, Sunday included, and another increase is now looked for as another superintendent has taken charge of the mailing division, and he has stated that in future the mail must be cleared up every night no matter if it is 50 tons or 300, no matter whether it takes one hour or twenty four.

To talk about "loyalty" under such circumstances is adding insult to injury. There is no loyalty—there is sullen submission.

There is not a man in the mailing division (although for obvious reasons they dare not speak openly) who is not disgusted and dissatisfied with the treatment received, and who does not thoroughly despise the condition of his servitude and everything connected with the postal system.

But bad as it is for the victims, the situation has its good side. It is learning a valuable lesson to the employees who are getting their eyes opened to what capitalist government really means. They are also beginning to understand that whether the government labels itself Republican or Democratic, their conditions of labor are in no manner whatever affected thereby—that those parties represent only the ruling property owning class—the class which thrives upon the exploitation and economic slavery of the workers—Christianity included in the latter.

Federation of Labor, and have thus cast their lot with organized labor, and from now on the news of how brutally the government treats its employees will be spread broadcast amongst the workers of the country.

Let the government wage slaves take hope; their deliverance from slavery along with the rest of the working class is near at hand. The workers of America are fast realizing that they can expect nothing from the Republican and Democratic parties—that they have nothing to offer the workers but contempt and servitude. They are learning of the progress of the Socialist party, its aim and object, and are beginning to understand that it is the only party that advocates their cause as well as the cause of all workers, and that its victory will place the government in the hands of the working class, when every worker will not only secure shorter hours, but the full product of his labor.

THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Translated for the Workers' Call from "Manuel Du Co-Operateur Socialiste," a dialect.

(NOTE. The second part of the "Manuel du Co-Operateur Socialiste" is largely taken up with technical suggestions based on the conditions of trade in France. We shall not therefore translate it in full, but shall include only such portions as will be of interest to American co-operators.)

The following chapter is a description of the interesting workings of a French Co-operative.

THE "UNION" OF LILLE.

The "Union" is a typical socialist Co-operative located in the working-men's quarters of Lille, a city in the northeast of France which, as will be remembered, has a socialist mayor and other officers. Apart from two or three points of detail its organization may be considered as a model, and the full information, written or verbal, which has been furnished to the writer by its manager, Comrade Samson, enables us to give a lifelike picture of its workings. Acknowledgments are due to Comrade Samson for the assistance which he has thus rendered to our propaganda work.

A. HISTORICAL.

In the month of March, 1892, about ten workmen of Lille who had resolved on forming an active organization decided to establish a Co-operative. The total capital on hand was $1.85 which was sufficient to send a circular to their comrades. They succeeded in interesting some of them, since a month later we find that they had a membership of 40 and had raised the sum of $116. Without loss of time they rented a modest bakery in a basement at Mont-Lille, rue Fontenay, and they soon began the manufacture of bread.

The infant Co-operative had many obstacles to overcome; lack of credit, hostility on the part of small traders, even internal dissensions which had been skillfully provoked.

But, in spite of all, the energy of 100 members (their number had grown a little) triumphed over all difficulties. Their headquarters and the bakery were moved to a larger place in rue Massillon.

In January, 1895, the Co-operative included a thousand families. Along with the growth of its membership it extended its business. On August 18, 1896, it bought at 147 rue d'Arras a lot of 2,190 square metres at the price of $3,800.75 francs and established there its improved bakery with the other departments—the building cost 137,440 francs, and the material 24,181 francs. It was obliged to borrow 12,000 francs to cover its expenses. In its building on the rue Massillon it established a department store and afterwards opened three branches in various parts of the city. It furthermore established eight teen agencies for the sale of bread checks.

At the end of 1899 it included about 6,000 families to whom it furnished bread, beer, linen, dry goods, notions, groceries, etc., and to whom it opened the festival halls, its restaurant and library, its savings bank and its relief funds. We subjoin the table showing the bread sold and net profits of the bakery from the year of starting up to 1899.

1893	200,871	26,767 10
1894	536,552	59,719 69
1895	543,741	73,380 28
1896	726,952	107,676 41	7,182 01
1897	1,375,514	106,951 46	15,354 40
1898	1,638,000	119,094 91	25,416 20
1899	2,819,184	312,745 45	39,069 55

The inventory of the bakery on Nov. 20, 1899, showed assets of 440,415 58 fr., with profits at 167,677 39 francs. This immense work, remember, was started in March, 1892 by only ten workmen.

Today they have a right to be proud of the example they give in their comrades of all countries.

B. JOINING THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Jean Wasemmes is a weaver by trade and lives in Lille. With his slender wages he has to support his wife and four children, pay the rent of his little flat, clothe his nestlings etc. Living is expensive; in spite of rigid economy, the housekeeper has a hard time in making ends meet, and every time that Jean Wasemmes contributes a few cents to the party, his wife reproaches him for giving his children's bread to his political machines.

But one day he hears of the "UNION," and he urges his husband to join it. The application is made, it is accepted by the board of administration which has the sole charge. Jean Wasemmes agrees to supply himself hereafter in the stores of the "UNION," in his own stores, for he has become co-proprietor of all the property of the co-operative by paying the 10th part of a share of 25 francs. Moreover he has given one franc 30 centimes to pay for his entrance fee, his membership card and his pass book. This makes a total of three francs, 30 centimes (not quite 75 cents). Jean Wasemmes easily pays aside this small sum. As for the 25.50 francs which are still due on his share he does not have to disturb himself. He can as he prefers pay the amount at the rate of a franc a month, or let it be deducted from his future profits which are divided every half year. The payments, or the deductions, will be entered on a special page in his pass book.

THE EQUIPMENTS.

By paying 10 cents Jean Wasemmes has become joint owner of the buildings, the material and the goods of the "UNION." He wishes to know more about his new possessions.

In the first place he visits the building in the rue Massillon to which the "UNION" has already removed its bakery as it already has become too small. At present dry goods and clothing of all kinds for the working people are sold there and in another room all the groceries of which a working class household can have need.

The goods are arranged in vast rows of shelving and displayed by saleswomen. Everything is clean, neat and bright, and Jean Wasemmes is satisfied with the feeling that these beautiful equipments belong partly to him and altogether to his party.

At the end of a court he sees an employee of the Co-operative receiving the chests and boxes and piling them up in a large warehouse. At one side, under a shed, the office of the co-operative is being raised. Jean quickly finds that these buildings are very small, since he hears it said that they are no longer large enough for the needs of the "UNION" in spite of the three branches on the rue d'Arras, rue Rubens and La Madeleine.

He learns also that the grocery and dry goods department as well as the bakery are badly crowded in the buildings in the rue d'Arras. He has often paused before the entrance under the sign L'UNION de LILLE, he has observed at the end of a deep court massive buildings which seemed to hide themselves. Now he understands that with a view to the future the co-operative reserved a large space for building on the edge of the street a coffee house, with a store for dry goods and shoes above, and a festival hall on the third floor.

After traversing this large court he stops at the office, where he is enrolled, and enters a store surrounded by the bakery, the cold storage warehouse with a restaurant above it, and the offices. A door is half open, it is the stable, empty for the moment, for the five horses are trotting through the city and suburbs carrying bread to the housekeepers at their homes. But Jean Wasemmes enters the bakery and he is astonished. He expects as in other bakeries to go down into a close and perhaps unclean basement.

He enters however on the ground floor into a well proportioned hall lighted on two sides by high windows. Three great, enormous ovens of brick and iron are arched in one of the walls. Before each of these a baker is waiting for the contents of his oven to be done to the proper turn, while under the broad windows three workmen are tending the kneading machines of the motor which are in a room by themselves.

Jean Wasemmes sees the loaves gradually receiving their proper form from the machines, and he knows that in the white bread which the bourgeois buy, the kneader has mingled his sweat. A large chute empties into the kneading trough the flour which has been cleaned by the mechanical sieve which operates on the floor above in the raising room, into which are poured the several kinds of flour scattered over the solid floor.

Jean hears a great sound of metal behind him. It is a workman who is opening his Horrecker oven and drawing out an enormous iron tray covered with loaves of bread. Jean approaches and sees the baker pushing the hot loaves upon a wooden table from which a comrade takes them and carries them into the cooling room. There, the clerks on porters will take them and carry them off either in wagons or pushing carts. Are not the loaves brushed before delivering them to the consumers? It is unnecessary. The oven is heated by steam pipes hermetically sealed. The furnaces are at the other side beyond the hall; no impurities can get in to the oven.

Each of the three ovens can bake 120 loaves an hour, each weighing over 3 lbs., that is to say, about 120,000 lbs. a week. From June to November, 1899, the average output was over 75,000. The number of co-operators may thus still be increased without risk of shortage. Moreover, room has been reserved for a fourth oven. Nevertheless, when the "UNION" shall have 15 or 16,000 members, the four ovens will not be enough. This is what Jean Wasemmes thinks, for he foresees a great future for his society.

"CIRCULAR NO. 17" AGAIN

"Railroad Trainmen's Journal" Alternately Denounces and Justifies the Circular of the C. & G. W. R. Co., and Asserts That the Article Thereon in the Workers' Call, Tends to Promote "Drunkenness and Dishonesty". A Review of the Criticism. No "Sitting on the Fence", Possible on This Question.

Nothing is more satisfactory to the socialist in his role of expositor of disagreeable truths, than to see those for whose consideration the exposition is given, resent or protest, however feebly, against the unpleasant, though undeniable facts brought forward. It affords an additional opportunity to re-state the incident that caused the irritation, and rub in still harder the bitter and humiliating lesson, not for any malicious pleasure to be derived therefrom, but from the recognition that an unanswerable truth is often a good medium whereby to sting and lash the victim into taking action to make it no longer possible.

Some time ago the Workers' Call published an article under the title of "Circular No. 17". It dealt with an order issued by the Chicago and Great Western Railway, in which the employees of that company were forbidden under pain of discharge from drinking, gambling or failing to pay their bills. We may state here that the original circular with the signature of the superintendent attached, can be produced if necessary.

The issue of the paper in which it appeared was widely circulated among railway employees in Chicago and elsewhere and so far as we know, (and by the bye we made particular inquiries) has been universally endorsed by all who read it. However, it seems that the attention of the editor of the "Railroad Trainmen's Journal" has been called to the matter, and in the current issue of that paper he criticizes the Workers' Call article for leaving as he alleges, the impression that the ideal of Socialism is a society in which drunkenness and dishonesty would be the normal state of affairs. This matter will be referred to farther on.

In order that our readers may see for themselves, the hopeless confusion through which the editor of the Railroad Trainmen's Journal flounders until he reaches the "supposed ideal" of drunkenness and dishonesty inculcated by the Workers' Call, we reproduce herewith the major portion of his article:

"The circular is one of the kind that had been suppressed and suppressed of being given the prominence of revealing the official sanction of the company, for while no reasonable employee will demand the right to indulge, to excess, in intoxicants or refuse to pay his just debts when he can, the fact that the employer makes his decree absolute and unreserved, smacks too much of the imperious assumption of power that he feels he holds because he has the whip hand, which in this instance means the ability to enforce because there are so many men willing to accept employment under the conditions imposed and who would feel perfectly justified in doing so because public sentiment will be with the order and no railroad man will ever be upheld by the public in his demand to be allowed to drink liquor and not pay his just debts."

This is one of the questions, however, that are not new. Many railroad companies have for years been following the same policy, but few of them have drawn the lines quite so closely as the superintendent at Dubuque, Ia. There is no question but that his order taken away from his employees their freedom of action and makes them the wards of the Chicago & Great Western Railway Company; that the circular was unnecessary and irritating cannot be denied, for it makes it appear that the employees of the system, or of his division at least, were drunkards and dead beats, and that drastic measures were warranted for the good of the service.

"The Journal feels that the Superintendent has committed an error in his public manifesto that does not redound to his credit, nor add to his reputation for prudent judgment. That there was an employer who needed reprimanding, may be true, but to issue a general statement of the kind quoted, is not fair to the average man in the service. Men feel they have a right to be trusted and that they violate the confidence that should be placed in them."

The Workers' Call is a socialist publication, and it has made much of the circular, supposedly to the advantage of the principles it represented. It said: "The power which the company possesses to regulate the personal habits of its employees is a gift from the employees themselves." This is true, but the circular has been based on the fact that drunkenness and men who will not pay their debts. If socialism in its most advanced form controlled, would it mean that drunkenness and dishonesty would be the order of affairs? Hardly that. And yet the Workers' Call leaves that condition as a supposedly ideal one and to be secured by the adoption of the socialist theory. The assertions made by the Workers' Call are as far from the true ideals of socialism as the order of the superintendent is from the decency and fairness that the employer owes to his employee. Socialism does not encourage drunkenness and dishonesty, etc., etc."

The editor of the "Journal" doesn't at first glance defend the circular. On the contrary he "denounces" it vigorously as an "imperious assumption of power" an "error that does not redound to the credit or add to the reputation" of the superintendent who issued it, and charges the latter also with a lack of "decency and fairness". The Workers' Call knowing that the employees also resented it, merely went to the root of the whole matter by pointing out from whence the power of the company to circulate and enforce compliance to its order, was derived—and the editor of the "Journal" admits that its diagnosis is correct. The Workers' Call neither justified nor condemned the circular in question, but the editor of the Journal tries to do both, and only succeeds in producing confusion worse confounded.

He thinks the circular should never have appeared, because "no reasonable employee will demand the right to indulge to excess in intoxicating liquors." But we will call his attention to the fact that the circular says nothing whatever about "excess". It not only absolutely forbids any "indulgence" whatever, but states plainly that any employee found in the vicinity of places where liquor is sold, will be peremptorily dismissed "for drinking". It is not a question of much, little, or none whatever. Here is the clause. If the editor can read into it any other interpretation than the above, then the English language is a delusion and a snare.

"In future any employee known to drink, or whose breath smells of liquor, or who is seen in or around a saloon, a combination saloon, a combination bar, or a combination bar, and whose name will be immediately dismissed, regardless of record or age in service, and no excuse or explanation will be accepted. The service letters and references to other roads of such men will state 'DISMISSED FOR DRINKING'."

If the editor of the Journal can twist this plain statement into a prohibition of excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquor, all we can say is that his ingenuity is more remarkable than his honesty.

Again the editor thinks that no reasonable employee will "refuse to pay his just debts". Let him look through the circular and see if he can find the word "just" therein. He cannot; indeed if he could, it would make little difference, but the word is not there. Here is the clause.

"Any employee, garnished or compelled (as an account of unpaid debts, will not be retained, unless able to prove to the satisfaction of the superintendent that delay in payment is unavoidable, and not due to disolute or extravagant habits."

Anything about "just" debts there Mr. Editor? Or if it be admitted that "just" is inferred, who is to be the judge of the justice—the superintendent or the employee?

The editor of the "Journal" asserts also that "public sentiment" will be with the order, or in other words that "public sentiment" will endorse what he (the editor) brands as a discreditable manifesto "lacking in fairness and decency. If this is so, why is the circular denounced? It is not rank bias, prejudice against that fearsome bogie of trades unionism—"public sentiment"?

But the order "takes away from the employees their freedom of action and makes them wards of the C. & G. W. R. Co." which the editor of the Railroad Trainmen's Journal. Why undoubtedly it does, but doesn't "public sentiment" approve of it? The facts are that the editor first read the order and condemned it, then misconstrued (as we have shown) and justified it, and finally dragged in the phantom, "public opinion," in order to show if possible that the corporation alone was not laying on the lash.

But does the editor think that "freedom of action" is a good thing for the employees? No; he has the idea that it is necessary to have capitalist masters to lay down such rules (although in another place he says they are not necessary) for he states his belief that their abolition by the method the Workers' Call suggested, would open the way for an era of drunkenness and dishonesty. That was the impression which the article produced upon him.

He says, after admitting the truth, that the power of capitalism is a gift, from the workingmen, that the employees of the railroads have themselves denounced drunkenness and men who will not pay their debts". Well, it seems then that if this is so, neither the company nor "public sentiment" believes that their denunciation is in good faith, for the latter will uphold the order that the former insists upon.

They both look upon the employees as possible drunkards and rogues, and the editor first agrees and then disagrees with their view, and keeps on saying all through his article, until at the end it is impossible to say what opinion he holds. It is through no lack of intelligence that he becomes entangled in this labyrinth of confusion. Upon such a question as this there is no middle ground. The circular must either be wholly accepted, or wholly rejected if any distinct conclusion is to be arrived at.

And it was in this manner that the Workers' Call handled the subject. It said not one word of "Socialist ideals" in the article; it merely pointed out the manner in which the working class could free themselves from the humiliation of capitalist class rule of which this circular was a specimen. If the editor of the "Railroad Trainmen's Journal" thinks that such action would lead to general drunkenness and dishonesty, he is welcome to his opinion, but we beg leave to decline any part in assisting him to form it. Let him explain to his subscribers why he thinks so much of them. He owes them an explanation—the Workers' Call does not. It holds that the man who knows enough to intelligently resent the conditions of capitalist class rule at the ballot box, does not do so because he wants to become a drunkard and a knave. He feels quite able to take care of his own morals without any assistance from a class who under Grand jurists illustrate how class conscious the capitalists are. By some mysterious law of chance the foremen of the grand jury and the majority of the members are so eminently respectable that none of our best people would hesitate to associate with them. Business men perform this patriotic duty as a personal sacrifice or retired capitalists serve their country in this capacity. Considering how small a per cent of the whole people constitute this class it is really surprising the number of them who get drawn on jury, when one does not stop to consider that there is an object in it.

"Billie" Loeffler is reported to have said that local democracy is comprised of bridge tenders and that it will not be successful until it pushes these men to the rear and puts business men to the front. It would seem as if bridge tenders and other laborers would know their places by this time. They are supposed to do the work and get in the voice and let the business men take the glory and the profits that go along with it.

What does it profit the laboring man whether Burke and Collier are thrown down or not. If they get out, a new set of bosses get in who ride on the backs of the laborers just the same. You cannot purify a corrupt social system by tossing off one or two of its members any more than you can cure a sick man by cutting off his big toe. Neither can you make men ever as change human nature by putting one man out and another man in. Corruption in public service will only stop when there is no incentive for a man to be dishonest.

It would appear that some workingmen will have to be literally kicked into politics. With all of the machinery of government in the hands of a class that is hostile to them at every point in the economic field, they will in the majority of cases fail to see that their interests on election day is in any way different from the interest of the boss. Workingmen do not in French cities controlled by Socialists the public and city government help them to win a strike. The capitalist papers never tell them and they do not have time to read a socialist paper.

Mrs. Roosevelt says that a woman can properly clothe herself on $300 a year. Perhaps she has been reading some of statistics and has found out that many women have to clothe themselves for less than that whether they can

Isn't it surprising when every man who wants to work can get work at at least $1.25 a day that so many perverse men should be out robbing banks?

Associated Press reporters at Cincinnati have not been fired because they allowed the little slow socialist weeklies to "hoop" them on the news that the socialist candidate for governor of Ohio had lost his job on account of his politics.

None of the postal clerks are suspected of the recent post office robbery. Working sixteen hours a day seven days of the week under our beautiful example of state socialism, they did not have time no matter what may have been their inclinations.

Defunct bank locks in the east are itching on to business methods. By stealing a big sum and promising to return half of the swag they escape prosecution.

Urban business men are anxious to have the island annexed to the United States, so fearful that they may begin on a plan to disenfranchise the colored laboring men of the island. The poor devils who fought for liberty will get stuck if it is a capitalist government gives a check at it.

Progress of the Trusts

The astonishingly rapid formation of trusts now going on both in this country and Europe, is one of the most striking and significant movements of our time. It means nothing less than the reorganization of the business of the world. There is an old saying that Rome was not built in a day, and the business of a whole country or the world cannot be reorganized in a week, or a month of a year. The rapidity with which the combination of great industries has gone on for the last three or four years, however, is simply surprising.

Any one who, five or six years ago, had ventured to predict a movement of this magnitude as near at hand, would have been considered almost crazy. But the movement was foreseen and predicted by socialists a generation ago, and they look upon these trusts as a striking fulfillment of their predictions. And as while many people view the combined To complete the deal $75,000,000 of bonds will be issued. It is stated that great economies in operating expenses will be made. The new securities to be issued largely exceed in amount those being taken up. In other words, a large amount of "water" is being projected, but it is claimed that the economies effected will enable the company to pay the interest on them all. The reader will notice, however, that the benefits resulting from the superior economy of operation goes to pay dividends on watered stock, and not to the public in lower fares, nor to the employees in increased wages. Thus a larger load is piled onto the backs of the people. They can carry it until they get tired—and then what?

The region of low barometer and the storm center will be in the vicinity of the trusts. Keep your eye on them. The storm is not ready to burst yet, but it is gathering.

The average tax-dodger doesn't care how the "yellow journals" get after him. He knows they will include him amongst the "good citizens" who put up capitalist candidates to be voted for by the working class on election day.

THE PARTY PRESS

Inducement to Readers to Secure Subscriptions to The Workers' Call.

The executive committee in order to keep the out card account straightened out have found it necessary to have each account closed up at the end of each month, so in the future all cards issued will be limited to the last of the month. Members having cards on which the time limit has expired can exchange them for December cards, and those sold must be settled for. All members are expected to get cards from their branch secretary, as no account will be carried at the call office. As a special inducement to all to hustle, the executive committee will give to the member selling the most yearly sub cards by December 1st, $10.00, to the next highest

To the next highest $5.00
To all get to work and let's see who will be the lucky three.

We are anxious to circulate the Call as much as possible as we know of no better way to convert people to socialism than by supplying them with good socialist literature. We will therefore sell to barbershops, hotels, restaurants and other public places bundles of ten or more Calls at one-half cent each. If you know of some places where you can place a few bundles go after them.

If when in such places you will ask the proprietor for a socialist paper and get a few others to ask for them you won't have much trouble to get him to order a bundle. "A word to the wise."

Should you be able to devote all or part of your time to securing subscriptions call in and talk it over with Comrade Tail.

Co-operative Prosper.

A trial inventory by Comrade Higgins last Saturday developed the fact that we now carry in stock 163 distinct articles and also that the project has been prosperous and had already accumulated a small surplus. It is encouraging to know that while many retailers have to resort to falsification, adulteration and short weights to keep head above water, the Co-operative managed, owned, conducted and run by honest-in-all-respects principles can prosper and slowly but surely forge ahead. Our coal deliveries on some days requires three men and extra horses and wagons. We started with 25 varieties in the grocery department—we have now more than quadrupled that feature. Everything that is backed up by socialist cannot, should not, must not fail in its object. We have nearly 100 members—we want 500 co-operators—then Chicago can lift its head. Are you a member? Not well, telephone—or take the first car to headquarters, 129 South Western Avenue, get enrolled and have orders for goods.

Marx's Capital.

To prepare yourselves for arguments against capitalist economists there is no better book than MARX'S CAPITAL, and as said book cannot be bought in this country, the Workers' Call has imported a number of copies of the new English edition, beautifully bound, well gotten up and large type. The price is $2.00. Post office orders taken and bank sent by mail. Send to Workers' Call, 24 N. Clark St.

Minneapolis socialists have established permanent headquarters at 122 Nicollet Avenue. They also have a free library and reading room, open every day. G. H. Lockwood is the organizer.

Agitation and organization are quite necessary but a

Propaganda Suggestions

The popular member is not always the one that says the most.

Always remember that organized systematic propaganda is the most effective.

An organization is a machine. No machine can work well with all the wheels running different ways.

It is intended that new ideas will be presented in this column each week. If you have any, send them in.

The Workers' Call has an agent in one of the southern states, who is a woman, seventy-five years old. "Nuff said."

The best propaganda material is the party press. The party paper "comes in without knocking and stays without offense."

The problem of how to spread socialism is much easier than the problem of how to get every socialist to help do the spreading.

It is very poor policy to give literature away, excepting, of course, sample copies of the paper, even if you have money to burn, as it is seldom read. Either sell it or loan it.

The purpose of this column is to suggest effective methods of propaganda. Comrades are especially requested to send in any suggestions they may have. Address: Propaganda Dept.

A queer thing about socialism: If a man is attacked it makes him discontented, if he is discontented it encourages him. It might be well to bear this in mind when talking with your friends.

There is no good reason why a business meeting should drag out for two or three hours and it would seem if parliamentary rules were strictly followed. Long, tedious business meetings kill the interest of the members.

Never waste any time arguing with a man who won't be convinced. But, whenever you find a man who is willing to learn something about socialism, stay right with him until you lead him. Then keep at him until you have him working to convert others, teach him how to do this. This is the work that counts.

Branch No. 1 of the 97th ward has started a card system, the object of which is to secure and keep a systematic record of the name, address, nationality, age and politics of every voter in their vicinity. This requires a great deal of work but it will undoubtedly prove very valuable in arranging precinct work.

The twenty-fifth ward have found the following plan very effective. The comrades have a fund with which they purchase a large number of three months subscriptions to the Workers' Call, which are sent to voters in their ward, the names taken from the polling list. When the three months have expired, a committee calls and endeavors to secure their subscription. It is said over 50 percent of the number renew.

To make an organization as perfect as possible, every member should do that work which he is best adapted to do, but every member should work. If there are members in your branch who do nothing for socialism except vote the ticket, call on them, get acquainted with them and find out why. Two to one you will find it is because he doesn't know of anything he can do. Don't let him get away from you until you find something for him to do then will suit him.

The Appeal to Reason is getting into effect a plan similar to that suggested by Comrade Bard several months ago for house to house distribution of the Workers' Call. The comrades chip in enough to take a bundle of the papers every week, which are distributed to a certain number of persons regularly for a couple of months, then they are called upon to subscribe. The Appeal advises that the person distributing, keep the matter a secret from those to whom the paper is given. It is suggested that the comrades make much difference. Socialism is becoming so prevalent that there is no necessity of beating around the bush. However, the plan of organized distribution is a very good one. The Appeal probably hasn't a patent on it as the comrades should lose no time in ordering a bundle of Call regularly.

Debate.

The North Side clubs have arranged for a debate between Comrade A. M. Simon, speaking for the Socialist party—and A. Mack speaking for the anarchism at Meador's Hall, Sedgewick and North Avenue, on Thursday, Dec. 6, 8 p. m. The subject will be Socialism vs. Anarchy. Admission to hall will be by tickets, which are 15 cents each, good for one person. If arranged in advance—and 25 cents a person at the door. Tickets can be had of the Comrades H. Morris, R. F. Lindgren, G. A. Hanson, at 24 N. Clark Street or of Comrade A. M. Simon at 24 Fifth Avenue, room 40.

Have you ever thought for subscription?

ARE THEY CLASS CONSCIOUS?

"WE DO NOT CARE TO DISCUSS THIS SUBJECT AT ALL BUT WE DESIRE TO TERMINATE YOUR CONNECTION WITH THIS COMPANY IMMEDIATELY, AS WE ARE POSITIVE THAT IT WOULD NOT BE FOR THE BEST INTEREST OF THIS COMPANY TO RETAIN IN ITS EMPLOY A PERSON HOLDING THE VIEWS OF A SOCIALIST OR WHO BELONGS TO ANY PARTY OR ORGANIZATION WHICH AIMS TO DESTROY THE CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH IT IS POSSIBLE FOR INSTITUTIONS LIKE OUR OWN TO EXIST AND PROSPER."

thorough understanding of the principles of socialism is indispensable.

The Carpenters' Union of Brantford, Ont., recently instructed their delegates to the trades and labor council to support the nomination of a Socialist candidate in South Brant, for the coming provincial elections.

Father McGrady is having as hard a time as did Comrade Wilshire, to get anyone to debate with him. He has written a book called "Unaccepted Challenges."

For: Wayne, Ind., has organized a local with sixty-one charter members.

Terre Haute is now the state headquarters of the S. P. in Indiana.

A complete county ticket has been nominated by the comrades in Omaha.

Local Denver, Colo., has sixty-five active members. They have lectures every week, which are well attended. They recently nominated a full county ticket. There are two women among the nominees: Mrs. M. H. Fox for County Treasurer, and Miss Nora L. Brooks for County Superintendent of Schools.

For the Citizens Alliance in Seattle. They held their convention in a monster tent when refused the use of halls.

News of the Movement

In Montville, Conn., the Socialist party nominee got over 15 per cent of the votes in an election held recently. At the presidential election of 1900 there were no Socialist votes.

Comrade Geo. E. Bigelow is making a speaking tour in Pennsylvania and New York. He is speaking to crowded houses everywhere.

Charities issued last week by the National Committee of the S. P. Illinois, Nebraska, New York, Oregon, Boulder, Colo., Colorado Springs, Harrison, Kans., Glenda Springs, Kans.; Portland, Me.; Ruth, Mo.; Exeter, N. H.; Manchester, N. H.; Cheyenne, Wyo.

The Socialists of Steuben County, N. Y., held a county convention at Corning and nominated a full county and legislative ticket.

Aurora, Mo., organized with thirty-four charter members.

The N. E. C. has issued charters to the following locals in Indiana: Diamond, Indianapolis Columbus and Huntington.

Comrade Strickland reports the organization of two new locals at Whiting and Waukegan, Ind.

Elwood, Ind., will soon organize a local of nearly 100 members.

Indianapolis Socialists cast 112 votes at a recent city election.

Comrade J. Stitt Wilson has more than he can attend to in California. The comrades there are calling on him for at least two speeches every day.

San Francisco comrades have started a co-operative bakery.

Local Redlands, Cal., has bought and paid for a printing press upon which to print their organ, the Undercurrent.

In Montceau-les-Mines, France, Comrade Bouvier has been elected to the Chamber of Deputies by a vote of 11,415, out of 21,151.

Denmark.—The Scandinavian Trade Union Congress, held in Copenhagen, heard the following interesting reports: Denmark: At the end of 1900, the Socialist party was represented by 34 deputies, 2 senators, 558 communal councilors, 54 municipal councilors, 76 members of the tax committee. Copenhagen alone has 17 Socialist councilors. Forty-three thousand Socialist votes were cast, and in Copenhagen $3,000 for the election expenses were collected in one single day. Social-Demokraten has a daily circulation of 46,000 copies, and the aggregate daily sale of Socialist papers amounts to 100,000 copies.

The Michigan State Federation of Labor was certainly explicit enough in the resolutions passed recently at Saginaw. The class struggle was clearly defined—the remedy explained and a resolution passed forbidding members of the Federation accepting nominations of capitalist parties.

Socialist Sangerbunds Succeed

On last Sunday a large crowd of pleasure seekers gathered in Brand's Hall to listen to a splendid concert program which was afterwards followed by a dance. The entertainment and ball was given by the Socialist Sangerbund, it being their tenth annual festival.

The concert was opened by Richard's Union Orchestra which rendered in splendid style an overture by Von Suppe, which was followed by a fine rendition of a German chorus.

Students from the Koch Academy of Music then gave a musical selection on mandoline, strings and violin, after which Mrs. Hank delivered a recitation in German. Both these efforts were vigorously applauded.

An acrobatic performance by the four Johnsons followed and was also well received.

The second part of the program opened with a title which was usually well sung by Comrades Dose, Griffling and Reithusen, after which a comic duo by Comrades Dose and Reithusen was received with outbursts of laughter.

The Socialist Sangerbund and the Leidsdelft Freiheit then closed with a massed chorus entitled, "A Song of Freedom," and the floor was cleared for dancing, which lasted till early morning.

All who were present had a most enjoyable time, the arrangements being carried out without the slightest hitch. The next entertainment given by the German comrades is certainly covered of still greater success.

The utility of Booker T. Washington doesn't seem to be recognized as it should be by Southern journalists. They have not yet been educated up to the level of understanding how President Roosevelt can use him in his business, but the spread of manufacturing industries in the South will ultimately make the matter plain to them.

One Edward Beattie, a Typographical Union striker, is now in jail at Indianapolis for contempt of court in disobeying the injunction issued by Judge Harbo. Beattie is a hard-headed fellow who is worse. An injunction, may be the means of sending a man to jail, but it cannot make a man a Socialist. Beattie is there.

All comrades having tickets or money for the West side picnic held at Bergman's Grove are invited to settle at once at The Workers' Call office.

Three Principles of Socialist Philosophy

Extracts from a Paper Read Before the Women's Auxiliary of the Socialist Party by Mrs May Waldea Kerr.

It is a fact which has come to be accepted by all intelligent, thinking people, that we each and all are formed by the conditions under which we live, or, to say it in another way, we are the products of our environment. That is, a baby born of Indian parents in a settlement of Indians only, will grow up to be an Indian, and will fish, hunt, fight or do other things just as he is taught to do or as he sees others doing. And he will keep on doing the way the people around him do until he goes to another place where he is obliged to do differently, or until something happens which makes him change his way of living. If the Indian baby, on the other hand, should be taken away from his parents and the place where he is born, and raised in a family where he could be taught to read and write, where he could be taken to see different parts of the world, and to live always with people of luxury and refinement, he would be a different man from what he would have been if he had been left with the Indians. In the first place he would have been a fisher or hunter; in the second he might be a lawyer, banker or merchant. Or if he had grown up near a factory he might be a mill-hand. In any case he would have been formed by the way in which he lived.

Now this is one of the fundamental principles of socialism—that people are formed and changed by the way in which they live and work—or do not work, as the case may be—to get their bread and butter. This first principle we call "Economic Determinism," or the "Materialistic Conception of History."

Not only is the race changed by the conditions with which it surrounds itself, but everything else is changed, the family life, religion, morals, politics, law, philosophy, art and literature—all are changed. It will be quite impossible for me to trace these institutions and show how they are changed according to surrounding conditions, but let me instance an example of the growth of morals. In the days of barbarism, the safety of the tribes depended upon having a large body of strong warriors who could fight the other tribes that warred upon them. When living was scanty the old feeble people and useless girl babies were killed that there might be plenty of food for the warriors, and that the tribe might not be troubled with them in going from place to place. This was considered "right" and moral. However, when food became more plentiful and the tribes more peaceful, it became a "wrong" thing to kill off the helpless babies and old people.

There are hundreds of instances which might be given to show that the morals of a people change with their surrounding conditions, and I could show you how religion, law, government and other institutions have been changed by the ruling class from period to period, but I must leave all of this for you to study out for yourselves. We will take it for granted that you understand this first principle of socialism—that we are what our conditions make us—and see what connection it has with the rest of our problem. To do this I will not go further back than the time of the establishment of the Factory system of industry. When machinery was invented for doing the things men had done by hand, it became too expensive for each man to own a machine. He was obliged to go to the factory to get work in order to live. There were many workers then thrown together in the factory towns and there was so much competition between them for a chance to work that they could be hired very cheaply, so cheaply in fact, that the people could scarcely live. Women were no longer needed at home to spin and weave since it could be done cheaper at a factory than they could afford to do it, so they went to the factory too. And as it is a well-known fact that women can and will live more cheaply than men, the women were given a place at the machines and the men had to go elsewhere for work. The machines were perfected still further until they were so simple that a child could attend them, and as a child can work much cheaper than a man or woman, the children were hired for less and the women were kept to run only those machines which the children couldn't, and men were kept to do only the work which the women and children were not able to do. In this way the terrible evils of the factory system have arisen. "The horrible sufferings of the women and children in the early days of the factory system were such as to make it no race of slaves was ever forced to undergo before or since." This is much the condition of things as we find them today.

All writers and thinkers agree that the world was never so productive or so well supplied with the comforts of life as it is today; and yet never before in the history of the world did the unknown or workmen receive so much a proportion of what they produced. The tools which used to belong to the workmen were simple, easily handled, and cheap. Now the tools have been changed into vast machines which are the wonder of the age. I stand upon the top of a mountain and am inspired by the beauty of nature and I stand in the presence of the Creator. I stand in a factory before one of those wonderful machines and have the same reverence for the inventive genius of mankind. Not one man, mind you, invented that machine. The first invention was very crude, but another man improved upon it, and another added something, another, and another, each benefiting by the knowledge gained by the ones before him, until the machine stands before us, seemingly in its perfection, doing in some cases the same amount of work when run by a child of ten, that fifty men used to do. As these machines are not the product of one man's brain, but of all society which has gone before, it is not right that they should belong to one man or set of men, but to all society—to all the people—since it is necessary for all the people to have them in order to live. In the feudal age LAND was the necessity, since it was an agricultural age. Now MACHINERY is the necessity, since everything is produced and exchanged by machinery. The serfs of the feudal age overthrew the land-owners in order to get hold of the means of production. In England this overthrow was for the most part peaceful, but in France it brought on the terrible revolution of 1793.

If each man or woman who works in that factory could have an equal share in the product of it, you can see at a glance that they would get a better living than they now get. But now they get only one-fifth of what they make—the factory owners get the rest, which goes for rent, interest, repairs, etc., and PROFITS. If there were no profits the factory wouldn't be run. To make this a little clearer, let us divide 100 leaves of bread among 100 people according to the system under which we are now living. Twelve people out of a hundred get 55 leaves of bread and 88 people out of a hundred get 11 leaves.

But the point I am trying to make is this: that because this machinery is owned by a few men who do not themselves run it, they necessarily make the men who DO run it, dependent upon them. This private ownership in the means of production is one of the things which socialists object to. All men and women have a right to work, and a right to the product of their work. This as I have said they do not get. And this brings us to the second fundamental principle of Socialism: that the workers do not get all that they produce, but that it is wrongfully taken away from them in order to make profits. This principle we call the "Law of Surplus Value." This surplus value is the key to the whole present economic organization of society. In order to make this matter plain let us take for an example a cotton mill. Here say, 50 people work for a year to make a certain amount of cotton cloth. This cloth is sold and from the money received is deducted the cost of raw materials and wear and tear of machinery. The balance is divided into two portions, one of which is given to the laborers in the form of wages, the other to the mill owners in the form of profits called dividends. Of the total value produced the laborers receive about 51 per cent, the owners 49 per cent, while the remaining 14 per cent is for expenses. That is, of each one hundred dollars, 33 is pure profit, or the SURPLUS VALUE. While if the working people could receive this amount which goes to the owners who never see the factory, they would receive 100 instead of 51 as they now do. Looking at it from the standpoint of the capitalist, it is a very good thing for him that he can get this surplus value without working for it. Looking at it from the standpoint of the worker, who does everything and who is being continually ground down by competition with his own class, it is a very unjust thing. We see then that the interests of capital and labor instead of being the same, as politicians try to make us believe, are really opposite. What is good for the capitalist is not good for the laborer. This being so, it is easy to see why there should be a struggle between the two. They belong to separate classes, and a recognition of this struggle between the opposing classes is the third fundamental principle of Socialism. You can see from what I have told you that Socialists do not make the classes—the private ownership of the means of production does that. Neither do the Socialists create the struggle—the classes make the struggle by each one trying to get the most of the product which is made. Socialists RECOGNIZE the struggle. They say that there is one, and they point out the cause of it, and they show how by abolishing ALL classes, this struggle for getting the most of the bread and butter, will cease. I do not mean to say that human nature will be changed in the twinkling of an eye and we will be all equal intellectually, and the world will be a place of eternal bliss for no Socialist ever contends that for a minute, but what we DO say is that by giving every man, woman and child an equal chance with every other human being to earn a living, and the full amount of all that he earns, all classes, economically speaking, will be abolished.

Now, how do we propose to do it? By helping every worker to understand that his or her interests are the same as of every other worker. And by workingmen—anyone who does either hard work or brain work, no matter whether he is a book-keeper or a hod carrier, whether he is black or white, whether he is Indian or Chinaman, is equal or Christian. The cause of the workers is the same—the world over, and they are fast beginning to find it out. They have begun to organize themselves into a political party—the Socialist Party—which is international. But why go into politics? Isn't that a dangerous thing to do? Why not talk only about brotherly love, and try to persuade each other, or arbitrate or something of that sort? someone asks. Because, in all history there has been a record where the ruling class gave up its privileges in favor of a lower class. The ruling class has always framed laws, made constitutions, formed religions and morals, influenced art and literature in its own behalf. Public opinion has today been formed so well through the press, the pulpit, the schools and literature, in the interests of the capitalists, that to say a word against that class is in some places considered shockingly bad manners.

It is impossible to abolish the trust or to regulate monopolies. These combinations of capital—trusts, I say OF CAPITAL, which is a very different thing from CAPITALISM—are the legitimate result of industrial evolution, and have come to stay. We want them, but we want them owned by the people. We do not want them owned by a capitalist government under the name of State Socialism, but we want them administered by a government of all the people in the name of Equality and of Eternal Justice.

In order to do this it will first be necessary to create a public sentiment in favor of it. And in this work women are the best helpers. Mothers especially want their children to have better advantages than they themselves had. They want them to be educated and to have time to enjoy themselves. To educate them, and then let them be shut up in a shop or factory from sunrise until sunset would be one of the most cruel things possible.

Under Socialism—the factories and all other instruments of production would still be run, but with this difference: everybody that wanted work could get it, but the hours would be shortened, then so that men would be ever-worked, and all would have as much as they needed. "To the laborer the full product of his labor," is the maxim of Socialism. Nowadays one member of the leisure class receives as much as 18,000 workers receive. In this justice?

We never expect to make a Socialist out of a person who is satisfied with his surroundings. He must feel the injustice of the present system himself, or realize it through his neighbor's sufferings. If a person has not enough sympathy with his downtrodden brother and sister to help take this burden from their backs, he is not worthy of the name of Christian. "Even as ye do it unto the least of these, ye do it unto me." No higher duty can be performed in this world than that of being your brother's keeper; to shield him from oppression, to liberate him from his wage-slavery, and to give him an opportunity equal to that of the most favored. To ministers, lawyers, doctors, editors and teachers, or in fact, to anyone capable of forming public sentiment, this call comes louder and stronger. It is a work which honors any church or any worker in it. Many church people are making the mistake of supposing that Socialism is a movement which will destroy the church. It is a movement which will destroy the hypocrisy which exists so abundantly today in the church and out of it, as it will also destroy every other evil which is perpetuated by the capitalist system. Want, ignorance, idleness, suicides, divorces, desertions, prostitutions, illegitimacy, all of these social evils have their roots in the system which makes one human being dependent upon another for the means of living. I cannot denounce too forcibly this system of capitalism, nor plead eloquently or earnestly enough for the system of Socialism which shall bring into actual practice the Golden Rule, "Do unto others as ye would have them do unto you."

ON THE ROAD TO FAME

De Leon's Direful Prophecies Attract the Notice of a German Socialist Organ.

A modern connoisseur of human nature has said, "If you want to become famous, talk as loud as possible about something you don't understand." The key to this paradox lies in a curious psychological fact. The people who know something about the subject will call the man who knows nothing about it, a fool and thus advertise him; and those who have never given the subject a thought, take it for granted that the man who talks so loud and assertively about it, must know more than anybody else.

Daniel de Leon has been successfully following this advice and is now on the road to fame. We gladly add our mite in swelling the peculiar renown which he covets, by reproducing the following clipping from the "VOLKSSTIMME" of Magdeburg Germany.

Professor De Leon, the leading fund of spirit of the American trades union movement, has made a ludicrous exhibition of himself. A capitalist paper in New York, THE EVENING POST, had published an article from its Berlin correspondent in which a report was given of the German socialist party and some of its recent internal affairs. The article treated especially of some well-known moot points debated by Edward Bernstein. Of course, the indispensable prophecy was not missing which always appears in the capitalist press a few weeks before the national congress and predicts the downfall of the party by a hopeless breakup. Well, the German comrades know this old song, and they also know its author. We have become used to the same sort of press in the regular "breakups." But the year the overthrow of an irreconcilable dissolution of the German socialist party seems to be a prearranged certainty, for now, as the example of the New York Evening Post shows, the American capitalists are taking on to prophesying the death of the German labor movement. With the full power of their knowledge, they unite their Cassandra howls to those of their transatlantic colleagues. And in order to sustain the old prophecy, we hear that the Porten, an American socialist recruit, Daniel de Leon, now joins the crowd and helps to spread the dreadened lie, sends a "voluntary" letter to the "Volksstimme" shaking his head. For the introduction to the clipping from the Evening Post, he says in the Weekly People, his organ (the article from the Evening Post is reproduced here because it gives a fairly correct picture of events that are imminent in the camp of the German Socialist Democracy.)

Hereupon the brave Daniel denounces the terrible blow to the "traitor deserters" Bernstein—please don't overlook the fact that we are quoting from the professor's dictionary of personal invectives—and in his surprising ignorance he commits the very typical mistake of exchanging the men interested in the controversy (Kautsky versus Bernstein).

In conclusion he says translated from the German back into the English, no copy of D. L.'s organ being on hand: "the phantasmagoria of the extreme Marxists (the term used by the Evening Post) are not to be taken lightly, neither in Germany nor in America. Hence we have a D. L. P. here (he refers to his own sect) and shall have one there. THE KAUTSKY WILL BE WHIPPED BACK INTO THE BANK AND FILE OF THE PARTY OR OUT OF THE PARTY."

Very good, indeed. That is a declaration, which will cheer the hearts of the Kautsky's and Edward Bernstein at the same time and cause them to split their sides with laughter. As to the prophecy of the professor that there will be a socialist labor party in Germany—one like his, of course, we should like to ask: Soon? How soon? The little joker does not tell what does he plan; this organizer, who has accomplished so much in political, social and trade-union disorganization? Probably the conquest of German socialism by his party. May the comrades of the old home look out; the boy Daniel is becoming dangerous!

There is nothing like becoming famous. If De Leon aspires to the distinction of being the clown of the whole socialist show, why shouldn't we assist him? I hope he will appreciate my work in his behalf.

ERNEST UNTERMANN.

Stag Party.

On Saturday, Nov. 2, a stag party, and smoker will be given at the Temple for the benefit of The Workers' Call. A long and interesting program will be "reproduced," consisting of short speeches by local party officers, songs and athletic performances.

The Twenty-first Annual Convention of the Federation of Labor will be held at St. Thomas College Hall in the city of Scranton, Pa., on December 5th, 1901.

A "local capitalist and electric railway builder" from Indiana has been lost for over a month and nobody knows whether he is dead or alive, but strange to say, the electric railroads in which he was interested, are still running as usual.

We notice that Capitalist Cudahy didn't throw the old gag of "nothing to arbitrate" into Pat Crowe. It only works with the working class, and as Pat never trained with them perhaps Mr. Cudahy knew that it didn't apply in his case.

At a meeting of the Illinois Central stockholders it is reported that several section hands ate together with Mr. Astor and several other millionaires. As there are no classes in this country his rather strange how much space was given to this incident in the capitalist press.

Shoes produced by American machinery are being poured into England in such quantities that—that every man, woman and child in the country are well shod. You might think so, but such is not the result. Not at all. The result is that thousands of British shoemakers, rendered desperate by starvation, are demanding admission into the workhouses. Funny, isn't it? But that's capitalism.

"Bernstein and the Socialist Program" will be the subject of a lecture at the Socialist Hall 703 W. 43rd St. and Comrade Ernest Untermaun will be the speaker.

THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Translated for the Workers' Call from "Maison Du Co-operateur" 8 clialists."

The Sale of Bread
The new member (who had just been inspecting the Co-operative bakery) was anxious to taste this magnificent bread at once and he tried to buy a loaf at the sales counter in the court. But the clerk refused his money, the bread could only be paid for with checks, and these were sold at a window close by. Jean Wasmemes asked for 10 francs worth, which would last him a little more than a week. The clerk passed out to him at once 20 checks representing 20 three-lb. loaves and then 20 other checks of a different shape which should serve as a receipt at the end of the week for the 20 loaves which had been bought.

Then Jean was enabled to exchange a check for one of the beautiful loaves. He learned, moreover, that the delivery man of his district would visit his house every day and deliver to the housekeeper as many loaves as she would return purchase checks for.

Sale of other Articles

As for the other articles, he had to go over to the department store on the rue Mauboult or one of the three branches. The co-operator pays for these directly in money. Let us suppose that the housekeeper is in need of thread, needles, or ribbon. She sends her little girl with her pass book to the counters of the department store. The saleswoman writes in duplicate in her check book the number of the co-operator and the name and the price of the objects bought. She detaches one of the coupons, which is sent to the cashier, who enters up the amount of the purchase on the co-operator's pass book and also on his own book.

The Management

Little by little Jean Wasmemes became initiated into the workings of the co-operative organization called the UNION. At the end of a few weeks it is time to take account of the progress of the business. Every month the board of administration receives from the accountant the following documents:—

1. The summary of the month's business, including the state of all the open accounts, showing in detail all the sums owed by or to this society, with the balance on each account.

2. The balance sheet or comparison of assets and liabilities. The assets include everything that the society possesses, real estate, money in the safe, titles, money in bank, merchandise, etc. The liabilities include everything that the society owes to its creditors outside, merchants, money lenders, or bankers, and to its inside creditors, members, reserve fund, sinking fund, propaganda fund, relief fund. With the assets is included under the name of profit and loss the sum total of the expenses incurred since the beginning of the year; with the liabilities, under the same name of profit and loss, the amount of the receipts.

3. The account of profits and losses, which details the expenses and the receipts of the half year. These accounts were of particular interest to Jean Wasmemes, for the UNION presents them in an ingenious manner, according to the excellent method devised by M. Wedhof, one of the socialist officers of the city of Lille.

They are grouped and summed up on a large table in which each article occupies a line. The expenses: Printing, stamps, power, renewal of the plant, wages, oil, flour, rice, salt, heating, beer, liquor, lemonades, general miscellaneous expenses, contributions, insurance, etc. Receipts: Bread sold, entrance fees, restaurant, recapitulation: Receipts, expenses, profits up to the present time, profits up to the end of the preceding month, profits for the month. By reading this table Jean Wasmemes learns at once: (a) The sums expended or set aside for each article up to the 1st of October. These expended up to the end of September. Their difference, that is to say, their increase for the month of October.

(b) The difference, whether more or less than the figures of the preceding month.

(c) The reason for these differences is set down in a note below the table which explains the figures. For example, in the case of rice, of which 467.33 kilograms were consumed in October as compared with 427.75 in September, the note is made that the increased consumption was due to the fact that more bread was made in October.

Six months soon passed after Jean Wasmemes joined the UNION: on the 30th of November, the accounts for the half year were closed and the employees calculated the profits of the bakery and separately those of the grocery.

On December 24th Jean Wasmemes attended a meeting of the general assembly, after having read the report of the Council of administration, which showed a total business of 62,674.39 francs, expenses of 34,680.50 francs and profits of 27,993.89 francs. From this total profit should be deducted 2 per cent of the bread checks sold which go to this "special committee" by virtue of the by-laws, and which amounted to 10,912.50 francs. There was also deducted 3 per cent on the profits for reserve fund. This deduction amounted to 4,644.54 francs, making a total deduction of 15,557.13 francs, leaving net profits for distribution of 12,436.76 francs.

At the end of the week for the 29 loaves which had been bought. The new member (who had just been inspecting the Co-operative bakery) was anxious to taste this magnificent bread at once and he tried to buy a loaf at the sales counter in the court. But the clerk refused his money, the bread could only be paid for with checks, and these were sold at a window close by. Jean Wasmemes asked for 10 francs worth, which would last him a little more than a week. The clerk passed out to him at once 20 checks representing 20 three-lb. loaves and then 20 other checks of a different shape which should serve as a receipt at the end of the week for the 20 loaves which had been bought.

Then Jean was enabled to exchange a check for one of the beautiful loaves. He learned, moreover, that the delivery man of his district would visit his house every day and deliver to the housekeeper as many loaves as she would return purchase checks for.

had consumed bread to the amount of 123 francs received 45.50 francs. That is not all: The grocery earned profits to the amount of 17,944.76 francs upon sales to the amount of 17,932.35 during the half year. Here, again, 2 per cent on the sales had to be deducted for the "special committee," making 2,440.33 francs, and moreover, 3 per cent of the profits were placed in the reserve fund, making 534.15 francs. The net profits to be divided left Jean Wasmemes the sum of six francs on the 50 francs of purchases that he had made in the department store, for the ratio of distribution was just 12 per cent.

The General Assembly

The supreme power belongs to Jean Wasmemes, and his associates united in their general assembly. But the Assembly meets only four times a year. It thus has to delegate its rights to some of the members. It elects a Council of administration composed of 15 members, one-third of whom are elected every six months and may be re-elected. To serve on this board it is necessary to fulfill the conditions explained in article 22 of the Constitution of the Co-operative. Not to be the manager or foreman in a factory, this provision assures, the independence of the co-operators) nor a merchant carrying on a business similar to those managed by the Co-operative, nor a near relative of any employee of the Co-operative.

(b) Positive conditions. To be a citizen of France enjoying civil and political rights. To have been a member for 18 months and to be a purchaser of supplies at all the departments of the Co-operative.

The Administration

To the Council of administration is added a general manager chosen by the Assembly elected for one year, and re-eligible, who directs the business operations and supervises the employees or laborers.

Finally, to supervise the workings of the Council, the Assembly elects a board of control of seven members chosen for one year, who may be elected outside the membership, for it may be advantageous to have the control exercised by a specialist. The board of control is to meet, at least, once a month to inform itself as to the accounts of the society. Like the Council it has the right to call the members together in a special meeting.

There are two possible systems, one is to sell goods to the members at the cost price increased by 2 or 3 per cent to cover the expenses of administration. This is the system employed by the Progress, the Socialist Co-operative at Jolimont. The other possible plan is to increase the price to the figure current in the local trade, or even a little higher. This is the English system of Rochdale, and it is this which Jean Wasmemes sees practiced at the UNION of Lille. This system has the advantage of obliging the co-operators to save, but it should be employed with moderation, for it tends toward saving on objects of prime necessity sums which may easily be squandered. The best way to avoid this is not to limit the percentage of profit but to arrange that the profit be paid to the members not in currency but in consumable goods.

The Profits

The profits distributed among the members are not the exact difference between the receipts and the expenses. As a matter of fact 2 per cent on gross sales is reserved as we have seen, one-third of it for the relief fund and two-thirds for the propaganda fund. To illustrate, the sales of bread for the last half of 1899 amounted to 100,561 francs. Upon this sum we must figure 2 per cent which amounted to 2,011.22 francs and which was deducted from the profits.

In the second place, article 25 of the by-laws provides for the setting aside of 5 per cent of the profits for a reserve fund intended to provide for extraordinary or unforeseen expenses. But, it is further provided that if this fund reaches a tenth part of the society's capital, thenceforth only 3 per cent instead of 5 per cent shall be deducted; this was the case in the second half of 1899.

The Relief Fund

Of the 2 per cent, which according to the by-laws is deducted from the gross sales, one-third is turned into the relief fund. Jean Wasmemes was not long in experiencing the advantage of this rule. He was taken sick one day with a bad cold accompanied by a fever. Perhaps if he had not been in the UNION he would have imprudently given his children without bread. But he knew that having been a member of the UNION for more than three months and a regular customer of the bakery and grocery, he had a right to its relief.

He accordingly wrote a letter to the special committee of 15 members (distinct from the Council) which administers the relief fund and the propaganda fund. He gave his sealed letter to the committee.

The committee decided that Wasmemes should be relieved. One of the commissioners came to visit the sick man every week and report to the committee. For nine weeks, if need be, Wasmemes would have received his bread and groceries necessary for his family. No relief in money is given. However, Wasmemes was on his feet at the end of two weeks and resumed his work. If he should unhappily become sick again before the month is over, he will still receive relief up to seven weeks. But, if he had received his nine weeks of relief at once, he could not renew his application until three months had elapsed.

Propaganda

The propaganda fund receives two-thirds of the 3 per cent from sales. The propaganda may be interior, that is to say, conducted by the UNION itself, or exterior, that is to say, carried on by the Socialist party with the money put at its disposal by the UNION in conformity with the principles which govern the Socialist Co-operators.

Of its exterior propaganda Jean Wasmemes knows little directly, but trusts to the Federation of the North, the Parti Ouvrier and the general Committee of the allied Socialists.

The interior propaganda is carried on in several ways: (a) The UNION organizes meetings, family concerts and theatrical representations with the friendly help of the amateurs recruited among its members.

(b) It maintains a brass band.

(c) It has a chorus of adults. With its band and chorus the society is ready at any moment to organize street meetings.

(d) It has a children's chorus drilled by a professor, paid by the special committee with the annual dues of 1 franc each from the members.

(e) The library is a valuable means of propaganda intended to educate the co-operators, to awaken them completely and to introduce the socialist ideas into the families of workmen.

We have thus tried to give some idea of the work started in Lille in 1893 by ten intelligent and energetic proletarians. In every socialist city, in every working-class district, there ought to be comrades ready to follow this example. Thus, will be built over the whole territory a network of socialist fortresses from which, as Anseele said, the workers may bombard capitalist society with potatoes and four-pound loaves. Let us hasten to multiply and to assist these co-operators. Still better, let them federate themselves, first by districts, then nationally. Let the French workmen follow in the footsteps of their Belgian comrades, and let them initiate (not forgetting to keep them socialist in spirit) the powerful federation of co-operatives which are to be seen in England. Let them create within the capitalist society the economic and social germ of the society to come. Let them add the activity of the co-operatives to that of the trade union and the party; let them enfranchise their consuming power as well as their labor and their thinking; then their victory will be complete. They will bring their triumph of justice and liberty in the social revolution for which they will have prepared both economically and politically.

Everywhere there is need of propagandists and of co-operation, and of propagandists by deed. "Wherever there are laborers, may we not expect to find a few energetic and intelligent men to imitate the example given by the ten founders of the UNION of Lille?"

Translated from the French of Maurice Lemaire, by Charles H. Kerr. (The end.)

LOCAL PARTY NOTES

SOUTH SIDE.

The activity of the Socialists on the South Side is rapidly coming into notice. New members are coming into our ranks. Literature is being sold, and freely distributed, cards advertising the Sunday and Saturday evening meetings in the hall at 761 West Thirty-third street have been printed and distributed, and this week lettering will be placed on the front windows, making the place more conspicuous in the eyes of the thousands of workers passing by on street cars and on foot.

Just now the active co-operation of all the South Side branches is essential to the maintenance of the hall. One branch pays $6.00 per month toward running expenses, and if each branch in the division will assist with a fixed sum per month for a short period, splendid meetings may be held during the winter, the hall be able to maintain itself, with perhaps a little assistance from the Englewood branches, and similar halls in other, perhaps more centrally located quarters, be established.

The Saturday evening meetings will hereafter largely be devoted to discussions, the local comrades being able to handle almost every subject satisfactorily, and these sort of meetings facing even more favor than lengthy addresses. This was emphasized last Saturday and also Sunday when Comrade Morris was kept busy answering questions put almost entirely by interested strangers. On Sunday evening Oct. 27 Comrades Pierce and Berlin from the 7th ward will be the speakers. The following Sunday Nov. 2, the speaker will be Prof. Ernest Untermaun, and the subject, "Bernstein and the Socialist Program."

Thursday evening will be taken up by the "School of Socialism" directed by Comrade May Wood Simon; the school no doubt will be largely attended by the local comrades.

The organization committee meetings every Sunday morning will hereafter be called at 10 o'clock sharp, the organizers are therefore requested to be on time. Although only six branches were represented at last Sunday's meeting considerable business was transacted.

Good progress, a new place was secured, a supply of literature laid in and it was decided, for convenience sake, to supply branches with The Workers' Call, and all sorts of socialist literature at the lowest rates. The Organizer now having in his possession the roster of all the branches in the near future, is in a position to visit all the branches, in the near future.

In the meantime branches are requested to report all systems of the party in order to avoid conflicting data, to division organizer.

ARNOLD RASMUSSEN, 6746 Leavitt Street.

THE WORKERS' CALL.

"Workingmen of all countries unite! You have nothing to lose but your chains; you have a world to gain."

THIRD YEAR.—WHOLE NO. 139.

CHICAGO, ILL., SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1901.

PRICE ONE CENT.

News of the Week And its Philosophy.

Massachusetts republicans are far in advance of republicans in other parts of the country in that they recognize what the issue really is on which the people must shortly divide. The state central committee of that state is making no campaign this year except in districts where socialism has appeared. To such places it will send a few spellbinders to bring the erring back into the fold. It is safe to say that the spellbinders have a few surprises in store for them. Nothing the republican committee could do would please the socialists better. If our argument won't stand criticism and debate we cannot begin to find out any too soon; however, we know it will and only ask to be given a hearing. The committee in making that the issue has given us the hearing we desire. Look out for an increased vote in those localities. Wherever we can have the issue start right and clear, the logic of our position must eventually win and there will be many cities and counties if not states where there will be but one issue at the elections a year from this fall.

Socialists have no interest in the coming elections except as they may register the increase of the Socialist vote of the country. Without waiting for the returns we know that the vote will be increased as certain as the day will arrive.

How many $400 boxes for the horse show can a man buy who is supporting a family on $3 a week? The answer is, none. Even if he could spare the money the people who are giving the show would not sell him a box. He is committing the crime of doing useful labor.

Another central labor body is talking of going into politics, which its members will have a chance to do if the organization turns down the proposition. Gradually the working man is learning that his vested interests in a job will not suffer if he votes for his own interests at the polls.

One gang of office seekers not in possession of the office wants to oust a gang that is in possession of them from the control of the democratic party. Each side claims they are advocating certain principles, but the public is getting too smart to believe all it hears.

President Blanchard of Wheaton college, complains that ministers do not preach the truth lest it offend the rich. Would he have the preachers throw out of a job and be forced to work? The preacher has to look out for his material interest as well as anyone else and if he does not please the man who is paying him, it is certainly the privilege of the man who puts up for the expenses to discharge him and get a hired man who does suit. It can hardly be charged up to the preacher if he and his family object to starving to death.

The sympathetic strike has come back to trouble the contractors who thought they had it crushed to earth. Some day they will learn that the class struggle goes on and on and can have no ending until it is settled by the abolition of classes.

Without any effort on his part a janitor at one of the Chicago police stations has fallen heir to a fortune little less than a million, but there is no reason why the capitalists should not point him out as an example of what honesty and frugality will accomplish. He was certainly frugal as a janitor, because he was obliged to be.

The defeat of the four-cent fare ordinance is of no particular interest to the workingmen except as it illustrates that the servants of capitalism will not give up even so much as a crumb, one so small that workingmen who know they are entitled to the whole thing would despise the gift.

The Schley inquiry drags along and proves that our finely uniformed naval officers as they could give the old rough, tobacco-spitting sailors cards and spades at the game.

Don't forget to tell your friends about the ball and to sell them all the tickets they need and a few they don't need. Hypnotize them and make them cough up.

Justice Brewer, one of the abjects of the supreme judges and one who has been omitted as somewhat liberal, declared in his speech at the Yale celebration that he could see no solution of the trust question. From the capitalist standpoint he is correct. There is no solution but socialism. The solution it offers is in the line of progress; any other pretended solution is a backward step.

That even British patriotism has its foundation in material interests is shown by the fact that drummers are greatly alarmed lest the king should die before the coronation ceremonies occur.

Because there were no fire escapes on a West Side building, two women were burned to death, but they are only a small per cent of the annual victims of capitalist greed.

American goods may be sold in Europe in large quantities, but the labor power of the American workingman must be sold in the United States, and there is no market for the surplus.

To what extent the supreme court is a plaything of capitalism is shown from the fact that no one expects the state board of equalization to obey the supreme court decision ordering it to assess the capital stock of corporations. In fact the teachers recognize that they can only get what they believe to be their rights by another law suit. It is time the teachers were doing a little voting, or asking their gentleman friends to do it for them.

The great score of American goods invading Europe may be only a blind for the purpose of lowering wages in those countries. It looks as if that were the game in England. Then when they get wages down over there it will be a new argument for cutting them down in this country. The capitalist works his games worldwide.

Chicago has been flooded with counterfeit pennies, but that will hardly interest the workingmen who make a practice of carrying nothing but $20 gold pieces.

AN OPEN LETTER.

To All Women Who Are Party Members or Friends of the Cause.

Dear Comrades: The Woman's Auxiliary of the Socialist Party has been requested by the party to undertake the catering for the Party ball, to be held at First Regiment Armory on the evening of November 22.

It is desirable that the party shall be spared every unnecessary expense in connection with this affair, in order that the net gain for our party fund shall be as large as possible, and inasmuch as the rental of the building, together with incidentals, musicians' fees, etc., will of themselves require a large financial outlay, our women are earnestly requested to assist in providing the supper, by contributing such articles of cooked food as they can conveniently furnish.

While almost everything eatable will be thankfully accepted, the auxiliary is anxious that as large a supply as possible of cold meats (ham, tongue, corned beef, roast pork, veal or mutton) be provided together with home-made breads, rolls or biscuits, salads, baked beans, cheese, pickles, and condiments of all kinds. Canned meats or fish, pies, of the former kind (fruit, mince, etc.) will also be acceptable.

Now, in order that the purchasing committee may know exactly where it stands and what commodities it will itself be compelled to supply, it is requested that each and every woman who is willing to aid in this work, send to the secretary of the Auxiliary, not later than November 10th, and as much earlier as possible, a complete list of the articles she is willing to supply, distinctly specifying the NUMBER OR QUANTITY of each item, so many pounds of meat (mention kind), so many loaves of bread, etc.

Let each do ALL that she possibly can in justice to herself, but at all events do SOMETHING. If ever so little, for in a case of this kind "every little helps."

It is also requested that parties having spare table cloths, doilies, center pieces, etc., or anything in the line of table ware, such as salt and pepper shakers, celery glasses, or glass, china or plated dishes, suitable for the serving of salads, olives, fruits or cake, send them with a card bearing name and address firmly attached. Cut flowers, ferns or potted plants—anything to make the tables and dining room pretty and attractive—would also be thankfully received.

It is desirable that we should all cooperate to make this occasion a brilliant success both from a financial and social point of view, relieving every previous effort in this direction.

Socialism expects every woman to do her duty.

Very fraternally,

M. R. DALY,

Secretary Women's Auxiliary, S. P.

441 S. Western Ave.

N. R. Parties residing on West or North-west sides of the city, may send their contributions to the Temple, 120 S. Western Ave. The delivery wagon of the Co-operative Grocery will forward them hence to their destination. South Side arrangements will be announced later on.

Notice.

The regular monthly meeting of the General Committee of Local Chicago, Socialist Party, will be held at Assembly Hall, Schiller Building, on Saturday eve, Nov. 2nd at 8 o'clock.

All members will please to present.

H. H. TAFT, Sec'y.

News of the Movement

California will hold a state convention in December.

A Socialist speaker in San Francisco was attacked by a lot of hoboes and pelted with over-ripe hen fruit. He called upon the police for protection, but these dignitaries simply gave him the merry ha! ha! Goaded to desperation he swore a few oaths, whereupon he was immediately arrested. The advance comments upon the incident are as follows: "If it is well that we display a proper sense of the fitness of things. One may swear at his wife, or he may abuse the children; he may have a sweat-shop and grind the life out of a few dozen human beings; he may own a railroad and crush into pulp an unheard-of number of fellow citizens every year, but under no circumstances must the ears of our delicately nurtured police be shocked by oaths. It is against the modern requirements of aesthetics."

Mar. Diego, Cal., has a new convert. H. N. Lowell, Comrade Lowell is in his eighty-fifth year.

The automobile fund has almost reached the $200 mark.

Derby, Conn. has elected a Socialist alderman, W. M. Davis.

Ohio's petition to be placed upon the state ticket contained 11,725 names.

The school census in Seattle shows 17,343 children of school age. Only 11,800 attend school.

The Fram, an influential Norwegian paper of the Northwest, published at in the coming election will be about 2000.

A smoker will be given at the Temple on Saturday night, Nov. 2, for the benefit of the Worker's Call. Good program. All the local speakers. Admission free.

The entertainment given by the comrades of Branch No. 1, 25th ward last Monday night was a great success. Landstrom's Hall, corner 4th and Lake streets, was crowded to the doors and the program consisting of instrumental and vocal music interspersed with three short addresses had the audience to death's door. A similar program will be given Thursday, Nov. 7th at the same place, to which the citizens of Morland and vicinity are invited.

Work of the Auxiliary.

The Thursday evening meetings of the Women's Auxiliary at the Socialist Temple are not only beginning to be well attended, and are attracting much local interest. Following Mrs. Kerr's address Mrs. Westworth gave a remarkably fine lecture on the history of the Socialist movement, which was followed by a discussion of the program of the Socialist Party. A large audience was present, and several good points made by the speaker were liberally applauded. Comrade George Brown will be the next speaker and Comrade Mrs. Kerr will be the orator on November 7th.

The 9th, 10th and 11th Ward Branches will hold Socialist lectures every Sunday evening at Hull House, 235 S. Halsted Street.

Progress of Inventions

The strongest force at work in society to-day and the one which is changing the whole face of civilization, is the progress of invention and discovery. The whole civilized world is bound together and when an invention like the telegraph, the telephone, the electric light, the typewriter or any other invention of importance takes place in one country, it is soon introduced in all progressive nations. A few generations ago inventors were few, but now they constitute a large and steadily growing army.

Never before in the history of the world has the progress of invention been so rapid as at present. By giving an increased command over the forces of nature, and enabling men to produce wealth more easily and abundantly than before these inventions should be an unalloyed benefit to the working class. The socialist does not oppose inventions. He welcomes them gladly. His real ground for objection is that the benefits are so unjustly distributed—the parasite and privileged class absorbing so much, and the working class, which by its labor produces the wealth, getting so little.

Under socialism a great impetus will be given to invention. Machines will do the bulk of the work of the world, and the workers will have short hours—not over four or five a day—and every rational want will be abundantly supplied. The average income would be at least five or ten thousand dollars a year. May you, workingman, ever-worked and poorly paid, which would verland and is used in connection with a new loom for embroidering fine Swiss and Hamburg laces, and operates almost automatically.

A New York daily says that fully a dozen different street cleaning machines have been invented recently, and that the "white wings" appear to be doomed.

Sixteen painters are to be displaced by a new painting machine operated by two men.

The new Hungarian system of telegraphy is now in practical operation between Buda Pest and Fiume, a distance of 275 miles. A speed of 45,000 words an hour is obtained, and the messages are written in Roman characters, requiring no transcription. The system will be established in France and Germany, and prominent capitalists of this country are trying to secure the American rights for the new method.

An Iowa inventor has completed a motor that promises to aid materially in revolutionizing motive power. It uses an infinitely small amount of fuel or water. Prominent railway officials are said to be taking a lively interest in the new invention and are making enthusiastic claims for it.

Daniel Drawbaugh of Harrisburg, Pa., who claims to have invented the first telephone, says that after two years of experimenting he has invented a new system of wireless telegraphy. He utilizes the electric currents of the earth instead of the ether currents.

Will Build New Temple.

Our lease on the Temple expires April 15th. The landlord refuses to re-lease. Not that he wants to use it for the reading of sermons for which purpose it was erected. He is a distiller. No, the only reason we can assign is that the socialist speakers are so much harder on a building than a holiness meeting. The enthusiasm rocks the walls and cracks the plastering. And the landlord refuses the socialists a new lease. He hopes thereby to stop the movement. Let him first try to smother Vesuvius with a sheaf of oats; then he'll know more about stopping the world march of socialism by refusing a lease.

The socialists will build their own Temple. Site and plan committees are at work and we have not yet begun work of raising funds, but five hundred dollars has been offered unconditionally.

We propose to make this a club, a lodge, and a party propaganda headquarters all in one. The basement floor will be fitted up with bowling alleys, parlors, committee and dressing rooms. The ground floor will contain the co-operative store, the reading room and an auditorium seating one thousand persons. Over the store and reading rooms will be the gallery, and then so landlord can molest or make afraid, and if he don't like our style he knows our post office address.

A preliminary committee has been appointed who will keep socialists informed of progress. Chas. E. Kerr is financial secretary and D. H. Daly treasurer.

JAMES HECKMAN,
Corresponding Secretary,

SPECIAL NOTICE

To Our Hustlers.

The Executive Committee Will Present to the One Disposing of the Most Sub Cards by Dec 1st

$10.00

To the Next Highest $5.00

To the Next Highest $3.00.

To count in this contest all money for sub-cards must be in the hands of the division, or ward organizers, or the business manager of The Worker's Call, not later than 10 p. m., Saturday, Nov. 24. Ward organizers will report to their division organizer Sunday, Dec. 1, and the division organizers will report to the business manager Monday, Dec. 2.

Members must get their cards through their branch, as no cards will be issued to members from this office except for cash. Members receiving cards from this branch and unable to certify for same time their organizer in time can make payment at this office.

All members desiring to compete will please send their name and address to the business manager at once.

The time is short Comrades, and you might not have to sell a great many cards to win, so get out and hustle and you may be the lucky one. Remember every card paid for before 10 p. m., Nov. 24 counts.

HUSTLE! HUSTLE! HUSTLE!

For Cash, B. Brown.

Propaganda Suggestions

Organization increases productivity.

Don't forget to have a few thought provokers in your pocket all the time. They cost almost nothing, are just the thing to hand to strangers and they advertise the Call. They are also excellent things to advertise meetings at.

Don't expect a man to put in all his time for the cause unless he can make a living at it. Divide the work up, let every man do a little. It is wrong for a man to neglect his family for socialism, and the comrades should not ask a man to sacrifice himself thus. If every man does his duty it will not be necessary for anyone to martyr himself.

It is said that the S. D. P. is so well organized in Germany that they are able to notify every member in the country of any important event within one hour. Chicago is perhaps the best organized local in the United States but how long does it take to get a referendum in? It is evident there is still room for a great deal of improvement.

A branch's first duty is to its members. How many branches neglect their own members?

Remember every man who signs an application blank is not a socialist and a branch of thirty members with only ten members who understand the socialist philosophy is much worse off than a branch of ten members who all understand the question. We do not want more voters, what we want is socialists. A well laid foundation will preserve the house. Educate your own members first.

Some people have an idea that a set of books and a set of officers, with a business meeting once a week constitutes an organization. No it does not. Capitalist political clubs and they often omit the first and last items.

Never ask a man to subscribe for the Worker's Call to help the cause. It is an insult, both to socialism and the Call. A man who does not take a paper because of its merits, or because he has a desire to know what it contains will not become interested in the paper and will not become a socialist.

South Chicago comrades are having one of Rev. T. McGrady's works translated into Polish for free distribution in their vicinity. It is hoped that they will get enough printed for the use of comrades in other localities. Not enough attention is paid to the distribution of literature in foreign languages. If you can give a man a book written in his own language, you have a much better opportunity of convincing him than with an English book, even though he may be able to read a little English. We are often reminded that ours is a foreign movement but it seems there is a decided lack of the good things in German, French, Polish, Russian, Swedish, and other languages, which are published in the United States and the reason is perhaps that there is not sufficient demand for them. If the comrades would make translations of some of the foreign classics, written in their own languages, its effectiveness would be greatly increased.

Has your branch sent in their branch order for Calls yet? Suppose you make the motion at the next branch meeting?

Let us do a little figuring. Fifty branches, average membership twenty, each member taking five Calls, that is a bundle order of 100 per branch. Only Call making one convert, cost per member two and one half cents a week. Number of extra Calls distributed each week in Chicago, five thousand. Additional revenue $25.00 per week. Number of new branches next spring, 1,000. Number of new branches, two hundred and fifty. Official ballot. Free press of daily paper. Who's a dreamer?

Start a circulating library in your branch. Get a donation of five cents from each member and buy the cheap paper bound books. Appoint a librarian to keep the books and a committee to distribute them. See that every member gets a book every week. The committee furnishes a method for getting the members acquainted. When one of the committee leaves a book with a new member, he talks socialism and leaves a lot of equilibrium.

Why can't we get about fifty boys, socialists, who will go down town Saturdays and, in fact, every night after school, and sell Workers' Calls. It would be excellent advertisement.

"Law Courts and the Poor"

Clarence Darrow will deliver an address with this title at the Socialist Temple, 120 S. Western Avenue, on Wednesday, Nov. 11.

Inasmuch as the modern state is mainly instituted for the purpose of protecting private property in the means of production, we call to our minds Judge Kohlsaat cited in his address.

Burke "Loops the Loop".

Only a few weeks ago the indictment of "Bobby Burke" by the Grand Jury, was hailed as the beginning of a "crusade" against "corrupt" city officials.

Which was found to result in a general clean-up. Columns upon columns of space were devoted to the matter and long-winded editorials appeared almost daily for a week after the event. The "crusade" was worked for all it was worth, and the public having got their cue, duly "thrilled with horror" as a "moral public" should. At the time the Workers' Call stated that the whole affair would fizzle out, as such affairs always do, and such has been the case. The indictment has been quashed, the work of the grand jury goes for nothing, Burke is neither a scoundrel nor an assassin. He merely took what belonged to him. Capitalism needs the "corrupt politician" equally with the "reformer," who go through the farce of exposing him at certain times and seasons. Clap the lid down again upon the city hall, gentlemen! Sufficient stench has escaped to serve your purpose, until political expediency demands another fake attempt at ventilation. "O. K. Bobby Burke!"

Taber British trades unionists who are over here on a tour of inspection might find something to interest them in the machine industry in Chicago just at present. We don't have any House of Lords over here to render decisions against trades unions but we have judges who can make the House of Lords look like thirty cents every time.

There is certainly a medium of truth in the capitalist contention that they have better brains than the workers. The capitalist generally knows enough to vote for his class interests, and that is no inconsiderable knowledge when you come to think of its effects.

Don't keep those Winter Festival tickets. Sell them instead—and keep on selling them.

you prefer such a system as that, or your present condition? If you like the picture of the new conditions work for socialism. Nothing else will help you any.

The following list of recent inventions is taken from the October "International Socialist Review":

Swift & Co. of Chicago have put in a new egg candling machine. It has a capacity of 24,000 eggs an hour. Heretofore the work has been done almost wholly by hand, which is necessarily very slow. The new contrivance displaces nearly one-half of former employees and does five times as much work. It is very simple of construction and inexpensive, and was invented in England.

A Belgian inventor by the name of Tobansky is reported to have discovered a method by which smoke can be turned into light. The smoke is gathered from any kind of a fire and forced into a receiver. It is then saturated with hydrocarbons and a brilliant light results. U. S. Consul Mahis is investigating the method, and likely as not the Standard Oil Company will make a heavy bid to control the new light, if possible.

A new machine, designed to do eight different parts on a shoe, will soon be placed on the market. Every part will work automatically. The new device will do heel shaving, rough scouring, fine scouring, heel edge blocking, top-line blocking, heel burnishing, top-lift burnishing and broasting. The inventor of the Rockingham burnisher is the inventor of the latest tool of production. The Union Boot and Shoe Worker says the machine "will be a great labor saver, eight parts being done in the time that one is done with the present machinery, and as only an ordinary laborer is required to run the machine he will probably displace even skilled mechanics." The shoe workers are, therefore, up against the new method of production harder than ever.

A little machine which threads 1,000 needles a minute is on exhibition at Mississippi. It was invented in Britain and is used in connection with a new loom for embroidering fine Swiss and Hamburg laces, and operates almost automatically.

A New York daily says that fully a dozen different street cleaning machines have been invented recently, and that the "white wings" appear to be doomed.

Sixteen painters are to be displaced by a new painting machine operated by two men.

The socialists will build their own Temple. Site and plan committees are at work and we have not yet begun work of raising funds, but five hundred dollars has been offered unconditionally.

We propose to make this a club, a lodge, and a party propaganda headquarters all in one. The basement floor will be fitted up with bowling alleys, parlors, committee and dressing rooms. The ground floor will contain the co-operative store, the reading room and an auditorium seating one thousand persons. Over the store and reading rooms will be the gallery, and then so landlord can molest or make afraid, and if he don't like our style he knows our post office address.

A preliminary committee has been appointed who will keep socialists informed of progress. Chas. E. Kerr is financial secretary and D. H. Daly treasurer.

THE SPIDER AND THE FLY.

At intervals it becomes necessary to administer a little dope to the small business man. Just he rise up in his wrath and smite the Trust, and department stores hip and thigh. The columns of the capitalist press of course are the chosen medium through which to convince him that from a small capital a big business can be built up. So the Chicago Tribune interviews various "credit men" and discloses the brilliant prospect awaiting the "honest man" of good business ability that opens a store with a capital of $250. He may from this humble beginning become "worth millions"—and then again he may not, and the chances are now about 10,000 to one that he won't. In ten years they will probably be 100,000 to one, but this probability is carefully kept out of sight. Neither is the fact dwelt upon that for the past few years more than 90 per cent. of the business failures in the United States were under $5,000 capital. But then there are quite a number of hopeful people throughout the country who possess $250 and upwards. They might be induced to come to town and take a business chance. The credit man certainly wouldn't object, but it is opportune right here to say that all the confidence men and "gold brick" dealers in Chicago don't hang around the railroad depots and saloons.

CROLOGUE AS A "PROBLEM."

Speculations as to the future destination of Crologue before he had "shuffled off this mortal coil," seem to be about as various and contradictory as the views of the press and pulpit upon the "anarchism" avowed by the murderer. For instance, "Judge" prints a cartoon upon the subject, depicting his Satanic majesty as telephoning from the interior regions to Auburn prison, asking that the job be put through as speedily as possible, as he has a new and unusual punishment which he wishes to try first upon the "anarchist." Upon the hypothesis that the latter was performing "God's will" in assassinating McKinley, the request of the Devil seems reasonable enough. But the difficulty of explaining why the Devil is permitted to punish him for carrying out the will of God, still remains. However, these minor contradictions are hardly worth the consideration of the clergy, who now seem to have their hands full in trying to equate that more important contradictory statement that the interests of laborers and capitalists are identical.

But nevertheless Crologue was given a "chance to escape the preparations which 'Judge' pictures the Devil as making for his reception." "Spiritual consolation" was offered him, though whether he availed himself of the opportunity is not very clear. A few days before the execution, Father Paduana, after an interview with the prisoner, gave the Associated Press reporter the following vague information: "He was born a Christian," said the priest, "and although he may have renounced Christianity, he is a Christian, I think." Surely this man has completed the process and ought to perform many wonderful logical maneuvers. He has been described as a Christian who had renounced Christianity; an "infidel" and a believer; a sinner of the will of God forgiven by the Devil; the priest fits him for heaven, and the press consigns him to hell. Certainly if these various views obtain any truth the most wonderful contradiction of all, viz., that he was an anarchist and a Socialist at the same time, may even find some supporters. The real fact that he was an anarchist who voted the Republican ticket, doesn't seem to be quite absurd enough for general acceptance.

INCENTIVE TO BLACKMAIL.

To judge by the dividends declared by the Chicago City Railway Co. no one would suppose that it was being done to death by blackmail. Yet if the statements of President Hamilton are to be taken seriously, that tragical ending is imminent. Personal injury suits have become a "business," lawyers and physicians have entered into combinations to deplete the dividends of the stockholders by systematically taking up and pushing these personal injury suits. To such proportions has this nuisance grown that it retards the income of transportation facilities, according to President Hamilton, and in this view of the matter he is seconded by President Roach of the Union Traction Company, and also by the lawyers employed by both corporations. The "personal damage" business is literally taking away the "incentive" of the company, just as socialism is supposed to do according to orthodox economic theories. If it were not for these grasping combinations of lawyers and physicians the "public" would be assured of four or perhaps three cent fares, the certainty of a seat in the cars, uniform transfers, an unlimited extension of the roads to outlying districts, thereby enhancing real estate values, and all the other blessings which the exploiter always promises the exploited, if they only help him to get rid of his parasites—which in this case are the combinations of lawyers and physicians engaged in the personal damage business. One might suppose from listening to this yelp, that the aforesaid lawyers and physicians had no "incentive" beyond the malicious pleasure of annoying these company and preventing it from showering its blessings upon the "public."

But the fact is that they have exactly the same "incentive" as the company they blackmail—the incentive of material interests; and President Hamilton never seems to consider the fact that the "professions" are overcrowded as an extenuating circumstance.

How does a corporation lawyer get his job? In nearly every case by demonstrating his ability to blackmail corporations. When he has given sufficient proof in this line, some corporation at once puts up and to his career of blackmail by purchasing his services at a bigger salary than he could make by outside plundering. Then he at once becomes "moré" and complains bitterly of the conduct of the fellows who are trying to succeed as he did, and by the same means.

Why don't the company buy up all these parasites and transform them into employees, in the interest of "morality" and the "public"? They cannot—such action would injure dividends still more. What can they do then for the benefit of the "public"? Why, they can get laws passed which will allow them to kill and maim the "public" without any fear of personal damage suits. That is what they are trying to do—and it's for the benefit of the "public," too, if the latter can only see it in that light.

TRUSTS—AND THEIR EXPONENTS.

It has long been recognized that a truth no matter how conclusively demonstrated, depends largely for its acceptance with most people, upon the personality of the enunciator. A socialist for instance, may expound the nature of the trusts and their beyond possibility of contradiction their natural evolution, and the folly of attempting to destroy, check or even regulate, them by legislation, and the "practical" man will in nearly every case decline to listen to what he considers the ravings of an irresponsible crank. The subject matter will be totally ignored. The personality of the speaker alone will be considered.

The same process occurs when the speaker is one, who from his position is considered by "authority" on the subject. Recently Justice Brewer of the supreme court gave an address upon the subject of trusts, at the Yale Bicentennial, in which he said nothing about these combinations beyond the commonplace with which every socialist speaker is familiar, and at once the press informs its readers that the distinguished orator gave a short scholarly and thoughtful presentation of the subject to his audience.

And yet as before mentioned, Justice Brewer added nothing to the stock of knowledge on this subject that is not already possessed by hundreds and maybe thousands of obscure individuals whose views, although up to a certain point identical with his, are scorned with contempt by all so-called "right thinking" persons. But when these views are put forward by a Brewer they at once become worthy of consideration. In the first case the personality of the speaker ensures the rejection of his view of the subject; in the second instance it ensures its acceptance.

But there is still another factor which plays no unimportant part in the formation of the "opinion" of the "right thinking" person on this subject. After showing the natural evolution of the trust, after tracing the relations tendency to concentration and combination, Justice Brewer stopped short. He admitted that he did not know what this tendency would lead to. He couldn't even guess, but he took refuge in the platitudes that "public sentiment" would somehow or other take charge of the future. In the eyes of the "right thinking" person this seeming conservatism is a virtue. That individual, so far as he thinks at all, will at once form the opinion that Justice Brewer besides being a very learned man, is also a modest one who is quite willing to admit that even his vision is limited. From this it is easy for the "right thinking" person to infer that if the very wise and distinguished Justice is unable to see the results of the tendency, or even to guess at them, why, he, together with all other "right thinking" persons would be presumptuous to push the investigation farther. That is the end of it for him. If Justice Brewer is content to let the matter remain a mystery, he is also willing to accept it as such.

But the socialist comes to the disabbling conclusion that the evolution of the trusts leads inevitably to the collective ownership of the means of production and distribution. Worse than all, he backs up the statement with facts quite as formidable as any that Justice Brewer can bring. That is what hurts. The property instinct of our dogberry awakes. To him the view of the socialist is "most tolerable and not to be endured," and he becomes all the more fortified in his rejection, by the fact that he feels conscious of his inability to refute the argument. Therefore he consigns the socialist view to perdition, and maintains that the trust is a "problem" which may be safely left to "public sentiment." And there he proposes to stop until social evolution from the mouth of a future "Justice Brewer" digs him up and compels him to move on again.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Successful Convention.

Bedalia, Mo., Oct. 23, 1901.
 The Socialist State convention of Missouri was a great success. The convention was held in a large hall, the room, furnished by a local lodge of the Knights of Pythias. The delegates were cordially received by the people and were shown many courtesies. Every newspaper in the city gave the first two columns of the first day to an impartial account of the convention. Not a word has been overheard to indicate that there is anyone in the city who believes socialism to be anarchism. The Socialist Hotel was a great success for the delegates and as travelers were greeted by hotel porters with the cry, "Socialist Hotel, Headquarters of the Socialists."

Two big mass meetings were held in the convention hall Friday night. The first was addressed by Comrade Lipscomb, Hoehn and Mills. Saturday evening by Debs and Mills. The hall was packed to the doors with an audience of one thousand people. The local band played the Marseillaise before the hall and when Debs arrived, on a belated train he was greeted with rousing cheers. Debs was here for an hour and a half and the audience listened attentively. The address by Comrade Mills on "What is Socialism," will be printed for use in propaganda work. An edition of 100,000 will be issued and placed made for further use.

The convention organized by electing Comrade Turner of Kansas City, chairman, and Comrade Hager of St. Louis, secretary. Thirty-six delegates representing fifteen states were present. A constitution was adopted, providing for a state committee with one member from each congressional district and a local quorum of five. Headquarters were located at the Hotel Pythias. A resolution was adopted that the National Committee, Missouri Socialist was made the property of the State Organization and will be published as the official organ. Resolutions were adopted on kindred topics. The citizens of Bedalia were thanked for their hospitality. The Citizens' Alliance was ignored by the convention although the speakers at mass meetings roared it well.

Credit is due to the Bedalia comrades for the able manner in which they conducted the arrangement for the convention in the face of the boycott.

To sum up, the Citizens' Alliance has received a hard blow, the socialists have won the respect of the city, the convention was the best ever held in the state, the cause has been wonderfully advanced and all the delegates start for home feeling happy.

Made It Unannounced.

Marion, Ind., Oct. 23, 1901.
 To the state and local organizations of the Independent Labor party with headquarters at Chicago, Ill.:
 Comrades:—The committee on arrangements for unity convention to whom was referred the referendum vote of the party on the subject of unity to announce in this our first report that not a single dissenting voice has been received; all branches reporting unanimous vote in the affirmative.

J. W. KELLEY, Chairman.

As Dr. Parkhurst of New York declares that there is nothing in common between Candidate Shepard and the institution that has chosen him as its candidate, the suspicion naturally arises that he could hardly say the same thing of himself with due regard to the truth.

The 14th, 15th, 16th ward branches held their educational meetings every Sunday evening at 8 o'clock at Hull House. Comrade John Collins will speak Sunday evening Nov. 3 on "The Modern Trade Union and Socialism." Good music. Everybody welcome.

Here is a strange confession. The South Side Protective Association which is making a "crusade" against the "unscrupulous" states that their efforts are not being made on "moral grounds" alone, but that the fact that the wine-rooms injure property values also, is being taken into consideration. We refuse to believe it. For the base institution who ever knew a "crusade" in which such sordid motives were involved?

And now the W. C. T. U. of Ohio in convention assembled, has passed a resolution requesting Mrs. Roosevelt to banish wine from the table of the White House. Wine is a mocker all right, and it will now get a chance to practice on that resolution.

Remember that our WINTER FESTIVAL at the First Regt. Armory, must break the record. Get tickets and sell them, and then get more and repeat the performance.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE MAYSIDE

At the last meeting of the Chicago Federation of Labor, the question of memorializing Congress to enact laws limiting the powers of the Federal judges in issuing injunctions, came up for discussion and a most interesting debate ensued. The "pure and simple" trades unionist actually howled for political action.

What kind? Why they urged that the workers should become active at the primaries of the republican and democratic parties and see that the "friends" of labor were nominated and the enemies turned down.

The veteran unionist, the carpenter Brennock struck the true note when he called attention to the fact that labor received respectful attention in 1898 when it polled 24,000 votes for its candidate for mayor, but that was not secured by participating in the primaries of the two old parties but by opposing both; and so efficient was that opposition that they UNITED against the labor ticket. The "friends" and the enemies of labor sank their differences and dived the labor movement at that time.

Not being a straight class conscious socialist movement it accordingly collapsed, and the influence gained was immediately lost. The "friends" of labor resumed their vocation of buncing the workers and the enemies of labor continued to pull the legs of the capitalists as of usual.

These "friends" and enemies of labor can be again united and they will be soon, much sooner than some of the labor leaders dream of. The growth of socialism amongst the organized workmen is really becoming phenomenal; the socialist propaganda no longer tries to capture the leaders but is working with splendid results among the rank and file. We have no time to argue with or denounce the labor leaders who talk so glibly of going into the primaries of the capitalist parties. Let them go there. There is money in it, but an ever greater number of the membership will ignore them and take up the socialist ballot. Let the leaders make hay while the sun shines. There is a storm brewing that will overwhelm them in short order.

It will interest the striking machinists to know that Chalmers paid several hundred dollars the other day for a box at the horse show. The strike doesn't seem to have hurt him much, but suppose Mr. Machinist, that you vote as you strike.

The fact that Booker T. Washington dined at Roosevelt's private table seems to excite the minds of the southern capitalists proves that the president is more than an ordinary statesman. These writers forget that Booker T. Washington is the traitor to his race less than a year ago justified the disfranchisement of the negro in the southern states. These southern capitalists lack memory, but the president is a statesman and knew whom he dined.

The cause of the "people" has received a black eye through the decision of Judge Haney in favor of the gas trust. The indignation of the workingmen who read this decision by the light of a kerosene lamp will be something fierce.

It will seem to them that all is lost indeed when the constitutionality of the law which enabled the People's and the Ogden Gas Co's. to combine is upheld. But let them possess their souls in peace; they will not have long to wait for a decision which will declare unconstitutional, some law that has been passed in the interests of the working class. Every cloud has a silver lining.

Prominent trades union leaders are about to organize an "anti-injunction league." They are too late. There is an anti-injunction league already in existence and it is the best that can be devised. It is the Socialist party and its weapon is the socialist ballot.

There is really no good reason for supposing that Pitchfork Tillman is an anarchist of the Johann Meit type, though many might be inclined to think so. He is now reported as saying that President Roosevelt's action in entering "that nigger," will necessitate "killing a thousand niggers in the South before they learn their places." Most used to advocate a "massacre of capitalists" by "the people." Tillman only advocates a massacre of "niggers" by "the people." Of course the "niggers" alluded to are not capitalists and therefore the supposition that Tillman is an anarchist falls to the ground.

While Cornelius Vanderbilt was making a tour of inspection of the shops of the Chicago Great Western Railway in Iowa, he happened to see an exhibition that was not on the program. Employees to the number of 500 threw down their tools and went on strike while the distinguished labor shinner was inspecting the plant. The president of the road who was present was petrified with astonishment and couldn't make out the reason why. "We have always treated them fairly, we have even humored them," said he. To appreciate the unbounded gals of this remark, it is only necessary to observe that this is the company which issued the famous "Circular No. 12" which was recently dropped in our columns. If Mr. Vanderbilt from his yet see strike that will make this one look like old times. But it will be at the bottom box.

Capitalism and Crime.

Some goodly people think the world is growing better. A few facts show otherwise.

In 1890 one out of every 1,442 was in prison; in 1899 one out of every 665, and in 1900 one out of every 371, and the crimes represent homicide, theft, and counterfeiting almost entirely.

In 1894 there were 7,749 homicides; in 1895, 8,000; in 1896, 10,000; in 1899 about 12,000, and in 1900 there were 743 suicides and 149 murders in San Francisco. It is estimated that there are over 25,000 suicides in this nation annually.

Prostitution has increased 50 per cent per capita during the past ten years. It is estimated that there are at present over 600,000 in the United States. Three thousand babies are abandoned by their mothers in New York City annually.

Rum shops increase at a fearful rate, there being in 1899 161,483 separate places and 423,274 persons employed. Nearly all of these saloons are the recruiting shops for political corruption, which increases with each election.

In 1890 we consumed 1,000,000 bags of beer. In 1899, with a population only two and one-half times greater, we consumed 27,000,000 barrels. In 1893 we consumed 504,074,400 gallons of liquors and wines. Seven years later we had increased the consumption to 1,184,373,448 gallons. Deaths from alcoholism have increased 15 per cent in the past twenty-five years.—Exchange.

Solemnity Record Broken.

Many good people who lay great store upon funeral ceremonies often express a horror of being "buried like a dog." As a rule it may be true enough that the funeral of the average departed canine is not a very imposing affair, but that there are exceptions to the rule, the following news item will show: Trenton, N. J., Oct. 18.—Trenton had a dog funeral last week that broke all records for solemnity.

It was for Fannie, the beloved pug dog of Mrs. C. E. Bosser of Cooper street.

Fannie's body lay in state all day in the front parlor of the Bosser home. It required a casket large enough for a four-year-old child, for Fannie had grown broad and heavy.

The casket was covered with black cloth and lined with stuffed pink silk. Fannie had been carefully washed so that her light brown fur matched the casket lining nicely. A large bow of white silk was around her neck.

Several hundred school children took leave of the dead pet in the afternoon and at night the children of the immediate neighborhood and many adults gathered to "view the remains."

There were solemn tunes played on the organ and the children who had frolicked with the dog sang hymns. Before the casket was closed and carried with much solemnity to the rear yard to be interred under a pear tree some of the children laid on it bouquets of carnations. Later a stone will be placed to mark the spot.

Mrs. Bosser's eyes are much inflamed with long weeping, for Fannie had suffered intensely for ten days and all a veterinary surgeon could do had failed to give relief.

The above is conclusive evidence that the world is growing better instead of worse. Any workingman who has ever chased around for enough money to buy a cheap pine coffin for his dead child, will especially appreciate the account of the funeral obsequies of this "beloved pug."

Activity in Minneapolis.

The comrades having been holding regular hall and street meetings since Sept. 1st the result of which is that Friday evening the 15th they elected forty-five members and transacted much valuable business for the cause.

Comrade C. H. Lockwood made an interesting report as organizer and called upon the comrades to set aside certain evenings to assist him in propaganda work. Comrade Chas. D. Raymer, the local literary agent, made a report showing over one hundred dollars worth of literature since Aug. 15th when Comrade Lockwood was hired as local organizer. Speakers are wanted, comrades contemplating a trip in this direction will confer a favor by writing G. H. Lockwood, 125 Nicollet avenue, at least two weeks ahead.

N. E. C. Financial Report.

The financial report of the National Ex. Com. for the month of September shows that including a balance on hand at the beginning of the month of $126.71 the total receipts from all sources during the month amounted to $312.63. The expenses for the month leave a balance on hand Sept. 30th of $184.10.

A sum of $60.54 was collected in aid of the strikers of the Amalgamated Iron, Steel and Tin workers, and was forwarded to that association. State charters were issued to Washington, Ohio, and Kentucky, and 15 local charters to comrades in the states of Alabama, Colorado, Delaware, Georgia, Indiana, Kansas, Maine and Missouri.

It should also be stated that large sums in aid of the steel strikers were forwarded directly by many state and local organizations and by individual members.

Socialist Pointers

We can now stand by and observe all the things that "public opinion" isn't going to do to Bobby Burke.

There is prosperity for all who can work—the working class; but they've got to work them good and plenty.

It is true that the capitalists do no useful work. We never knew one of them yet to hustle for the Workers' gain.

Up to the present Archbishop Corrigan, the Socialist anathema, doesn't seem to hanker after Father McGrady's game.

A Socialist who doesn't vote for Socialism is about the best definition of nothing that we can think of at this moment.

So there is no fourteen years hanging over Bobby Burke. But there is $25,000 hanging to him instead. Amen, also O. K.

These lucky individuals who "divided up" the $50,000,000 profits of the Steel Trust, can't see where Socialism comes in at all.

A writ of injunction has been issued against the piano-workers, in the interests of the fellows who work the piano-workers.

"Responsibility for Misrule"

The "Independent" Exposes the Connection Between "Business Interests" and Municipal Corruption. Where the Strength of Tammany Lies. Similarity of Conditions in Chicago Municipal Politics.

Under the title of "Responsibility for Misrule," the Independent of October 15th says, among other things:

"Many thousands of business men will vote for Mr. Low because they are Republicans, and Mr. Low is the regular nominated candidate of the Republican party. If these same business men had formed the habit—which the dream reformer would long ago have had them form—of thinking of municipal politics as something to be divorced from national politics, it is safe to say that they would not vote a fusion ticket. With a single-minded enthusiasm that would take away the reformer's breath, they would put in THEIR WORK FOR TAMMANY HALL. This we know is a well-nigh appalling statement. But we also know that it is unqualifiedly true. The average business man in New York City, Chicago or Philadelphia, right down to the bottom of his heart, does not want an unflinching, honest, business like administration, which will enforce the law to the letter and mete out strict justice. On the contrary, he wants an administration that he can 'see.' He wants policemen who will stroll stolidly by while the sidewalk in front of his warehouse is piled five feet high with packing cases. He wants a board of assessors who are 'all right' on the delicate subject of apertal assessments or street improvements. He wants a building department which will let him put in wood for iron, and for cement, and brick walls for windows. He wants a board of health that will get too busy when he burns soft coal, or violates the ordinance in regard to the storage of noxious materials. These are hard sayings, but every man in New York City who has survived the age of the human being are supposed to out eye teeth knows that they are true, and no one knows it better than the average New York business man himself. In his moments of relaxation, when he talks with you freely on the railroad train, or at the club, he owns up to every one of these indignities, and says even harsher things about himself and his associates. There could be no greater nonsense than the talk that the strength of the Tammany organization lies in the ignorant and vicious classes of this great city. THE STRENGTH OF TAMMANY IS IN THE RESPECTABLE, GOD-FEARING, CHURCH-GOING, WELL-TO-DO BUSINESS CLASSES, AND THEY KNOW IT, as every one who is not a simpleton knows it. . . . They are the men who can choke off and trample down this whole organization of villainy in municipal politics if they wish to do so. As long as they can make the people in general believe that responsibility rests not with them, but on the ignorant and the vicious, and as long as they can keep the dream reformers babbling about some childish change in political machinery, or about the necessity of carrying business methods into politics, the temptation to go right on with their actual practice of business methods in politics will doubtless be great. The appeal must be made to something infinitely greater than their business interests and their business sense. It must be made to their manhood, to their citizenship, to their sense of moral responsibility."

Now the Independent is by no means a Socialist paper, but its view of the relations existing between the business men and Tammany Hall is identical with that held by Socialists who have carefully watched the apparent intricacies of municipal politics in all the great cities of the country. Taking Chicago as its subject, the Workers' Call has frequently pointed out the connection between the back-wards and the "leaves" at election periods, the fraudulent nature of so-called "reform" movements, and the cause of their utter impotence. It has insisted time and again that the political power attributed to boodles, aldermen, alim politicians and so-called "gray wolves" was but the shadow of the real power embodied in the property and business interests, or, to quote the Independent, "the respectable, God-fearing, church-going, well-to-do classes."

The "dream reformer" and the "professional reformer" are used by this class for a two-fold purpose. First, as a bait to deceive the great mass of the voters into believing that capitalist respectability and morality really demand the suppression of the "corrupt" politician. The "dreamer" as an individual makes a real fight, the "professional" puts up an imitation which he knows to be a sham—and both the "corrupt" politician and "respectable" business man are thoroughly familiar with the fraudulent nature of the conflict. It is what the Independent calls the "simulation" who is alone deceived into surrendering his vote—a category that is mainly composed of workmen who do not recognize either their own or the business man's class interests, and a handful of fool friends of the "dream reformer."

In the second place, the "reformer" of both types can be used to some extent as a check upon the rapacity of the alim politician, which that individual attempts to make use of his reflected power in his own interests at the expense of his masters, the "well-to-do business classes." They are inclined to permit him a limited compensation for his compliance in such matters as the Independent points out. But this limit is fairly well defined, and when overstepped, the "reformer" appears upon the scene. The hour of "boodles" is raised, and the thieving parasites of the local capitalist interests are dealt upon with all the indignation necessary to arouse the "most efficient" (i. e., the alim politician).

to a realization that measures must be immediately taken to put an end to these peculations. It is at this period that the slogan of a "business administration" is raised. Municipal matters must be "divorced" from politics, and conducted on business principles. The "simulation" rally to the call. The election is held. Here and there a "gray wolf" is dropped out and his place taken by an "honest business man." A loud chorus of "rejoicing" is at once heard. Even greater reforms are to be inaugurated. The purification has commenced and will be pushed with vigor. "Municipal Voters Leagues" and good government "clubs" spring up and branch out in all directions. The fool friends of the "dream reformer" are highly elated, and begin to draw pictures of municipal paradises for the edification of whoever takes them seriously. The working class "simulation" goes back to the factory and the sweatshop, conscious that he has done his part in electing "good men" to office while the "corrupt gang" are represented as being terror-stricken by the change of the reformers. They have received a lesson—the "simulation" interprets—as a forecast of their extermination as a factor in politics. The "gang" however interpret it differently and more correctly. To them it is but a warning that they have overstepped the limit of personal plundering which their masters are willing to stand for, and that a halt has been called.

Let any intelligent person make an impartial generalization of municipal politics in Chicago for the last few years and we defy him to come to any other conclusion than above given. And as the Independent says, nobody knows its truth better than the "business" element who work the game in their own interests.

But in its remedy for this state of affairs, the Independent is hopelessly and ridiculously wrong. Such a lame conclusion may be justly regarded as a subterfuge deliberately adopted by the writer to prevent the article from being classed as the expression of an uncompromising Socialist. It is impossible to believe that a man who so clearly sees the relations he has so ably exposed, really takes refuge in platitudes which he cannot but know are the stock-in-trade of the "dream reformer" with whose childish babble he is thoroughly familiar. There is no help in the business element. There is no ideal in their possession higher than the conservation of their material interests. Whatever sense of moral responsibility, manhood or good citizenship they have, is thoroughly dominated by, involved in, and inseparable from their business interests. It could not be otherwise. No class can place itself outside its interests, or can be expected to do so. It is the supposition that this can be done—that constitutes the "dream" of the reformer—and we may add that in our opinion the writer is as familiar with this truth as the business men are with the fact that their class is the real strength and support of Tammany, and other so-called "corrupt" political organizations.

No, the change must come, and will come through the power of the working class alone. They are the only class that are potent to make that change, and not because of their ideas of moral responsibility, manhood, or good citizenship, but primarily from the fact that their class interests as workers will impel them to make the change. Tammany, using the word as a type, is a necessary adjunct of capitalism, and will disappear with it, but only when a Socialist working class of sufficient power to overthrow the present economic system, appears on the scene.

Have you read Walter Thomas Mills, book, "How to Work for Socialism"? If you haven't, get a copy of it at once, or have your branch get ten or fifteen copies, and after they have read it, give it to every new member that comes into the branch. This book is for sale at the Workers' Call office, single copies five cents. Special price on quantities. Even the "old timers" can learn something out of this book.

Reports state that in two provinces of China, nearly one million people are dying of starvation, and that the famine is still spreading. This is really strange news. We were under the impression that the missionary looking raids were over and done with long ago.

The farewell sermon of Dr. Thomas before departing for Florida, bore the curious title of "Things That Abide." As the Rev. gentleman certainly can not consider himself one of them, we presume that he referred to the Trinity, which he so fiercely attacked between two and three years ago.

The Tilden Democracy has declared "war" on the City Hall. They want to turn the rascals out, and call upon all honest citizens to lend a hand in the job. When the job is completed the jobs won't be distributed, but the honest citizen won't figure largely in that part of the performance.

What has become of the idiot who used to write about the necessity of educating the workmen so that he might not be led astray by Socialist teachings? Has capitalism really succeeded in stamping this out?

Socialist Temple Dramatic Club will give an entertainment about the latter part of November. Watch for particulars later.

THE CO-OPERATIVE.

Summary of Previous Articles, and the Possibility of Their Application to Chicago Conditions.

In the last few issues of The Workers' Call has appeared the greater part of the semi-official text-book issued by our French comrades on the value of socialist co-operatives, both to those who join them and to the socialist party. A series of articles now running in the International Socialist Review on the Belgian co-operative movement will show any attentive reader that the socialist co-operative is not a dream but a fact.

The advantages of the socialist co-operative to the individual workman may be briefly summed up as follows:

1. It enables him to buy pure food and honestly-made clothing instead of the poisonous food and shoddy clothing offered by the competition market.
2. It does this at even lower prices than are charged for the adulterated goods, thus enabling its members to obtain the necessities and comforts of life at a less cost, so that they can afford to spend money for the higher education of themselves and their children and for socialist propaganda.

For the socialist party the socialist co-operative also offers advantages of the highest importance.

1. By giving a portion of its profits to the party it makes it possible to carry on a more effective campaign of propaganda.
2. It acquires buildings which can be used for public meetings and from which the socialist cannot be shut out by the action of any capitalist.

3. It trains the workmen in the practical management of affairs, thus developing talent that will be indispensable as soon as a municipal election has been won and the socialists have to assume the responsibility of public office.

All this has been fully accomplished in the principal cities and many smaller towns of Belgium, as well as in many cities of France.

Now is there any reason why the socialist co-operative should not be equally successful in America—in Chicago? Objects will at once urge that capitalist concentration as shown in the department stores has gone too far to leave room for the co-operative. But a careful examination of the facts shows this to be a mistake. Each of the principal department stores spends immense sums every week in newspaper advertising. This has to be made up from the profit on the goods, and as a matter of fact, we find that the retail prices of goods at department stores are a least 20 per cent above current wholesale prices. This is a large margin than our Belgian comrades could count on when they began building up their co-operatives.

An obstacle which has been really serious in that for years in this country the idea of co-operative stores has been persistently advocated by a class of people whom our comrades usually describe as "frisks," people who didn't know the difference between economic determinism and capitalist production and who loudly proclaimed that co-operation would solve the whole social problem in about eleven months. Now it is not in the least surprising that some of our comrades, knowing all they wanted to know of this class of well-meaning individuals, and not yet being informed about the Belgian co-operatives, refused to have anything to do with our movements on the ground that we had no right to use the name "socialist co-operative," that it might be a failure and would in that event discredit socialism.

The objection deserves a fair answer and I will try to give it. We use the phrase "socialist co-operation" for the express purpose of emphasizing our purposes and of distinguishing ourselves from the middle-class utopian reformers of whom I have spoken.

The socialist co-operative of Chicago is organized principally for promoting the cause of socialism, and only incidentally for supplying its members with these necessities and comforts of life at less than current prices. No one but a member of the socialist party can become a voting member of the co-operative.

THE NEW SOCIALIST TEMPLE.

The socialists of the west division of Chicago, relying on the help and support of the socialists of the whole United States, are taking steps toward the erection of a permanent building to take the place of the old church now used as the "Socialist Temple." By a unanimous vote of the full committee last Sunday it was voted to place the building fund and the building itself under the control of the socialist co-operative of Chicago. This means that the co-operative which was started less than three months ago by a few members and was looked upon by many comrades with considerable suspicion, has now won the full confidence of the best informed and most active members of the socialist party. Henceforth the property of the co-operative will mean the property of the socialist party of Chicago, and vice versa.

For the benefit of new readers of The Workers' Call and of others who may not have noticed the first reports of the socialist co-operative meetings, I will explain briefly our plan of organization. We are not a stock company where a man can pay as many shares as he can pay for and cast a vote for each share. We are an "association" not for pecuniary profit, and the membership fee is $3.00. Whenever possible the full amount should be paid in cash, for the co-operative needs more capital at once to get its work, but in order to give every party member the benefits of the co-operative, we require only to come in advance, and allow the balance of $4.00 to be paid out of the quarterly rebate.

These rebates are arranged in this way: Goods are sold for cash at ordinary retail prices; at the end of each quarter the cost of goods and the expenses for labor, etc., are deducted from the gross sales and the net profit is figured out. One-eighth of this is devoted to socialist propaganda, one-eighth is set aside for a reserve fund to increase the capital of the co-operative, and the remaining three-fourths is divided among the members in proportion to their purchases.

If it could be seen that with every increase of membership the saving to each member will increase, for by purchasing goods in large quantities we can obtain lower prices, and the expense of selling is proportionately less as the amount of sales increases.

I wish to urge upon every member of the socialist party in Illinois the duty of joining the socialist co-operative at once and of making his purchases as far as possible through the co-operative. At present the cash saving to each member will not be great, though as our membership grows it will become a really important item in the budget of a working-class household. But that is not the main reason why you should co-operative you will build up an organization that will be a tremendously joint. The reason is that in the socialist co-operative means of socialist propaganda.

WHAT THE TEMPLE WILL BE.

In the first place, it will contain a hall capable of seating at least 1,000 people. This will be available for propaganda meetings, lectures, conventions, concerts, balls and any other use in the way of political activity and amusement. There will also be an ample number of committee rooms of various sizes, to accommodate the varied needs of the party and of the labor union, with which our relations are becoming more and more intimate. Again, there will be the necessary rooms for the entertainment and comfort of the comrades, men, women and children. Finally, there will be sales-rooms for the co-operative.

WHAT WILL BE SOLD.

At present, the co-operative deals in non-perishable groceries and in coal. Our available capital is only about $200, and while it has been judiciously invested in a choice stock of pure foods, it is not possible without more capital to carry a variety that will meet the needs of all our members.

There are now in the state of Illinois about 1,000 regularly enrolled party members, which number will probably be doubled inside a year. Of these at least 1,000 ought to be members of the Socialist Co-operative before the end of 1901. With a capital of $5,000 instead of $200 we shall be enabled to carry a complete line of food stuffs and to add a line of shoes, underwear, furnishings and such other articles of prime necessity as experience proves to be most in demand among our members.

Every party member will want a voice in the management of the new temple. A meeting of the membership will be held soon, probably the last Saturday of November, to elect a permanent building committee. If you want the new temple to be a fact, send in your application for a membership, with $5.00 if you can pay it, or $3.00 if you have not the $5.00.

OUTSIDE MEMBERSHIP WANTED.

Any member of the socialist party in the United States is eligible to membership in the co-operative. We have one member at Springfield, Ohio, and one at Girard, Kas. We want north and south side members; we shall start supply depots in the various wards of the city as the increase of membership justifies it. We want members in every socialist local in the state; the working-men of smaller towns are often charged exorbitant prices for their groceries. Let the comrades in any socialist local in Illinois make up an order for at least 100 pounds of groceries (so as to get bottom freight rates) and send us the amount of money you would have to pay your local grocer; our prices will surely be enough lower to pay the first installment on your membership out of the difference.

The same offer will apply anywhere in the United States where freight rates are not too high. If your retail grocer can order from a wholesaler in Chicago, you can save money by ordering from the co-operative, and what is more important, you will know that the profit goes to keep the cause of socialism and not to prolong the existence of a class of small middle-men that has ceased to be useful.

In Belgium every union man is not only a union man but also (with rare exceptions) a member of the socialist party and of the socialist co-operative, receiving the loyal support of the union men and the socialists, aids them in turn by supplying the party with money for propaganda work and by supplying the union men with food at the time of a strike. Surely American workmen are not less intelligent than those of Belgium. Let us take hold of the socialist co-operative with a will, and make it a success.

CHARLES E. KERN.

QUESTIONS OF THE FUTURE

"Accumulation" and "Pay" Under the System of Collective Ownership of the Means of Production.

A correspondent asks, if under socialism an individual will be able to accumulate wealth. This is one of those questions in which it is necessary to define the terms used before an intelligent answer can be given. Let us take the ordinary conception of wealth objects created by human labor, whose use in consumption satisfies human wants. Why is it that these things are accumulated? Is it because the accumulator wishes to use them himself? No. Want them. He accumulates merely for the sake of realizing a PROFIT from the sale of the things accumulated. That is the sole incentive to accumulation at present. Wealth is not accumulated for its use value but for its exchange value.

When the system of producing things for profit gives place to their production for use, the incentive for "accumulation" will disappear. No man would want to gather for instance a thousand coats or a thousand sacks of wheat or a hundred houses or a dozen railroads or steel mills or cotton factories, for the reason that these possessions would be of no use whatever to him. The latter items, representing the social tools used for the production of necessary things, and capable only of being operated by collective labor, he could hardly accumulate, as he would be required to give an equivalent of the product of his own labor for them; the former items, themselves the product of labor, he could certainly accumulate, but he would undoubtedly be looked upon much as a miser who hoards gold for the mere pleasure of possession, is now regarded. Such men are even now considered as abnormal, and the folly of their course is apparent to all.

Wealth will be accumulated under socialism, but its ownership, like its production will be collective. When all are producers the use and enjoyment of the product will be common to all. Personal property such as clothing, furniture, etc., used by the individual will of course still remain, but no one will care to encumber himself with things he cannot use. Such things cannot be used for the exploitation of the labor of others, when exploitation has disappeared, neither will there be any necessity of saving up for a "rainy day" as the saying goes, for the reason that the "rainy day" is only an expression denoting uncertainty of living for the wage laborer, which capitalism now creates. When capitalism disappears, the dreaded "rainy day" will vanish with it, and the "thrift" which has been elevated into a virtue under capitalism will take the same course. There will be no necessity for an individual to stint himself or herself of the full use and enjoyment of the product of their labor. But this does not mean that wanton waste will ensue when the necessity for "thrift" which now too often means semi-starvation and deprivation of really necessary things, is removed.

Our correspondent also asks "if there is any way known as to how the men will get pay" under socialism. This question is like the preceding one formulated under the conception of the continuation of the wage system, in the mind of the inquirer. Wages is the portion which the laborer receives of the product upon which his labor is expended, or its equivalent in money. It is always only a part—the rest of the product the laborer is told he has no concern with. It is evident that when the laborer gets the entire product, or its equivalent in other products which he may personally need, his reward cannot be called wages. Wages belong to the capitalist system of production alone, so under socialism there will be no wages in the sense that the term is now used, and it is in this sense that our correspondent evidently uses the term "pay."

How will the producers appropriate the product of their labor? What form will the appropriation take? There are many suggestions as to the matter, amongst which we may mention money, labor certificates, time checks, though it is well to bear in mind that these are suggestions only, and to say positively how this will be done would necessitate the possession of prophetic power on the part of the individual making the statement. This is a question which will be met and solved at the proper time, and can be safely left to those to whom it will come up for consideration. At present Socialists have quite enough on hand in getting possession of the product. After that is accomplished the other will be attended to in due order. To be coaxed, the hare must first be caught.

If such a question as this really proves a stumbling block to our correspondent, it is only because he can conceive of Socialism as a "plan" alone. If this were so, Socialists would be bound to provide a definite answer, but seeing that it is not so, they labor under no such obligation. If our correspondent can grasp the idea that a new form of society is taking shape in the midst of an older form that has nearly run its course and that this older form in its decay provides the elements which in time constitute its successor, he will see at once the impossibility of definite assertions as to the methods and details which will be pursued by a new society whose elements are as yet only in process of formation. Such matters in the nature of things can only be determined by those before whom they will come up for immediate consideration, and it is perhaps needless to add that the work before Socialists at present, the capture of the powers of state by the working-class is of infinitely more importance than the discussion of details relating to arrangements which will have to be made after that event. If the working-class are sufficiently intelligent to win the battle for control of the means of production and distribution, they will receive information as to how to reap the results of their victory. The great fact really is, that the struggle cannot be avoided.

"Never put off till tomorrow what can be done today." Sell your neighbor a bad card.

We must positively fill the First Regt. Armory on Nov. 31st. See that every member of your branch is supplied with tickets.

Industrial Life of Primitive Man.

Extracts from Lecture Delivered Before Class of Social Economy by Mrs. May Wood Simons.

We are born into a society with many and complex social institutions and since we are but little impressed by the gradual almost imperceptible changes that are going on we unconsciously fall into the error of believing that what is, is permanent. For example, take governments. What is more confusing than to have all the local, state and international relations that exist to-day? We are able to understand these only by going back to the form of governments that is to be found in the organization of gentes in savagery and following its growth up to civilized times. Or if it is not institutions it is the arts. For instance, architecture. Our modern dwelling of stone and brick with all its improvements is but recent. History tells us of the shelters made first of animal skins or branches and bark of trees, of the mud huts, of the long communal houses, and so on to the present time. For whatever direction we turn we shall find that the beginnings of nearly all of our institutions and arts are to be found away back in savagery, and that as men's wants have multiplied and they have gained greater power over physical forces, material things to satisfy these wants have likewise multiplied and grown more complicated and perfect.

Savage man and his accomplishments must not be underestimated. Round by his brute nature, having no knowledge of the forces about him or how to turn them to his advantage and with but his advance was accomplished with the most patient labor. The great achievement of civilization have only been possible because of this foundation laid by savage and barbarous men who helped to hew the way out for us.

To begin then, a study of society, there is no better way than to turn back and by a historical survey understand the beginnings. At the same time the doctrine so universally accepted by socialists that economic conditions determine social institutions and likewise the theory of social evolution dwell on in our last lecture can find no clearer proof than that furnished by a careful study of successive social stages.

We begin now with a study of primitive man. Our knowledge of prehistoric man has been gained from two main sources. If we bar out the traditions that have been handed down and that are always more or less unreliable.

The first source is found in a study of the remains of weapons, tools, clothing, tombs, dwellings and even the bones of man himself that are buried in the earth. The life of some societies of primitive men, such for instance, as the Lake dwellers, has been in this way fairly well pictured to us.

The second source is the study of the modern savage. By many this is looked upon as a most fruitful way of learning about early man since the savage of to-day is supposed to be a very good example of our removed forefathers. Among others the question arises as to whether contact even slight with civilization has not in many ways altered the savage so that he is no longer an any means accurate example of prehistoric man. We cannot go into this discussion but will review the accepted facts concerning early industrial life. All these facts go to prove that man began at the bottom of the scale in life. John Lubbock in his "Pre-Historic Times," says, "The lowest race of existing savages must be at least as far advanced as were our ancestors when they spread over the earth's surface. They had no bows and arrows, they were naked and ignorant of the art of spinning; they had no agriculture and probably no domestic animals. That our earliest ancestors could have counted to ten is very improbable considering that so many races now in existence cannot get beyond four."

One of the first great industrial arts to be practiced by man was the catching of fish. This made fire a necessity and enabled men to leave somewhat a tropical climate and follow the course of rivers since they could now store the fish and have a more permanent supply of food. At this period man had come to be distinctively a tool making animal.

For a long time it was doubted whether the rudely chipped flint he looked upon as evidence of this period were tools used by man at all or whether man was ever so low that he employed only stones for tool making. These tools had no handles and probably only a covering of moss, grass or hide served to protect the hand. The next step was therefore an invention of great importance. Handles were attached to stone implements. This gave greater leverage and a greater variety of motions and made possible the spear, harpoon, javelin and axe.

To return now to the polished stone implements, as would at once be surmised they were a long step in advance and a marked change in society is at once evident. We now find axes with a cutting edge. This enabled them to clear forests, make boats and fight more effectively.

Like our modern savage they utilized every portion of the animal they caught. They ate the flesh and used the skin for clothing, picked every fragment of marrow out of the bones and often fashioned the bones themselves into weapons. From the horns they made hammers and handles for hatchets. Although the clothing was mostly made of the skins of animals fragments of rude fabrics made of flax or straw fibers are found among the remains of the ancient Lake dwellers and also crude spindle-work.

of cereals gave a fixed place of abode during a portion at least of the year. This cultivation was at first in gardens that gradually grew into fields.

It was now that something of social institutions became necessary, such as the tribal chieftain and tribal ownership. It is pointed out by many writers that there are savages in existence who have not yet any conception of land as property whether private or collective and who have barely a notion of individual ownership of the objects they personally possess such as ornaments, arms, skins of beasts for clothing, etc.

The early man who did not till the soil but supported himself by hunting and fishing had to have access to a vast territory as it is estimated that each such savage requires 3 square miles for his support. When the country grew in population it was necessary to divide the land among the tribes. Lateral shows that this earliest distribution of land was into pasture and territories for the chase common to the tribe. The products of the chase, the tools even the rude boats, were common property.

A certain amount of commerce and traveling characterizes the age of bronze as well as an established society. Pottery is now found decorated with curves but no colors or inscriptions have as yet been discovered. The skins of animals were still used much for clothing but linen is also found as well as a woven suit belonging probably to some chieftain and thought to have been made in the later bronze age.

In every age and among every people the raw material that their environment provided for them to work on has determined the character of the product. Otis Mason of Smithsonian Institute writes on this, "See how each people of the earth is characterized by its raw materials. An Equino collection is white. The art of the British Columbian is red; of Oregon and California yellow, of the Puebloan, of Mexico gray. All this is plain enough when you know the color of walrus ivory, of mountain goat horn, of cedar and grasses and spruce root, of fire clay when baked and of volcanic building stones. People express themselves in the material at hand. The Egyptian was furnished with lime stone so he hammered away at that. His ideas could mount no higher than the material. On the other hand, the Greek was provided by environment with the whitest, finest and thickest quarries of marble on earth. It was expected of him that he should give the highest expression of the aesthetic faculty in sculpture and architecture."

LOCAL PARTY NOTES

DISTRICT NO. 4.

The organization committee of the 4th district meets every first and third Sundays at 10 a. m. At their last meeting the organizer reported three new branches in the 27th ward making altogether in the ward, with a combined membership of 104 in good standing. He also reported that he had and had a new application. He procured a hall and called a meeting for Oct. 30—p. m. (Kreft's Hall, Ashland avenue and Addison street.) It was resolved that we push The Workers' Call vigorously, and all the members took a supply of sub-cards.

It was decided to retain the organizer and keep up the good work until the branches are strong enough to carry on the work of propaganda by systematic circulation of literature. A committee was elected to get out posters and secure halls for agitation by the 1st of December or sooner if possible.

SHOOTING.

That discussion meetings were beneficial, and that no branch should let a business meeting pass without discussing some topic or other bearing on the social problem, was the unanimous opinion expressed at the organization committee meeting last Sunday at Socialist Hall, 728 W. 63d street. The last ward branch reported great interest being taken in such meetings, the last one held being well attended, and very successful. The next branch meeting will be on Friday, Nov. 8th at Lundquist's Hall, 61st and Morgan streets, and the subject, "Has the Socialist Movement lost in clearness what it has gained in numbers since 1899." The 23d ward branch meeting at 728 W. 63d street first and third Friday reported action taken to the same effect, the first topic being "The misrepresentation of Socialism."

The 33d ward reported having rented Roseland Hall, at 111th and Michigan avenue, for agitation meetings during the winter at an expense of $34 per month. Also that the branch will give a ball at Kensington Turner Hall on 28th 10th of December. The 7th ward reported having guaranteed to sell 100 Workers' Call cards during the month of November. Financial support was pledged by the 6th ward branch, $1.00 per month; 7th $1.00, 8th $2.00, 9th $2.00, and the 31st ward expressed its belief in the success of the coming election at Lundquist's Hall on Nov. 8th, by donating nearly all its available funds, $10.00, to the committee. The committee decided to offer its assistance to the weaker ward branches in holding meetings, by advertising through The Call informing party members living in other wards when assistance is needed and in every possible way aid

The branch, night ward, branches were represented at the meeting, and the official business was transacted through the session.

The Saturday evening meeting was addressed by Com. Saunders, an interesting discussion following. Although the attendance was rather small $1.25 was collected.

The Sunday meeting was well attended. Comrade Laria being the speaker. The collection amounted to $2.45. Address all matters on organization, meetings, etc., to division organizers.

On Saturday, Nov. 3rd, Comrade Parkway and Decker will speak at 728 W. 4th Street. On Sunday, Nov. 4th, Comrade Cattermole will speak on "Socialism and the Socialist Program." ARNOLD HAMMERSHAGEN, 614 Loomis Street.

WEST SIDE.

A fully attended meeting of the West Division was held on Sunday morning, October 27th, at which a great deal of business was transacted.

The Socialists of the east end of the 12th Ward, organized with 41 charter members, and paid up for dues of every member for the month of October, also ordered sixteen Call cards to start in business. A very good beginning indeed.

All wards have provided themselves with Call tickets to the amount of $750 up far, also diamonds and stickers. In addition about 1,000 diamonds and 25,000 stickers announcing the big ball of the Socialists of Chicago, will be distributed among the branches next Sunday, so all organizers will please be on hand.

So far no other branch has decided to sub-divide its ward into districts save the 12th, but if anything will compel them to do so it is this very work that they are doing now. Get a map of your ward, comrades, and get to work on the plan and you will have a propaganda machine that no other political party could dream of, as it can never have the workers with the zeal of a socialist.

In the month of September the branches have purchased due stamps to the amount of $22.50, in the month of October (the amount increased) to $42.66, showing a healthy growth of the movement in the West Division.

The financial report for the week ending October 27th is as follows:

RECEIPTS.
Balance from Oct. 20	$ 7.50
12th ward donations	1.00
11th ward call cards, acct.	1.00
12th ward call cards, acct.	1.00

Socialist Temple Notes.

Last Sunday Comrade W. H. Wilson delivered his last address in Chicago before leaving for California. A large audience was in attendance.

The debate between Comrades Hughes and Untermyer was a success from every standpoint and ended with the usual fight neither side being convinced of the error of their ways.

Next Sunday Comrade A. M. Simons will speak on the conditions at the stock yards.

On next Wednesday Comrade Geo. Evans will speak at the Temple.

Saturday Nov. 10, a tag party will be given for the benefit of the Workers' Call. Every man in the party should be present and help make that affair a success.

A good program has been arranged. Nearly all the party orators will be present and address the audience.

25th Ward Reorganization.

On Friday evening, October 19th, Branch No. 2 of the 25th Ward reorganized with Comrade Walter Higgins in line chair.

Comrade Geo. L. Simons was elected Secretary-Treasurer, and Comrade Jas. Wright, Organizer, and Literary Agent. Comrade C. A. Harrison was elected committee on speakers.

When Comrade Wright announced that he had a list of 45 persons who desired to become members of Branch No. 2, the announcement was received with enthusiasm.

The members of the branch realize that they have in Comrade Wright an organizer who will make the east half of the 25th Ward give a good account of itself in the coming campaign.

Eight of the members have agreed to pay into the branch treasury $1.50 per month. The secretary has been instructed to pay the national and state dues of every member out of the branch treasury on the first day of each month, no member being asked to pay dues who is sick or out of work. All surplus funds over and above the expenses of the branch to be expended on socialist propaganda, literature, etc.

Comrade Wright made a motion to endorse the Workers' Call, which was unanimously carried, and that we purchase the following:

Geo. L. Simons, Secretary.

Mail Meetings.

Sunday 8 p.m. Socialist Hall, corner Milwaukee Ave. and Armitage Ave. Speaker: Mrs. Carrie Woodward. Subject: Women and Socialism.

Sunday, 2:30 p.m. Aurora Hall, corner Milwaukee Ave. and Huron Street. Speakers: J. W. Hartwell, W. J. Good.

Comrade John Collins is on the west part of usual. Last Thursday he addressed the Dueser's Union at Schumacher's Hall, 4th Street and Ashland Avenue, fully four hundred persons being present. The subject was the relation of Trades Unions towards Socialism and many of the points made by the speaker were loudly applauded. A very considerable amount of socialist literature was sold at the close of the meeting, which is very significant of the interest displayed in the remarks of the speaker.

Water Superintendent Nozick, who was suspended from office for using vile and abusive language to an expressman, has been reinstated by the "new" board, which, while censuring him for the language, declared him to be an exceedingly efficient superintendent. The Daily News states that the trial was such a farce comedy that there was no question of the decision, "probably to create the impression that other similar trials, such as that of Nozick, for instance, are conducted seriously and impartially, and that this case is rather the exception than the rule."

Socialist Party Platform.

The Socialist Party of America in National Convention assembled, reaffirms its adherence to the principles of International Socialism, and declares its aim to be the organization of the working class, and those in sympathy with it into a political party, with the object of conquering the powers of government and using them for the purpose of transforming the present system of private ownership of the means of production and distribution into collective ownership by the entire people.

Formerly the tools of production were simple and owned by the individual worker. Today the machine, which is but an improved and more developed form of the tools of the individual, has taken the place of the individual worker, and the ownership of the tools of production and distribution is now in the hands of a few capitalists. This ownership enables the capitalists to control the product and keep the workers dependent upon them.

Private ownership of the means of production and distribution is responsible for the ever increasing uncertainty of livelihood and the poverty and misery of the working class, and it divides society into two hostile classes—the capitalists and wage-workers. The powerful middle class is rapidly disappearing in the mill of competition. The struggle is now between the capitalist class and the working class. The possession of the means of livelihood gives to the capitalists the control of the government, the press, the pulpit and the schools, and enables them to reduce the workingmen to a state of intellectual, physical and social inferiority, political servitude and virtual slavery.

The economic interests of the capitalist class dominate our entire social system; the lives of the working class are recklessly sacrificed for profit, wars are fomented between nations, and the destruction of whole races is sanctioned in order that the capitalists may extend their commercial domination abroad and enhance their supremacy at home.

But the same economic causes which developed capitalism are leading to socialism, which will abolish both the capitalist class and the class of wage workers. And the active force in bringing about this new and higher order of society is the working class. All other classes, despite their apparent or actual conflicts, are alike interested in the upholding of the system of private ownership of the instruments of wealth production. The Democratic, Republican, and all other parties which do not stand for the complete overthrow of the capitalist system of production, are alike political representatives of the capitalist class.

The workers can most effectively act as a class in their struggle against the collective powers of capitalism, by constituting themselves into a political party, distinct from and opposed to all parties formed by the propertyed classes.

While we declare that development of economic conditions tends to the overthrow of the capitalist system, we recognize that the time and manner of the transition to socialism also depend upon the stage of development reached by the proletariat. We, therefore, consider it of the utmost importance for the workers to support all active efforts of the working class to better its condition and to elect Socialists to political offices, in order to facilitate the attainment of this end.

News of the Week And its Philosophy.

All Chicago was at the horse show this week exhibiting their expensive garments which others had made in sweat shops or in factories, and making an ostentatious show of the wealth they had toiled not to produce. This again serves to call attention to the fact that "all Chicago" includes only those who have property. To be sure some of the propertyless paid, admission, that they might look upon their masters decked out in their finest array. As far as the working class is concerned, the horse show might as well have been held in some foreign land. The gay scenes and soft music were not for them, unless they were unfortunate enough to be obliged to do the work that made the horse show possible, and to go around in the garments that are the badge of their class where the contrast between people and nobodies could be more strongly drawn. But who paid the bills for all of this fun and display? Was it the men in the boxes? Their wage slaves in stores and in factories had to pay for it all, even if their own children went hungry.

Both Low and all the other reform candidates who were elected will now proceed to forget all the promises they made to the workingmen. They will rule in the interest of their class just as the corrupt politicians do.

Possibly the supreme judges are scared half to death over the formation of the anti-injunction league that promises to impeach them. Bluffs of this kind in off years sound pretty large, but when the workingmen continue to vote for the same order of things, the effect of their bluff is somewhat nullified. A solid vote of one million for a workingman's candidate will set a few people to thinking.

Capitalism in France would like nothing better than a war with Turkey to divert the minds of the people from social problems, and to stem the ever-rising tide of Socialism. Besides, the capitalists profit by all wars, and what does the killing of a few thousand workingmen who are unwilling soldiers, amount to beside fat contracts?

Two great financiers, Hill and Harrison, have divided up the Northwest for exploitation. All of the great transportation lines are in their hands and they will see to it that the territory is worked to the limit that the traffic will stand. Still no one seems to be excited over it.

Poor reconcentrated camps, according to the best information, are almost as undesirable places to live in, and as miserable and crowded as the old army reservations. No wonder the reformers get excited when contemplating them.

It is well known that the poor people in cities are charity boards and to county poor agents for assistance. True, in nearly all cases the applicants will be women who are unable to work, but because they are women and because they are weak is no reason they should be obliged to beg. The civilization that forces them to do so does not deserve to stand.

No doubt it will be a positive pleasure for the reformers to see the poor in New York to starve to death.

Brains are not well paid for in Germany according to the Frankfurter Zeitung. It has been ascertained that men who could prove to any impartial jury that they possessed brains, are working for as low as $30 a month. It is too bad, but if Mr. Curtis will look over the pay scale in his own country, he will find some men with at least alleged brains working for low wages. It is the man who can exploit both brains and muscle who gets well paid the world over. When the man with brains gets the fact that he is a wage slave pounded into his brains and unites with the toiler of manual labor, he may receive more of the good things of life in return.

Experts who declare that Chicago was perfectly safe; forget that if such was the case some other cause for his not will have to be found.

After reading the accounts of Duke Parson and his fellow evangelists, one is constrained to rub one's eyes and look again at the date of the paper to see if we are really in the 20th century.

Cuba will never know whether it is to be an independent country or a part of the United States until the sugar trust and the tobacco trust has decided which will be the most profitable for them.

The remoteness of the average clergyman from the real battle of life could not be more clearly shown than in the following opinion said to have been uttered by that eminent ecclesiastic, Bishop Potter of New York, in a recent interview:

News of the Movement

The past week has been one of the most active in the history of the Socialist movement in the United States. Everywhere there is activity. In some of the states there have been elections reports of which we have been unable to get for this week's issue, but the question as to whether there will be a gain is answered in advance. With capitalism working so hard there is sure to be a gain. A systematic effort seems to be under way to clear the country of Socialists. Two or three publications have been suppressed, or rather refused second class mail privileges, which amounts to the same thing, a large number of trade journals have been ordered to discontinue their advertisements or their paper, several Socialist speakers have been mobbed, a large number of ministers of the "gospel" have endeavored to prove the fallacy of Socialism, the capitalist journals have given them every aid. The usual weekly batch of injunctions, strikes and lock-outs. All of these things help along the cause of Socialism, arouse the activity of the comrades, and the outlook is extremely encouraging.

Comrade Willsie has been "writing a letter to the President." The Work-

Prisco, 300 in all, have made the Advance their official organ and put their names on its subscription list.

Socialists of New Castle, Pa., can't find a hall large enough to hold the crowds which flock to their meetings. They expect to elect their candidates.

The Workers' Call is about to change its name to the Chicago Socialist. It is becoming its circulation toward the 100,000 mark. Nearly state now has its Socialist paper, and the tendency is to localize more and more. A few national organs can no longer cover the field. The Undercurrent.

Los Angeles comrades are going to start a paper, the Los Angeles Socialist. Add another to the long list.

Socialists in Victoria, B. C., have established a Socialist Sunday School. Seventeen chapters issued last week in Texas.

Socialists in Texas have a new scheme to raise money. The comrades are picking up what cotton they find lying around the fields, and giving plants, and sending it to the State Secretary, who sells it. This plan won't work, however, in Chicago.

Nine chapters issued last week in Indiana—123 members.

Father McGraw is making a speaking tour of Indiana for the Socialists.

Eugene V. Debs has been speaking to immense audiences in the Southwest within the past few weeks.

Progress of the Trusts

In 1885 Charles Fourier, the pioneer socialist writer and thinker, thus described the tendencies of commercial development.

"Circumstances are tending toward the organization of the commercial classes into federal companies or affiliated monopolies, which, operating in conjunction with the great landed interests, will reduce the middle and laboring classes to a state of commercial vassalage, and, by the influence of combined action, will become masters of the productive industry of the entire nations. The small operators will be forced, indirectly, to dispose of their products according to the wishes of these monopolies; they will become mere agents, working for the mercantile coalition. We shall thus see the re-appearance of feudalism in an inverse order, founded on mercantile leagues and answering to the baronial leagues of the Middle Ages."

"Everything is conspiring to produce this result. The spirit of commercial monopoly and financial speculation has extended even to the great. Public opinion prostrates itself before the bankers and financiers, who in the capitals share authority with the gov-his larger rival. . . . Even the large capitalist is giving place to the company; a growing proportion of business can be managed only by gigantic companies with an immense capital, and elaborate organization, and an army of working people. . . .

In keeping with the general expansion the market also widens until it embraces entire countries and the whole world; and in this world market it is only the most powerful competitor fighting with enormous capital and with the best natural advantages that has any chance of prosperity or even of self-preservation. . . . Success leads to an enlarged business and enlarged business, on the whole, leads to greater efficiency in the competitive struggle. . . . The result is to put economic power in the hands of the combined corporations, to place at their mercy the source and means of subsistence of the people—to establish an industrial feudalism such as the world has never seen. . . . The issue must either be an industrial feudalism served by wage laborers, or the control of industry for the good of the people."

It has been said that the best evidence that can be given that a law of nature is understood is the ability which it confers of predicting results. Thus the best evidence that the law of astronomy can be applied to the future is the fact that it can tell us the position of the stars in advance of its occurrence. And these predictions always come true. If we recognize the validity of such a law, is not the fact that industrial development is so manifestly following along the lines which socialist writers predicted years ago that it would, a striking proof that they had correctly interpreted the laws which control industrial progress? It is certain that no other class of writers has ever been able to predict the course of development with anything like the same accuracy. And what is to be the outcome of this movement? In 1887 Mr. Kirkup wrote:

"Socialists regard these colossal corporations and the wealthy bosses that direct them as the greatest pioneers of their cause. By concentrating the economic functions of the country into large masses, they are simply helping forward the socialist movement. Their mission is to displace the smaller capitalists, but they will thereby eventually undermine capitalism altogether. In proportion as the centralization of industry is pushed forward, the easier will it be for the democratic people to take control of it for the public good. They are only hastening the time when a vast educated and organized democracy, subsisting on precarious wage labor, will find itself face to face with a limited number of mammoth capitalists. Such a crisis can have only one result. The swifter, the more complete the success of the most powerful bosses, the quicker will be their overthrow by a democratic society."

The surprising growth of trusts in the last few years is fulfilling the prediction of the socialists, and hastening the coming of the co-operative commonwealth.

The White Mountain Paper Company has been organized with a capital of $2,000,000.

Under pressure of American competition a British iron and steel trust is reported, with a capital of $20,000,000.

Fourteen leading strawboard manufacturers are preparing to combine, with a capital of $2,000,000.

A camera and photographic supply trust is reported, with a capital of $25,000,000.

A lead trust with a capital of $120,000,000 is under way.

All the brick manufacturers of New England and New York are being merged by Standard Oil organizers.

A salmon trust is being organized on the Pacific coast with a capital of $20,000,000.

Let the good work go on comrades, the faster the better.

We Can Use Them.

The Catholic Truth Society are now circulating a pamphlet entitled "Socialism: The Crying Evil of the Hour," by the Rev. J. M. Rickaby, S. J., with the purpose to be an attack upon Socialism. The Socialist Party of Chicago will try if possible to get a quantity for use in propaganda, as they believe that the "absolute possibility of the alleged arguments will react favorably to Socialism as the reader of average intelligence. Copies will be on sale at the Workers' Call office, by next week. Price one cent.

Municipal Platform Wanted.

The N. E. C. has appointed the Committee on Municipal Affairs as provided by the Indianapolis convention, and as a working basis it is desired to secure as complete a list as possible of municipal platforms issued by the Socialists. All comrades are therefore requested to mail copies of such platforms together with any leaflets that may have been issued on municipal matters, to the undersigned, temporary secretary of the committee. A. M. RIMON, 14 1/2 Ave., Chicago, Ill. Party papers please copy.

A six-months' sub. to the Workers' Call is very appropriate for a Thanksgiving gift.

If you love your neighbor as yourself prove it by selling him a ticket to the Winter Festival.

American commercial supremacy means that the American worker works harder and cheaper than any other.

When we succeed in inducing the people to vote only for the things that really concern them, Socialism will be here.

Socialist interest in the New York municipal campaign is solely concerned with the number of votes cast for Ben Hoffman.

Those who cannot afford to attend the horse show will not be barred from the Socialist Winter Festival on that account.

J. Pierpont Morgan is merely a dummy instrument employed by social revolution to prepare conditions for the Co-operative Commonwealth.

"A School of Patriotism" will be opened next month in Chicago just about the time that the county relief agent and the associated charity bureau get busy.

The United States Steel Trust expects to "earn" $20,000,000 during the coming quarter, but the expectations of the company are a country's economic steel are still bound to the mill of a disaster pail.

Meteorologists now affirm that hailstorms cannot be dispelled with cannon shots. Hailstorms have long ago reached the same conclusion regarding Socialism.

Rev. Kittredge Wheeler believes that the "winer" was designed to lose by the Devil, but he neglected to add that the profits therefrom go to the capitalist class.

"Why not a wage slave show as well as a horse show?" writes a correspondent of the Call. "We will have a suggestion Labor Day and the parade sponsored by the wage slave."

One would suppose that the average woman would have enough to do to look out for her own calling without bothering about the President's guests, colored or otherwise.

Just now the knocking out of stinked figures labeled "Socialism" is becoming a fad in clerical circles. Archbishop Corrigan of New York is a performer at this game.

Some day, perhaps, the clergy will get on to the fact that if they want to stop the growth of anything they don't like, their advocacy of it would be more effective than their denunciations.

No capitalist industry has gone out of business owing to that recent decision. The intelligent exploiters who own them know perfectly well that it is easier to put the decision out of business instead.

Attorney-General Ball of Texas has no use for a law unless it can be enforced. That's where he differs from labor leaders who are constantly petitioning for legislation in the interests of the working class.

Upon one point Archbishop Corrigan is correct. He states that none of the Socialist "leaders" are Christians. That is true—but he doesn't say the reason for this is that there are no "leaders" in the Socialist movement.

Johnny Powers and Bobby Jones have found things so that their reelection to Powers is said to be certain as a "signal victory for the Social Democracy" who seem to have done without the aid of the "Social Democracy" when they called on Bobby Jones.

OUR INDUSTRIAL SUPREMACY.

The Workers' Call stated recently that Willsie would get plenty of free advertising out of the suppression of his paper, and its prediction has been verified. For getting into print he is a wonder.

A minister in Seattle who has been attacking Socialism bitterly for some time, has consented to allow a Socialist to have a half-hour in his pulpit to refute his statements. This is a new way to bring the working man to church. It is needless to say the Socialists of Seattle will accept in a body.

A Socialist Party has just been started in New Zealand. This is perhaps news to some of the misled comrades who thought there was a Socialist form of government in that country.

Max Hayes, editor of the Cleveland Citizen, is stamping Ohio for the S. P. Massachusetts Socialists are perfecting their organization.

Sweden has 121 Socialist organizations with a membership of 44,000.

Sweden has 121 Socialist organizations with a membership of 44,000. The Parliament of Holland. The district of Lochem was carried against the Liberals, where a workman defeated one of the richest men. Holland Socialists now hold seven seats in Parliament.

The two-Clarion vans sent out by the Socialists in England have just completed their summer's work. Results, 200 meetings, and 1400 worth of literature sold.

"Unaccepted Challenges"

"A. Gaylord Willsie is not the only Socialist who has striven in vain to enter the champions of capitalism into debate. Father Thomas McGraw, of Bellevue, Ky., has been equally unsuccessful, and has issued a pamphlet detailing his attempts in this direction. He has evidently been watching the reported utterances of ecclesiastics of his own church against Socialism and has promptly met a challenge to debate the question. His pamphlet gives the text of such challenges, the replies being Father Willsie's of Cincinnati, Archbishop Corrigan of New York, Father John Mackay, S. J., Cincinnati, O., Father Maloney, editor of the Catholic Columbian of Columbus, O., and the Democratic U. S. Senator, candidates for Kentucky, to-wit: R. Gov. J. H. McCreary, Congressman Chas. E. Wheeler and D. H. Smith, and Judge Chas. H. Smith, which is published by the Standard Printing Company of Terre Haute, Ind., at the price of five cents, tells how all these eminent pillars of church and state bunched their holes when the Kentucky Socialist priest asked them to make good."

In 1887 Mr. Thomas Kirkup published "An Inquiry Into Socialism," in which he wrote as follows: "As we have seen, one of the first symptoms of the industrial revolution was the organization in large factories, with an improved mechanical power and a large number of wage laborers. The small industry of the cottage weaver and the village artisan, working with their own capital, was in this way suppressed. The process of concentration still continues, more and more affecting every department of industry and attaining to ever larger dimensions. It is a patent fact, which marks the advance of capitalism and of the new industrialism all over the world. The process is inevitable, for with his inferior appliances and his imperfect organization the small capitalist cannot hold his own against

THE PERPETUAL CONFLICT.

An Essay Upon the Necessity of the Class Struggle.
By Peter Barrow.

By the earnest and strenuous debate of the class question we are brought to the violence of those greater struggles of which class consciousness is a sure prophecy. There is no greater guarantee against those bloodier battles than the conservation of blood-brotherhood. We who discuss the merits of the inevitable world battle between the wage-slaves and the machine masters are at once the skirmishers of a sure war and the couriers for a more prudent adjustment of human relations. Let us debate, for while we debate there is yet time for peace.

But the limit of mind battles alone has been reached when the right and opportunity of bread has been denied; a light which includes all life and thought. Then must the primitive man stand to arms; then must the physical man defend himself; and in the workman's self-defense the race is defended. When he is in peril, mere debate is either treason or folly.

Thinking, hoping, trusting, praying, unwearying, which at other times are so amiable and beautiful, become the greatest delinquencies, when the physical life is captured and the slave maker is abroad. The human body, its health, its pure environment, its freedom, its physical rights, these, these are the first and greatest of all human concerns. All the host of mind; all that we have ever known, or learned, or thought, are but vain conceits if the body has been abandoned to social thugs. A Tolstol not resisting is a light hid under a New Testament. The deliverance of the physical man is the primary mission of the mind and of the spirit, just as the deliverance of the mind and spirit is in turn the mission of the physical man. First the physical man, then everything else stands aside until he is delivered.

To this call first and above all other sentimental calls of humanity, the class-conscious Socialists of the capitalist period are responsive. And though every other gain for which man through the ages have sighed or sung may have been worthy, not one may be touched now, until the physical deliverance of the working classes from the bondage of capitalism is achieved. The conflict upon which I am now insisting is a conflict waged by the physical man for himself. It is a conflict for an adequate possession of the material things of society, the bread-making opportunity, and the law enforcing instruments of the world, to guard that sacred opportunity.

It is that portion of mankind's universal struggle against its aristocracies which has fallen to the man living in our country. Under the baneful influence of commercialism there have been formed two sharply defined antagonistic interests called classes, the one socially speaking, the bastard class; the other the legitimate class. The inheritance of the age and nearly all the resources and opportunities of this wonderful century are taken away from the bastard class of social producers and given to the legitimate class of barren capitalists. The legitimate class because it owns the material accumulations taken from defrauded labor, controls what is called the state, that is, an official aristocracy representing the accumulations of the past, and the ability to still further accumulate from the present and the future; and in that capacity of state it declines to admit the rights of members of the bastard class, separately considered, to the opportunities of living; that is, the right to produce or earn, with and out of the common resources, the means of life. By this denial of the right of life the competitive system is set in motion, and out of it the capitalist aristocracy and the property state as now organized, flourish. The capitalist state being thus a profligate organized rebellion against the most vital of human interests, the labor life of the world as represented by each single wage earner; it becomes a physical necessity to resist capitalism and to demand that form of property state which is intrinsically a struggle against mankind. The class struggle of socialism is simply this struggle against this unnatural government, as it hurls themselves, the laborers and wage-earners, intelligent Socialists will not pretend that the laborers are all strikers in this matter. Neither should they fly off into a general propaganda of selfishness as the sole law of every life at all times and under all circumstances, called good or evil, because it is so now with us. Such propaganda is strangely shallow and illogical in the mouth of a Socialist looking backward or forward. Although the self-preservation of the person, be it the bottom of his own resistance, the proletarian steps out of his own life his class resistance as soon as he joins socialism; and he should leave the propaganda of the selfishness motor alone to those whose interest it is to break the race into warring units. That any Socialist should make that unfaithful and timid of the poor, unskilled, trembling life of our man, which we call selfishness, to be the inspiration and enthusiasm of Socialism, is only an evidence of how hard it is for even progressive men to pull themselves out of all the lies of the past at once. Selfishness is the product of that crime of property and chance, misnamed society, which we are seeking to reform, and it will disappear as our reformations succeed. At present the laborer has hardly risen even to selfishness. As his resistance, the first element of the other is not in it. It is only a living thing seeking for bread.

Then it seems to believe that the worst life of the human being should be a hundred years. If there be any truth in this world where class interests require that this figure be cut down to a 25 average among the wealth producers of the world, while it stands at 50 among themselves, there should be no end to the conflict called by Socialism to end this murderous discrepancy.

The good men, and there are many, many many of them above that line of greater longevity, will readily deplore and bewail this fearful theft of human life. But will they connive at the sort of struggle that will ransom the victims from their annual executions in the factories and mills of poor humanity? No, they will not do it, and the short-lived classes should not be so foolish as to expect them. Under present conditions anything that would lengthen the lives of the laborers would per se diminish the ease, tranquillity, and comfort which lengthen the lives of those good and sympathetic persons themselves. They are more interested, as the workers are more interested, in a thorough revolutionary adjustment to all lives, will remove all division of pity, or of anger, or of strife and chance, which now together fret and worry so many lives prematurely out of the world. All good rich men are interested in a thorough proletarian revolt because any other revolution but that can be but a reproduction of the patchwork revolutions of the 19th century in America and France. The rulers of the world, or much of them so think below the surface are saying: "If only the prisoners would march out then would all of us be free." "We have to steal too much to get too little," cry the wealth accumulators; why are the fools so foolish? Why do they not resist and spare us the agony of this life-long theft and watching of our goods? In justice to the over-burdened fish it is a shame that the majority does not claim its own, and let the trusts be and all our fortune-tellers where only pain there be truthfulness, in the solid conservative keeping of the whole community. There we may live to one hundred, assisted thereby by your good health and your contentment, and our own freedom from the fear of burglars. Why do not the proletarians move forward? The world, the century, the whole mankind hopes, waits for them to lead us on. Labor indeed produces all wealth; how cruel to us is the stupidity of them that do not see what they produce, but charge us with the burden, the soul-destroying task of taking it and keeping it away from them without a cause.

No class can really help the world up out of its spiritual, sin and delusions but the class of men whose lot makes for them a materialistic revolt for the spiritual life and a revolt for bread the same revolt, for ethics can only take root in materialism. No class but they have so great a responsibility laid upon them to be selfish and seize their own. None but they have the justification of a great and recognized need and wrong for their revolt. None but they can be raising for their rights be really rising against all the wrong that is in society. What other class could revolt on behalf of all the world and establish righteousness by oppression and war? No other class could revolt against any wrong save one a little more or less wrong than their own practice. But these workers in revolting against their own injuries alone would be found including and facing almost all the known wrongs of the world. How dignified then is this class struggle of labor! How guilty of perpetuating all crimes are the laborers who slumber! With the workers themselves, I repeat, it is not an ethical or an altruistic struggle. If they were advanced in intellect far enough to see things that way, they would not need our propaganda nor this struggle. They are not competent to see things ethically. For them it is a crude life struggle for the physical man, a fight for self-preservation, no more. But do not allow yourself to believe that that is therefore the moral elevation of Socialism. If this man must climb from a perilous position into Socialist safety head downwards, that does not warrant Socialism, or our enemies, to have the philosophy of Socialism on the inverted ethics of self-interest alone. In snatching a drowning lady by the hair and so pull her out of her danger, no man is understood to be establishing a standard of etiquette for the institution of all who may afterwards meet that lady on dry land. The ethics of the class struggle, be far as the workers themselves are concerned, are not the ethics of Socialism, but the ethics of necessity, which has no law.

If, resorting again to symbolism for our teaching, we example the mill workers of England at the introduction of machinery, as being compelled to keep their machinery clean with wadded cloth, the only sort of cloth they wore, and that they were the only sort of people who wore that cloth or who could make it. In a short time these people as machineists would consume all their clothing. If they are satisfied with such a condition it is a very great misfortune for them and to the rest of the world. But no other decent people in the community can afford to allow them to be so satisfied. If by any means in their power these workers can be provoked into a decent discontent.

Piece by piece, as in this hypothetical case of the wicker garments, the working mechanics of the world were demanded of their personal economic industrial equipment, by the progress of the modern machine, until the human proletarian element in the world's industrial mechanism, stands simply naked, embodied and imbedded in machines.

In all the machinery it is that one thing that can originate its own motion. It alone will and is conscious and can suffer. You may break a piston rod and it does not care; but as it cannot reproduce itself you may go and buy another at a heavy cost. You will therefore not break that piston rod. If your piston rod could reproduce and sell itself, at a price you might make such a bargain with this piston rod that it would pay you better, because of the greater profit you could make of this greater speed, to let that piston rod fly and break at highest pressure, so long as it consents and has the ability to reproduce itself within the margin of your profit and its own loss.

The working man, the creator of modern machinery, has been buried under his own creation. He has imparted a greater motion than his own; he has made a new device by which he has multiplied the force that constituted his own value in the world, a hundred fold. Woe of unskilled work and workmen he has made a hundred fold. He has passed on further as each deficiency of the living workman revealed itself. He has been so busy displacing the unskilled that he never noted the dawn of the day when by just one little additional device he displaced himself. Like the balloonist he was so preoccupied expanding his machine, and so successful that it suddenly went up without him. No, the illustration fails just there. The worker has built himself wholly as man, husband, father, mechanic, into the machine, without ever pausing to think who would own the machine when finished. He is no longer a man; yet not quite a machine. He must quickly know which he is or perish. Shall he be conscious of himself as the slave machine of the world? Shall he know about his own burial or not? Who dares to say it's wrong for him to know?

Not many years ago we were familiar with the practice of body snatching from our cemeteries. It was a regular profession with some men to dig up the recently interred dead and sell the cadavers to the medical schools or to private investigators. The term "resurrectionists" was cynically humorous. It signified the opposite of what took place, and therefore it stuck because of its droll inaccuracy. Others did the digging down and the poor dead man was pulled up still a dead man. And such is the only economic emancipation that can be given to the proletariat and to society from outside the proletariat. However amiable the middle class intentions may be, they can only dig down to dead men until the men themselves begin to dig up. It is not to the sentiment of a noble spiritual being lost in machinery that we must appeal, for within the memory of man the sense of the nobility of human nature has never been strong enough to save the working man, or any other classes that I know of, from any degradation. But it is an indispensable part of machinery who can eat bread and butter and honey, who very much wants bread and butter and honey, but from whom it is withheld because he does not understand that he alone is the maker of bread and butter and honey. The appeal is to the world's machine for its own liberation. The human race and its machinery being no longer apart, they being one, it being one. It is the social machinery called mankind shaking off the incubus of a bargain with a bargainer outside of itself: with a profit monger who has succeeded in making with the man his machine a rapacious contract and custom, robbing the fundamental part of the human machinery of society, and slipping it down to the iniquity of a labor force naked and selling itself for kuxka. We are each, thinkers and all of us, a wheel of the whole machine, and fixed in our respective places. We may be ethical, we may be intellectual and spiritual; but we cannot rise any more until the fellow at the bottom thereof, out of us the dead weight of his fool contract of self sale for wages and an alien's profit. Even though we be temporarily and partially among the beneficiaries of profit relatively to him, the net effect of his fool bargain is to raise another class so supremely higher than both as practically to make us nothing. While he continues to fool we are all fooled. When he begins to move we all move. When he becomes machine conscious, society throws off the wage master, and we rise together.

Wheel is bound to wheel by hand and beam and cog, and along their joined or speaking hands the forces of labor travel. But without the labor force the wheel, the band, the beam, the cog, are dead. Without it the wheel, the band, the beam, the cog, would never have existed. The social and political organizations of the world must be discarded around and upon this machinery; they have to deal with nothing more important and dangerous than the use of perversion of this fundamental labor force; we've nothing to hope for but through its wise direction.

Upon labor's strictly materialistic conception of its rights and wrongs at this stage, hangs all the ethical hopes of the world. Labor must stop selling itself. Or if the world is to go on as a selling and exchanging basis, no class as adherent to liberty as to have nothing but its own blood to sell shall be allowed to exist. If some men may profit out of other men, all must profit out of men, and none shall profit out of profit. It shall be a man for a man. The spiritual and ethical life of all other men shall rise and can rise only as the working man becomes severely selfish in his economic relations with the rest of us. The moral, mental and religious progress of all the rest of the race must be in an inverse relation to the selfishness of labor. To him alone selfishness is an evil virtue. Unselfishness in all other spheres of life can grow only out of the selfishness of labor. It must not be permitted to deny himself. Labor is the maternity of the world. She must not be denied. She must not give away. She must be strict in her demands. No man must bargain with her to her disadvantage. To drop illustration let it go in this plain statement. If you would live an unselfish life some one behind you must be selfish. The selfishness of labor is behind, and must remain behind the ultramundane of the world.

AN OPEN LETTER.

To All Women Who Are Party Members or Friends of the Cause.

Dear Comrades: The Women's Auxiliary of the Socialist Party has been requested by the party to undertake the catering for the Party Ball, to be held at First Regiment Armory on the evening of November 22.

It is desirable that the party shall be spared every unnecessary expense in connection with this affair, in order that the net gain for our party fund shall be as large as possible, and inasmuch as the rental of the building, together with incidentals, musicians, etc., will of themselves require a large financial outlay, our women are earnestly requested to assist in providing the supper, by contributing such articles of cooked food as they can conveniently furnish.

While almost everything eatable will be thankfully accepted, the auxiliary is anxious that as large a supply as possible of cold meats (ham, tongue, corned beef, roast pork, veal or mutton) be provided together with home-made breads, rolls or biscuits, salads, baked beans, cheese, pickles, and condiments of all kinds. Canned meats or fish, pies of the former kind (fruit, mince, etc.) will also be acceptable.

Now, in order that the purchasing committee may know exactly where it stands and what commodities it will itself be compelled to supply, it is requested that each and every woman who is willing to aid in this work, send to the secretary of the Auxiliary, not later than November 16th, and as much earlier as possible, a complete list of the articles she is willing to supply, distinctly specifying the NUMBER OR QUANTITY of each item, so many pounds of meat (mutton kind), so many loaves of bread, etc.

Let each do ALL that she possibly can in justice to herself, but at all events do SOMETHING. If ever so little, for in a case of this kind "every little helps."

It is also requested that parties having spare table cloths, glasses, center pieces, etc., or anything in the line of table ware, such as salt and pepper shakers, celery glasses, or glass china or plated dishes, suitable for the serving of salads, olives, fruits or cake, send them with a card bearing name and address firmly attached. (No flowers, ferns or potted plants—anything to make the tables and dining room pretty and attractive—would also be thankfully received.)

It is desirable that we should all cooperate to make this occasion a brilliant success both from a financial and social point of view, eclipsing every previous effort in this direction.

Socialism "expects every woman to do her duty."

Very fraternally,

M. R. DALY,

Secretary Women's Auxiliary, R. P.

461 S. Western Ave.

N. B. Parties residing on West or North-west sides of the city, may send their contributions to the Temple, 120 S. Western Ave. The delivery wagon of the Co-operative Grocery will forward them hence to their destination. South Side arrangements will be announced later on.

Our Price Contest.

A great many of the comrades have sent in their names to the business manager as contestants for the three prizes of $10.00, $5.00, and $3.00, we are offering to the three buyers who purchase the most yearly sub. cards before 10 p. m., November 24th. Two six months sub. cards will count as one yearly.

Have you sent in yours? If not do so at once, as this may be a snap for some one.

Negro social equality is but an idle dream, says the governor of North Carolina. Just so. It is only when, no longer able to find a master, he must go hungry, that he is on perfect equality with the white man.—Harris (Ill.) Evening Journal.

The "suppression" of Socialism is altogether too big a job for Archbishop Corrigan to tackle without assistance. Let him double up with Bishop Muldoon and "suppress" Father Crowley first. If he is successful, Father McGraw will accommodate him on the question of Socialism.

Don't keep those Winter Festival tickets. Sell them instead—on keep on selling them.

Under Socialism, as you vote to let him be worried by the present system.—R.

It is not the privilege of every Socialist to spread Socialism; it is his duty.

LOCAL PARTY NOTES

SOUTH SIDE.

The winter agitation and general organization work taken up by the South Side branches (beginning to take on a definite shape. The Sixth Ward Branch which met last Monday at 410 E. 43d street, decided to look for a hall and hold regular agitation meetings. The branch took in six new members, and 21 party stamps were disposed of. A complete set of officers were elected, and the prospects for an active winter campaign are very bright. The branch will hold a special meeting Monday, November 12th, at 410 E. 43d street, and discuss the question on hall and future agitation. The Sixth Ward has a committee out looking for a hall, and will take action at its next meeting. The Fourth Ward is also stirred up, and the Roseland and Pullman branches in the 33d Ward will begin a series of Saturday meetings November 17th at Roseland Hall, 111th and Michigan Ave. Comrade Bracken spoke last Saturday to the Eighth Ward Branch (South Chicago) at 910 Commercial Ave., and Comrade Kaplan will be the next speaker Saturday, November 24th. Same night the Unity Festival at Lindquist's Hall, 61st and Morgan streets, will rally all the English-wood comrades together and show once for all that unity in English-wood is complete.

The School of Social Economy at 723 W. 63d street, under the direction of Mrs. May Wood Simons, is claiming attention of the comrades and others the last two meetings being far better attended than the first.

The Saturday and Sunday evening meetings continue to draw good crowds. Comrade Sims will be the speaker Saturday, the 9th, and Comrade McDermott on Sunday, November 10th.

Branches desiring speakers should notify the organizer at least seven days in advance, and also report all matters of interest for publication to division organizer.

A. RASMUSSEN,
614 Loomis street.

NORTH SIDE.

The first indoor meeting of the season on the North Side will take place in Lake View Social Turner Hall, Belmont Ave. and Paulina St., on Friday, November 15th, at 8 p. m.

Johanna Griss of New York will speak in German, and Joe Wanhope, editor of the Workers' Call, will address the meeting in English.

It has been decided in the North Division that instead of wasting our strength on small once-a-week meetings in every ward, that the 1st, 2nd and 3rd ward branches co-operate to hold meetings on the second and fourth Sundays in every month at Volts's Hall (to be considered), and at Larrabee and North Ave. at 8 p. m. and that the 24th, 25th and 26th ward branches co-operate to hold meetings on the first and third Sundays at 8 p. m. at Social Turner Hall, Belmont Ave. and Paulina St. The weeks between to be devoted to a thorough and complete canvass from door to door to advertise the meetings. These plans have been under consideration for about one month, the hot weather alone interfering with the putting of them into effect.

Besides the above mentioned meetings we have arranged for a debate between A. M. Simmons and A. Isaak at 8 p. m. on Thursday, December 4th, at 8 p. m. Tickets 10 cents in advance, 25 cents at the door. As only a limited number of tickets can be sold, those desiring to buy tickets had better do so at once. See ad. on last page of the Call.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

The organization committee of the Fourth District met at Crawford's Hall, corner California and Elston Ave., last Sunday at 10 a. m. Delegates from five out of the seven branches were present. All branches reported successful business meetings. The organizer reported a successful business meeting in the 24th Ward on Wednesday evening when 12 new members were admitted and new officers elected. Mrs. Mittlacher of 1704 Ashland Ave. was elected corresponding secretary, Anton Reinisch, 236 Cornelia Ave., organizer. The branch meets every Wednesday evening at 8 p. m. at 1905 Ashland Ave., corner Addison. The report of Committee upon Hall and printing for agitation meetings to commence on December 1st, was received as program. Branch 2 reported 4 Call cards sold, Branch No. 4 sold 2, Branch 6 sold 2, and Branch 7 sold 1.

Meeting then adjourned.

Slavery; Ancient and Modern.

Extracts from Lecture Delivered Before Class of Social Economy by Mrs. May Wood Simons.

Human slavery consists in the securing by one class of the fruits of the toil of another. In some form it has existed among all people at a certain stage in their progress. It is one of the early conditions that society assumed under the influence of the institution of property. That it has been thus universal is a fair proof that as a mode of production it was an essential part of a particular organization of society.

We cannot do better than to trace briefly the condition of society up to and including the period of slavery, if we are to understand that slavery had its natural place at one time in the history of social evolution. While man remained in a savage condition and had no very settled habitation, each individual was forced to work to provide his food and clothing, but as yet he could produce no more than his own living in his crude tools and slight knowledge. Such a thing as producing more than the producer needed and used was unknown. In other words there was no surplus production.

When finally men began to settle to raising flocks, no doubt some few of the prisoners taken in war were preserved to tend the herds, and thus appeared slavery or property in human beings. It could not, however, have reached any extent, until agricultural pursuits came in. In this new industry the slave could produce more than enough to keep himself, and this surplus product could be appropriated by the master, thus freeing him from labor.

Primitive slavery, however, pre-supposed a condition of affairs in which the ruling class, being freed from manual labor, did not therefore become an idle class, but discharged the military duties that society at that time required, since a certain amount of unification of tribes had to go on before passing into the next social stage.

Under slavery the land, the labor and the capital were all in the hands of one person, the master. All the produce belonged therefore to him. J. S. Mill says: "They worked as hard as he chose, or was able to compel them. Their wretchedness was limited only by his humanity or his pecuniary interest. This last depended on the cost of importing new able-bodied slaves. If they could be procured easily, the master worked his slaves to death, and thus avoided maintaining the old and infirm. But if their first cost was high the owners were forced to require less work and depend for new supplies upon raising the slaves instead.

Under the feudal system the master parted with the right to the person of the slave, but was entitled to his services for a portion of his term. Serfdom, however, was only a transitory stage leading to personal freedom.

No doubt the serfs in the cities and towns became free laborers in a few instances by purchasing their liberty out of their earnings, but the greater number gained freedom because they were no longer profitable to their masters. Their cost of maintenance was greater than their services to him. Three classes worked together to free the rural serf and turn him into a free tenant. First, the greater advantage to the proprietor derived from the exertions of a cultivator when he worked entirely for himself. Second, the encouragement which sovereigns, jealous of the great lords, gave to the vassals to encroach upon their authority. Third, the necessity for ready cash on the part of the lords to carry on their numerous wars, meet the demands of taxation, and especially to fit themselves out for the Crusades.

Slavery in modern times is in many ways entirely different from primitive servitude. Negro slavery was not a certain stage in society as was early slavery. It seems rather to have been abnormal than otherwise. It was not necessary in order to enable another class to perform other social service, but it did enable its ruling class to become wealthier and parasitic.

When Columbus returned to Spain after his discovery, he brought with him 500 Indians to be used as slaves. The Indians have never survived under servitude and we soon found "Spanish" men advising that their places be taken by negroes. In the fifteenth century negro slavery was introduced by Spain into her colonies in the western world. The slave trade was soon taken up by England, France and Holland. Slaves were stolen, hunted or caught in any way. Crowded into the slave ship, half of them died on the "Middle Passage," the remainder were sold to the American colonists.

"The colonies," says Cobb, in his Historical Survey of Slavery, "to which the largest number were brought were not unkindly of the effects of this continual influx of barbarians. Hence we find Virginia, Maryland and Carolina not only remonstrating but passing laws designed to restrict their importation. But the trade was profitable to the mother country. Every slave added to the treasury. British capital and commerce were too deeply engaged in the traffic for the voice of the colonies to be heard."

The success of slavery in our southern states depended so much on the abundance of fertile soil and the fact that the crop raised demanded for its cultivation unskilled labor on an extensive scale.

For these reasons, and because of the long cold winter when the slave was practically useless, slavery did not succeed in the northern states. Says Cobb, writing in 1838: "The number of slaves in the older and more flourishing states, by the census of 1790, amounted to only 4,500, while the southern and more feeble colonies, Virginia excepted, embraced in their territory 600,000. It required, therefore, no sacrifice of interest upon the part of the former states to provide for the extinction of slavery."

As pointed out by Adam Smith "work done by free men is cheaper in the end than that done by slaves." The free man manages the sum he receives for his report better than the master manages for the support of his slaves. More than this the master is not forced to care for the aged and infirm wage-earner, as he must for the aged and infirm slave.

General Committee Meeting.

Minutes of the meeting of the General Committee, Saturday, November 2d, Comrade Emiley elected chairman. Credentials were received, and the following delegates seated: E. J. Knaus and N. L. Wagner, 34th Ward; A. Thornberg, 13th Ward; A. L. Ogus, 11th Ward; H. Kohl, 4th Ward.

Minutes of the Executive Committee of October 7th approved. The minutes of the 14th approved, with the exception of a communication from the 1st and 2d Wards, which matter was upon motion referred to new business. The minutes of October 21st and of October 28th were approved.

The question of what constitutes a member in good standing was referred to the Committee on Constitution.

Communication of National Secretary received and placed on file. Communication received from the 16th Ward regarding the changing of the name of the Workers' Call referred to new business. Communication from comrades in Richmond, Va., requesting a speaker, was upon motion referred to the National Secretary. The report of the Winter Entertainment Committee was received.

The Committee on Constitution was instructed to call a meeting of their committee and prepare a report in such a form that it can be submitted to a referendum vote. Upon motion it was decided to call an extra meeting of the General Committee for Saturday, November 16th, to act upon the report of the Committee.

The Secretary was instructed to inform the Bohemian and German branches, formerly affiliated with the S. D. F., that they are requested to send their delegates to the General Committee, and consider themselves a part of the Socialist Party in Chicago.

The reading of the report of the Financial Secretary was dispensed with, as copies of the same were given out to representatives for action. The Secretary was instructed to prepare a referendum upon the proposition of changing the name of the Workers' Call to the CHICAGO SOCIALIST.

The plan of the West Division, to secure a permanent headquarters was approved of. Seventy-three new members were admitted.

"Socialism" has suffered a "bitter assignment" from Archbishop Corrigan. One reason why we are not driven to despair by the strictures of his Eminence is because we remember that the trusts have often been subjected to a similar process and have nevertheless thriven wonderfully.

It is stated that the heir apparent of the British throne has been deeply impressed by the "intense and enthusiastic loyalty of the colonials" during his recent tour. Evidently the New Zealand brand of "Socialism" didn't cause him the slightest uneasiness.

John D. Rockefeller, the Standard Oil magnate, said to be the richest man in America, is reported to be worth $100,000,000. The first money he earned. A farmer paid him 25 cents a day for picking up potatoes in an Ohio field. Will he tell an anxious public how he earned the rest of his $100,000,000?—Social Democratic Herald.

This talk of "reciprocity" is merely a recognition of the fact that industrial supremacy doesn't mean that the American capitalist is exploiting his wage-slaves merely for the pleasure of throwing European wage-slaves out of employment.

afternoon the Temple Socialist School will re-open for its winter term. Comrade Marcus Hiltz will lecture to the adult class on the "Materialistic Conception of History," and Comrade Mrs. Schickel will teach the juvenile class. Let all Socialists who are desirous of perfecting themselves, attend this school every Sunday afternoon. Next Sunday evening Comrade Wendenworth will speak at the Temple.

On Wednesday, November 12th, Clarence Darrow will deliver a lecture entitled "The Law Courts and the Poor." This will be very interesting. Admission free.

Stag Party Postponed.

The stag party at the Socialist Temple, 120 S. Western Ave., has been postponed from November 10th to November 16th. In view of the fact that all comrades intending to be present may not see this notice, arrangements have been made by the Temple Committee to entertain any who may present themselves on the former date.

Socialist Dramatic Club.

The Socialist Dramatic Club will give its first entertainment Saturday evening, November 10th, at the Socialist Temple, 120 S. Western Ave. Tickets 15 cents at the door. We invite all the Socialists and their friends to be present at this first performance. We hope from this club to be able to form a nucleus that will be able to build up and put on the boards plays that will depict as nearly as possible the capitalist system, and all that it entails, and will show the only escape is by voting the Socialist Party ticket. All Socialists of the city, especially those of the West Side, who have talent leaning in this direction and wish to join this club, will please call at the Temple any night during the week. Address John Tipping, 120 S. Western Avenue.

The 15th Ward Branch have opened a Sunday School at their headquarters, Socialist Educational Hall, 543 Armitage Ave. The school opens every Sunday morning at 11 a. m. Miss Mary Caden will act as superintendent, and Comrade W. J. Goodspeed as assistant principal.

On Sunday, November 18th, Comrade Peter Stumm will speak at the Socialist Educational Hall, 543 Armitage Ave. (15th Ward Branch). His subject will be "Socialism vs. Anarchy," and the lecture will commence at 8 p. m. about 7. The branch intends to continue these lectures every Sunday throughout the winter, and have prepared a program setting forth dates, names of speakers and subjects. The series commences November 18th and closes on April 15th.

At the meeting of the 15th Ward Branch held on Friday evening, November 1st, it was decided to have a discussion on some phase of Socialism after the business meeting. The next meeting of the Branch takes place on Friday, November 12th, 8 p. m., at Schenck's Hall. Comrade Stumm will open the discussion by a short talk on Socialism of today. Everybody invited.

A Socialist Machinist's Economic Club has been organized recently. It meets every Monday evening at 8 p. m., at the Socialist Temple, 120 S. Western Ave. The club was organized for the purpose of bringing union men who are not Socialists into the Socialist movement, and Socialist machinists who are not union men into the Trades Union. Guy Marshall is secretary of the club, and John McInerney treasurer. Lectures and discussions showing the connection between Socialism and the Trades Union movement will be the chief topics of these meetings.

The 12th, 14th, 16th, 17th, 20th, 26th, 33rd Ward Branches, and the Bricklayers' Educational Club are now ordering bundles of from 10 to 400 papers. See list on opposite page.

The Temple School of Socialism will open Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Comrade Marcus Hiltz will lecture to the adults on the "Theory of Economic Determination," and Comrade Mrs. Schickel will teach the juvenile class. Please call and bring the children.

SOCIALIST TEMPLE,
120 S. Western Ave.
Com. J. Hiltz will lecture every 1st and 3rd Sunday, 8 p. m., under the auspices of the Western Auxiliary of the Socialist Party. Free admission. Free will contribution to the library fund.

Confidential Con. Rem.

The Citizens' Union of New York claims that the corporations are being coerced by Tammany, says a dispatch from that city. Further on the correspondent says that the fusion managers are greatly disappointed because certain influences on Wall street are aggressively on the side of Tammany, and that they are even thinking seriously of taking the voters into their confidence and telling them the truth about the matter, that the corporations are supporting Shepard in the hope of escaping payment of their "just dues" in the next.

What does this show, but that these reformers are a gang of lying hypocrites who hold back the truth when it is against the interests of the capitalist class to make it known? Is it not plain from their own utterances that they are merely the puppets which capitalism uses to divert the attention of the working class from the fact that they are being duped and robbed? At last, the Socialists don't have to be taken into the confidence of these men to understand their game. We are wiser.

Socialist Party Platform.

The Socialist Party of America at National Convention assembled, reaffirms its adherence to the principles of International Socialism, and declares its aim to be the organization of the working class and those in sympathy with it into a political party, with the object of conquering the powers of government and using them for the purpose of transforming the present system of private ownership of the means of production and distribution into collective ownership by the entire people.

Formerly the tools of production were simple and owned by the individual worker. Today the machine, which is but an improved and more developed tool of production, is owned by the capitalists and not by the workers. This ownership enables the capitalists to control the product and keep the workers dependent upon them.

Private ownership of the means of production and distribution is responsible for the ever increasing uncertainty of livelihood and the poverty and misery of the working class, and it divides the workers into a class of industrial capitalists and wage-workers. The capitalist middle class is rapidly disappearing in the mill of competition. The struggle is now between the capitalist class and the working class. The possession of the means of livelihood gives to the capitalists the control of the government, the press, the pulpit and the schools, and enables them to reduce the workers to a state of intellectual, physical and social inferiority, political subservience and virtual slavery.

The economic interests of the capitalist class dominate our entire social system; the lives of the working class are sacrificed to the production of profits, and the workers are treated as mere instruments of production. The capitalist class is rapidly disappearing in the mill of competition. The struggle is now between the capitalist class and the working class. The possession of the means of livelihood gives to the capitalists the control of the government, the press, the pulpit and the schools, and enables them to reduce the workers to a state of intellectual, physical and social inferiority, political subservience and virtual slavery.

The workers can most effectively act as a class in their struggle against the capitalist system of production by constituting themselves into a political party, distinct from and opposed to all parties formed by the propertied classes. While we declare that development of economic conditions has led to the overthrow of the capitalist system, we recognize that the time and manner of the transition to Socialism also depend upon the stage of development reached by the proletariat. We, therefore, consider it of the utmost importance for the S. P. to support all active efforts of the working class to better its condition, and to elect Socialists to political offices, in order to facilitate the attainment of this end.

Marx's Capital.

To prepare yourselves for arguments against capitalist economists there is no better book than MARX'S CAPITAL, and no sold book cannot be bought in this country. The Workers' Call has imported a number of copies of the new English edition, beautifully bound, well gotten up and large type. The price is $2.00. Post office orders taken and book sent by mail. News of the Week And its Philosophy.

The football season is at its height and the pick of young American physical manhood is pitted from week to week on the field of friendly battle where the idle wealthy may look on and applaud. And who are these young men who are given every advantage that money can buy in the way of food and training to give them perfect physical development? Which will not only give to them the keenest enjoyment in youth but will also sit them to fight the battles of life? They are the sons of the rich. The children of the poor, stunted in mind and body must watch their enjoyment from the hours that should be devoted to sleep. One of the immediate demands of the socialist party and one that is partly carried out in French municipalities where the socialist control is equal educational advantages for all. While under socialism we will not be a race of football players, every child will have an equal opportunity for a perfect physical and mental development.

Visitors at the White House are charmed with the gracious and captivating manners of Mrs. Roosevelt. No doubt she is a model woman but it is easy to be gracious and captivating on $50,000 a year. The poor widow who is obliged to wait for others that her children may live until they have arrived at an age where they may enter the factories and department stores is somewhat handicapped though she might be possessed of many natural charms.

Grover Cleveland, fat, self-satisfied and all important as though he had just made a new discovery said last week that capital and labor should be friends. It was probably to impress this fact on the workmen that Mr. Cleveland sent federal troops into Chicago during the Debs strike, at the behest of the capitalists.

Election returns from San Francisco show what is possible when the workmen are united; results will probably show how futile and barren are their victories when they are not united to accomplish a well defined object. Instead of some reforms in the police force which the new mayor promises, they might have the government of that city conducted solely in the interests of the workmen, who being in the majority could in justice demand such a state of affairs.

What appears to be a spasmodic growth of the socialist vote in certain cities did not just happen. In nearly every instance it was the result of heroic and self-sacrificing work on the part of a small branch in the circulation of party literature. What is possible in one city may be done in all other cities of the country. The workmen of the land are hungering and thirsting for the truths of socialism even if they don't know it.

Mark Hanna went down to Washington in his private car last week to tell the president a few of the things that will be in his message. Mr. Roosevelt did not tell Mark to submit his recommendations in writing as he had requested Mr. Oompers to do a few weeks before; he held a cabinet meeting waiting while he talked over matters with the representative of the business interests of the nation. If the president was not exactly certain what his convictions were on certain subjects they were made clear to him at that half hour's interview.

It was heads of departments, bosses, and superintendents who shared in the recent distribution of Carnegie's wealth. None of the money reached down to the men who had shoveled the ore or handled the hot metal.

No doubt it is true as Lorrado Taft declares we are living too fast to properly cultivate our taste in art. It is to be hoped that the workers in the sweatshops and in the department stores will take the hint and quit working sixteen hours a day that they may devote a few more hours to cultivating the grass and to studying sculpture and painting. Tame they should move from the inartistic dwellings on the back streets to modern and harmonious residences on the boulevards. There is only one thing in the way of a complete carrying out of the program: the workmen, strange to say have an unquenchable desire to purchase food for their families.

Bridgeport, Conn., has elected a coal miner as mayor and the event is so uncommon that it is telegraphed to all parts of the country with the explanation that it is a joke. It is not the custom to elect workmen to office, they get being of the ruling class and Bridgeport will probably see to it that such a thing does not occur again.

Shame on the people who are sending begging letters to Andrew Carnegie. Why don't they go to work for S. E. A. and accumulate a few millions of their own?

Election Returns

The following are partial returns of the Socialist vote throughout different parts of the country in the recent elections. Most of the items are unofficial and therefore subject to correction. Woodbury county, Ia., gave Jas. Barker, the Socialist candidate for governor, 175 votes. In the preceding election this county polled but 23 Socialist votes. Over 150 of the county votes were polled in Sioux City. The comrades are jubilant and expect a still heavier increase in the spring campaign. There was little variation in the Socialist vote for the other offices. No S. L. P. ticket in the field.

Comrade W. R. Fox of Cincinnati, O., writes to say that the vote of the Socialist Party in that city is approximately 3,100. The S. L. P. polled about 900, making a total of 4,000 Socialist votes, which our correspondent says is a very great gain.

Unofficial reports state that the Socialist Party vote in Rochester, N. Y., was 245, the S. L. P. polling 255. Partial reports from New York show that while the Socialist Party has made considerable gains, the S. L. P. has lost heavily. The following incomplete returns are taken from the Worker: Manhattan and Bronx, Socialist Party, 6,764, a gain of 377. The S. L. P. polled 1941, last year 1,564, a loss of 1,334. This covers the 13 assembly districts, but is very incomplete. In Brooklyn the same report appears. In 13 assembly districts the R. P. polled 232, a gain of 180. The S. L. P. got 115 votes, a loss of 385. These returns are also only partial. Thirteen out of 31 districts in the borough of Queens, shows 233 votes for the S. P. and 31 for the S. L. P.; a gain for the former of 185, a loss for the latter of 82.

With five districts missing Richmond gives S. P. 137, a gain of 55, while the S. L. P. gets 57. Throughout the state the returns run as follows: Corning, S. P. 24, S. L. P. 15; New Rochelle, S. P. 34, S. L. P. 5; Peekskill, S. P. 14, S. L. P. 15; Buffalo (79 districts out of 145), S. P. 330, S. L. P. (74 districts) 574. Syracuse, S. P. no information, S. L. P. vote fell from 550 to 355. Ticonderoga, S. P. 33, S. L. P. not known. Watertown, S. P. 400, a gain of 60. Utica, S. P. 21, S. L. P. 64. These reports are also unofficial and presumably incomplete.

Connecticut shows 374 votes for White as governor, a gain of 29 over last year. The election in Richmond, Va., given Quanta, S. P. 13 for governor, while the S. L. P. polled 5 votes.

Incomplete returns from Baltimore show about 300 votes for the city ticket. Socialist Party polled 117 votes in Haverhill, Mass., for governor, and re-elected Representative Jas. Carey. Beat the democrats by 35 votes. S. L. P. candidate for governor (Berry) polled 146. Representative McCarty was re-elected for the third time, leading his opponent by 73 votes.

Other reports from Massachusetts on the gubernatorial vote are as follows: Chicopee, S. P. 541, S. L. P. 59; Fitchburg, S. P. 238, S. L. P. 123; Brockton, S. P. 647, S. L. P. 145; Malden, S. P. 70, S. L. P. 30; Melrose, S. P. 113, S. L. P. 13; Lowell, S. P. 143, S. L. P. 32; Woburn, S. P. 26, S. L. P. 38; Beverly, S. P. 94, S. L. P. 40; Fall River, S. P. 155, S. L. P. 33; Cambridge, S. P. 274, S. L. P. 34; Pittsfield, S. P. 35, S. L. P. 21; Northampton, S. P. 11, S. L. P. 27; Taunton, S. P. 66, S. L. P. 27; Medford, S. P. 35, S. L. P. 40; Everett, S. P. 44, S. L. P. 20; Newton, S. P. 54; S. L. P. 41; Salem, S. P. 114, S. L. P. 25; New Bedford, S. P. 127, S. L. P. 243; Waltham, S. P. 14, S. L. P. 44. This partial report, including Haverhill, but omitting Boston, shows 3634 votes for the S. P. and 270 for the S. L. P. The Prohibition vote in Massachusetts seems insignificant.

Later returns from Massachusetts show that in 34 towns and cities the S. P. polled 6534 and the S. L. P. 540. The returns from the following towns are given: Webster, S. P. 111, as against 71 last year; Amesbury, S. P. 144; Adams, S. P. 54, S. L. P. 31; Lynn, S. P. 372, S. L. P. 336; Holyoke, S. P. 361, S. L. P. 246; Boston, S. P. 133, S. L. P. 137; Quincy, S. P. 185, S. L. P. 54; Lawrence, S. P. 254, S. L. P. 37.

Meigs reports from New Jersey indicate that the candidate for governor, Chas. H. Vail, will poll a larger vote than that of last year. So far the reports show 1100 votes or thereabouts, while the S. L. P. has lost very heavily. Socialist vote at Kearney, N. J., was 51; at last spring election 40. Vote at Harrison, N. J., was 35; at last spring election 14; a gain for the two places of 115 in 8 months. Comrade Kearney who makes the report states that the result is very significant when it is considered that all street agitation in these places was suppressed by the authorities.

Partial returns from Ohio read as follows: Cincinnati, 2176, a gain of 1100; Warren, 145, gain 100; Niles, 73, gain 50; Ashland, 51, gain 31; Bucyrus, 51, gain 31; Piquette, 51, gain 31; Portsmouth, 30, gain 14; Cleveland polled 77; Toledo 65, and Painesville 1, making a total for these ten places of nearly 3,000, which is close to the Socialist vote of the entire state last year. The S. L. P. vote in Ashland was 4, in Painesville 4, in Portsmouth 24.

All comrades of the South Division who intend to contribute provisions for the Winter Festival to be held at the First Regt. Armory on Saturday Nov. 23rd will please deliver them at South Division Socialist Headquarters 713 S. Third St., not later than 10 a. m. on Nov. 23rd.

THE TENEMENT EVIL

Extract from Report of an Investigator on Sanitary Conditions in Large Cities.

If landlords, with greed for profits and economy of ground space, continue to erect such tenements, the city men will soon have new conditions to confront. The factory by day, the tenement by night, will be his environment. By living in the city, man has divorced himself from the soil. He must now live in rooms where the sun never enters. The air he breathes must reach him through dark passages and foul courts. He must be content with about two yards square of earth's space for himself, for each one of his children, for each one of his thousand close neighbors, and for each one of their children. These restrictions of the crowded tenements become all the more oppressive when they are viewed in the light of the past lives of most of the inhabitants of these crowded districts. Comparing the life of the dweller in the city to that of the olive-grower in Southern Italy, or the plowman of Roumania—the ancestors of many of the tenement house dwellers—the hardships of the present are more serious than those of the past; for people still had air to breathe and expanse of earth.

This overcrowding has been prevalent for many years in the older cities, and it partly explains why the death-rates of the newer American cities are so much lower than those of the older foreign cities. Here the poverty and open construction of the dwellings have been important agents in preventing illness, and in keeping down the death-rates. In contrast to the gummy-shorted frame cottages (now passing away) are the century-old stone and brick homes of foreign cities. The recently constructed dwelling houses, with their frame walls, are aired and purified by sun and wind. The old wall built brick and stone houses of foreign cities, are filthy and alive with disease germs. One of the witnesses before the Royal Commission on the Housing of the Working Classes, testified that: "In Liverpool nearly one-fifth of the equal houses where the poor live in the closest quarters, are reported as always infected, that is to say, the seat of infectious diseases. It is not surprising to learn that among the fever cases of that city, overcrowding is growing less, owing to the fall of the population which mortality produces."

The double-decker begins again this time of misery, which is a menace to the coming century, a force for evil creeping into the newer cities while the citizens are unaware, but which might be averted if they would open their eyes to see the danger and would assume the responsibility of its prevention. While we may congratulate ourselves on the past, we must forewarn ourselves of the future.—From "Tenement Conditions in Chicago"—by Robert Hunter.

The following paragraph from the minutes of the State Committee which appeared in last week's issue, was inadvertently omitted from the report and is hereby published.

A communication from the National Secretary accompanying the state charter was read, and some debate ensued over the fact that the National Committee reserved to itself the right to cancel the charter in the event of any violation of the National Constitution. At the conclusion of the debate the following resolution was passed: Comrade Smith voting in the negative: Resolved, That the State Committee of the Socialist Party of Illinois accept under protest the charter issued by the St. Louis quorum of the National Committee: holding that the power to revoke a state charter for any cause should be reserved not to any committee but to a referendum of the entire Socialist Party of the United States.

The meeting then adjourned.

CHARLES H. KERR, Secretary.

Finding a Home.

Some time ago a philanthropist sent a circular to this office in which he stated that his only business was to "find homes for the people." He had it all figured out, on a most elaborate scale, just how every workman could come into absolute possession of a comfortable home by becoming a member of the "American Home Finding Association," so his graft was called. We were rather skeptical of his efficiency, and paid little attention to the matter, but it now develops that at least one home was provided—for and by the industrious remoter himself. It seems he is now charged with occupying a $14,000 home for the last year, without paying a cent of taxes upon it, the place having been deeded to the "Association" in October, 1900. This is what the attorney who filed the petition says about the affair. "It certainly has been a big thing for Mr. Hunter, the philanthropist, in question. He has shown to his patrons and supporters the picture of an elegant building owned by the Association, and no doubt has impressed a great many people thereby." And now it looks as if the "people" would have to do without "homes" until Mr. Hunter devises some new scheme to meet that long-felt want.

Progress of the Trusts

Early in the year 1900 the United States government sent a circular letter to its consuls in Europe instructing them to report on trusts and trade combinations in the various countries in which they were stationed. The replies received were published in a special Consular Report on "Trusts and Trade Combinations in Europe," which any of our readers can obtain by writing to the State Department at Washington. The following are a few extracts from these reports.

Mr. F. W. Hoare, U. S. Consul at Trieste, wrote as follows in July, 1900: "The formation of trusts has developed in Austria only during the past few years. In the last three years these syndicates have increased in numbers to such an extent that there does not appear to be at present any really important industry in the country which has not resorted to combination. And this in spite of the fact that during this time the legality of trusts has been repeatedly and emphatically denied by the courts."

Gen. H. Murphy, vice-consul at Madgeburg, wrote May 14th, 1900: "In this section of central Germany there is at present a marked tendency in favor of industrial centralization. Almost daily the newspapers contain notices of such combinations. The tendency, however, seems to be less towards the establishment of great trusts which have for their object the suppression of trade competition for the advantage of individuals at the expense of the public, than toward the formation of cartels and syndicates for the protection and development of individual industries."

Ernest S. Day, consul at Bradford, England, wrote May 14th, 1900: "The combine mania, has smitten this district with almost the fury of an epidemic; and more than any other part of the country it is responsible for the flotation of trusts. To what extent these have been effected will be seen from the following table." Then follows a table.

Louis Dexter, consul at Leeds, England, in May 1900, sent an extract from the "Financial Times," which said: "Few people recognize how deep a root the principle of amalgamation has struck into our country (i. e., England). That of late years there has been a tendency toward following the American example has been patent to every newspaper reader, but the cumulative effect has not yet been borne in upon the public. In view of the importance, both commercial and financial, of the inauguration of this new era of company promotion, we think it well to bring vividly before our readers the extent to which the new movement has already gone."

Mr. R. F. Skinner, consul at Marcellus, in May, 1900, wrote: "In spite of stringent legislation directed against the artificial manipulation of prices in France, and a popular conviction that combinations of capital in the nature of trusts are not to be found, I discovered that syndicates have been successfully organized, and in this city are in more or less undisputed control of the following commodities or utilities: Sugar, rice, sugar, candles, coal, petroleum, tins, matches, tobacco, transportation by land, and transportation of emigrants."

Dwight T. Reed, vice-consul at Madrid, wrote June 23d, 1900: "Trusts, as known in the United States, do not exist in Spain. (This is because Spain is a backward nation industrially. It is only in advanced nations like England, Germany and the United States, that trusts appear, and they come as the culmination of industrial development.)"

Mr. Geo. W. Roosevelt, consul at Brussels, wrote May 14th, 1900, as follows: "An international glass trust has been formed, incorporating that industry in France, Germany, Belgium, Italy, Austria, and Bohemia, and negotiations are now being carried on with English manufacturers, with the ultimate object of embracing all the works of glass-producing countries in the trust."

"To anyone who will look over this consular report it will be evident, we think, that in Europe the same tendency in manifesting itself towards trade combinations that is so striking a feature of the industrial development of the United States, although in Europe the movement has not progressed so rapidly as with us."

We recently saw a statement by one writer that New Jersey, by its laws favoring the formation of corporations, was doing the country an irreparable injury, and this writer said that if he could have his way he would expel that state from the Union. Do people who entertain similar views imagine that the tendency to the formation of trusts is caused or accelerated by the laws of New Jersey? Some people need to brush the cobwebs out of their brains and do a little clear thinking.

The fact is that at the present we are in the midst of a great world movement. The railroad, the telegraph, the steam engine, and the other great modern inventions are transforming the whole method of production. To fight against it is like trying to stand on the sea shore and stop the incoming tide. And although the transition period will

ENJOINED.

By Wm. R. Fox.

"Go away back and sit down!"—Popular saying

Two lawyers came and cried: "A word!"

The judge put on a frown.

To Work he said: "You will be heard."

To Work: "You may sit down."

Wealth punned Work with expletive.

Verb, adjective and noun.

When Work arose reply to give,

"Sir," said the Judge, "sit down."

"Your Honor, I would simply say—"

"Terrible grew the town:"

"Your place is simply to obey:

"And I have said, 'Sit down!'"

"I've heard complaint, state his case.

He did your clients brown.

You didn't open up your face.

You simply must sit down!"

If innocent, what need you fear?

The guidelines will not draw.

I'll pass my judgment now and here:

And while I do, sit down!"

"Your clients must not talk, walk, rest,

In any part of town.

Save as I say—"Judge, I protest!"

"Sit down, I say, sit down!"

"Judge, by your leave: In such an age,

This land of great renown—"

While grew the Judge's face with rage,

"Sit down at once, sit down!"

"You're here to hear, and not to urge

A single utterance, clown!

Quake therefore, while I wind the accusatory.

And hand my order down!"

"You have no rights, your client none!

Wealth bears the rod and crown!"

And I'm his lord! Down and be done!

"Sit down! Sit down! Sit down!"

The Court proceeds with steady left.

The one place in the town

Where Wealth still gets in all the work,

And Work the sitting down.

Meetings Postponed.

It was decided at the regular meeting of the Socialist Bricklayers Educational

Club that the meeting for Saturday,

November 17th, should be suspended to enable the Socialist Dramatic Club to perform without interference. The next meeting of the club will be held on Friday evening, November 23d, as it is expected that all the members will attend the grand ball given by the Socialist Party at the First Regiment

Armory on Saturday, November 23d.

The meeting at the Socialist Temple at which Clarence S. Day was to speak on "Law Courts and the Poor"

has been postponed until Wednesday,

Nov. 17th, Mr. Darrow, through stress of business, being unable to fulfill the appointment on Nov. 17th.

Lecture Series in Pullman.

The comrades of the 33d ward branch cause much hardship to individuals in the end it will confer an incalculable benefit on the race, for it will usher in the co-operative Commonwealth.

Competition is dying and co-operation is being born. This significant formation of trusts is one of the most tremendously important movements for the toiling masses in the whole history of the era.

The era of international trusts is just beginning. The international thread trust has been formed, and the international match, tobacco, salt and glass trusts are now being perfected. These are merely the forerunners of many others to follow. Capitalism is overstepping national boundaries and forming one great international combination. It will be faced sooner or later by the international Socialist movement. And then will come the tug of war.

Wonder how the modern Daniel will translate the handwriting on the wall to his devoted followers?

The reason why the Boers keep on fighting is that they have nothing—

even to arbitrate.

You have only one week left in which to sell Winter Festival tickets. Better get a move on.

Only five persons were killed last Sunday by the street cars. This beats the day's suicide record by one.

Daniel (De Leon) came to judgment in New York last week and was arrested to go away back and sit down.

The Socialist movement stands ready to utilize any "publicity" that may be left over after the trusts have been served.

There is such a thing as class consciousness. We will never prove it by the mayor of San Francisco who was recently elected by organized labor.

Private property is so sacred that only about ten per cent. of the population are allowed to have any. Sacred things must not be made common.

If the coal miners will be real good and work cheap enough, they may yet enjoy the privilege of furnishing England with all the coal she needs.

Mr. Thomas Liggett evidently doesn't care to make himself a "jolly good fellow" with these employees of his who ask for more than eight cents an hour.

No genius has yet asserted that the interests of capital and labor were identical because of what newspapers sometimes bear a union label.

Socialist Party Platform.

The Socialist Party of America in National Convention assembled, reaffirms its adherence to the principles of international socialism, and declares its aim to be the organization of the working class, and those in sympathy with it, into a political party, with the object of conquering the powers of government and using them for the purpose of transforming the present system of private ownership of the means of production and distribution into collective ownership by the entire people.

Formerly the tools of production were simple and owned by the individual worker. Today the machine, which is but an improved and more developed tool of production, is owned by the capitalists and not by the workers. This ownership enables the capitalists to control the product and keep the workers dependent upon them.

Private ownership of the means of production and distribution is responsible for the ever increasing uncertainty of livelihood and the poverty and misery of the working class, and it divides society into two hostile classes—the capitalists and wage-workers. The once powerful middle class is rapidly disappearing in the mill of competition. The struggle is now between the capitalist class and the working class. The possession of the means of production gives to the capitalists the control of the government, the press, the pulpit and the schools, and enables them to reduce the wage-workers to a state of intellectual, physical and moral slavery, political subservience and virtual slavery.

The economic interests of the capitalist class dominate our entire social system; the lives of the working class are perfectly sacrificed for profit. The competition between nations, industrial slaughter is encouraged and the destruction of whole races is sanctioned in order that the capitalists may extend their commercial domination abroad and enhance their supremacy at home.

But the same economic causes which developed capitalism are leading to socialism, which will abolish both the capitalist class and the class of wage-workers. And the active force in bringing about this new and higher order of society is the working class. All other classes, despite their apparent material condition, are in the process of being absorbed by the system of private ownership of the means of production.

The bourgeoisie, public opinion, parties, and all other classes, will be absorbed by the capitalist system of production, are the result of the present system of the capitalist class.

The workers can most effectively act as a class in their struggle against the collective powers of capitalism, by concentrating their efforts on the transformation of the present system of production into a new and higher order of society, by the organization of the working class into a political party, distinct from and opposed to all parties formed by the propertied classes.

While we declare that development of economic conditions is the cause of the transformation of the present system of production into a new and higher order of society, we do not believe that the transformation of the present system of production into a new and higher order of society is the result of the present system of production.

LOCAL PARTY NOTES

DISTRICT NO. 4.

District No. 4 meets next Sunday at Crofford's Hall, California and Elston Aves. It is important that all of the Branches be represented, as eighty business is to be transacted. The 24th Ward Branch meets Wednesday, 26th last, at 1305 Ashland Ave., and all the members are earnestly requested to attend. For this Ward Branch meeting see directory. All these meetings will be held as per schedule, and all members and unattached Socialists are requested to be present, as the agitation work of the district must be attended to systematically and persistently.

Hall Meetings.

Friday, 8 p. m. Pogue's Hall, corner Maxwell and Jefferson. Speakers, Mr. Maxwell and Jefferson. Speakers, Mr. Maxwell and Jefferson.

Sunday, 3 p. m. Socialist Hall, corner Milwaukee Ave. and Armitage Ave. Speaker, Franklin H. Wentworth.

Thursday, November 21, 8 p. m. Lindstrom Hall, 4th Ave. and Lake Street. Speaker, John E. Brown.

At Educational Hall.

Last Sunday evening Comrade Peter Skamund delivered a splendid address at Socialist Educational Hall, 531 Armitage Ave., under the auspices of the 34th Ward Branch. Comrade Skamund was at his best, and exposed in a most convincing fashion the contradictions of the Anarchist "philosophy," some questions were asked and answered in such a witty and unhesitating fashion that many of the audience went home with the last remnants of anarchism cleared from their brains.

The singing class meets at 10 a. m. Sundays, and is making satisfactory progress, while the Sunday School in charge of Miss Cohen has passed from the experimental stage to a permanent feature.

The Clearmakers' Educational Club which meets in the hall, reports a rapid increase in its membership.

TEMPLE NOTES.

Both the evening lecture and the Temple School of Socialism were well attended last Sunday.

Next Sunday Comrade John Collins will speak in the evening and Peter Skamund will deliver the lecture at 8 p. m. to the Socialist School on the subject of Marxian economics.

Mrs. S. Woodman will speak at Socialist Temple, 120 S. Western Ave., on Thursday, Nov. 23, at 8 p. m., under the auspices of the Woman's Auxiliary Subject, "Anarchism: Corruptions" starting Exposé of Socialist Fallacies.

Mr. Geo. Hill, graduate of the American Conservatory of Music, will give several very fine vocal selections. Admission Free. Everybody welcome.

More subscribers are ALWAYS wanted.

Fastigio Iglesias, the Porto Rican Socialist and labor agitator, has been thrown into jail by the governor of the island as soon as he set foot upon its shore.

About six weeks ago the respectable property owners—for that matter all property owners—are necessarily respectable—inaugurated a crusade against the dives which were then establishing themselves on the North Side, to the detriment of property and business interests. At that time we pointed out the futility of this "crusade," and as usual our predictions have been verified. Already a part of Wells Street has received the sobriquet of "Whiskey Row," and the new location of the dive industry, it is stated, is due to orders received from the police to "clear out North Clark Street. It may perhaps at some future period dawn upon the minds of "crusaders" that the dive as an institution has quite as much title to existence as the church, under similar conditions of society.

In Lincoln, Neb., the home of the greatest trust "regulator" in the country, the Standard Oil Co. has just won a suit which has been pending nearly three years. The suit which was originally brought by the former Attorney General of the State, was an endeavor to oust the "octopus" under the anti-trust laws, but the Supreme Court obligingly discovered that the allegations of the State were not sustained by evidence. As the great champion of the "common people" was thusly engaged in looking after his own interests in oil, the monopolists seem to have had no particular difficulty in getting things fixed to suit.

Labor Politics??

An Organization to Forward Jobs for Would-be Labor Leaders. "Success" in San Francisco and Bridgeport, Conn.

"A new labor party to match political control from the dominant parties in Chicago and to conduct public affairs for the benefit of the wage-earners is to be launched by the trade-unionists of this city." So says the Record-Herald in its report of the proceedings of the Chicago Federation of Labor at its meeting last Sunday. If this statement were true the socialists of Chicago would be the first to rejoice, for they have been urging the laborers for many years to cut loose from the old parties and vote for their own interests. But the socialists know full well that if it were true the Record-Herald would never give the fact a front page display.

So we begin to look a little further into this promising new departure. We find that the men who are back of the new movement were mainly inspired to act because of the "recent" success of union labor candidates in San Francisco and Bridgeport, Conn.

Eugene Schmitt, a musician was elected Mayor of San Francisco, and Dennis Mulvihill, a coal shoveler, Mayor of Bridgeport.

But this is not the first time by several hundred that men who have been accustomed to working with their hands have been elected to office. Before we join in the cheering let us see what these men are going to do.

Each of them has been elected only a little over two weeks, but both have had time to put themselves on record. The very morning after his election Schmitt was so anxious to show his love for the bosses that he hastened to be interviewed and to issue a statement that he did not propose to in any way interfere with the rights of capital, and that he proposed to treat capital and labor exactly alike.

Mulvihill had a chance to perform one official act. What did he do that should fill the hearts of Chicago laborers with enthusiasm for his kind of politics? He vetoed the project to build a city hall because it would raise taxes. But who are the tax-payers, whose interests he wishes to defend?

Paying taxes indicates the possession of property. Laborers are not tax-payers. Their homes are to that by which they are to be taxed. Hence this new "labor mayor" like his San Francisco friend has already shown himself to be interested, not in the welfare of the workers but of the property holders.

The laborers of these two cities have simply given two men good jobs. That is all. There are some men in Chicago who would like similar jobs. So they start a similar party. Hence we are not surprised to find that nearly all the founders of this new "labor party" have already picked out the jobs they intend to have. "With the proposed announcement of the new party says the Record-Herald, 'comes the announcement that every one of the three members of the legislative committee of the Chicago Federation of Labor is to be a candidate for a seat in the state legislature at the next election, and that each will begin work at once in his respective district leading up to an active canvass."

What have these men ever done that entitles them to have a soft job at the expense of the continued slavery of the workers of Chicago, for that is exactly what the proposition amounts to? Nothing except to have lobbied at Springfield for some time, hanging around old party politicians in order to thoroughly learn the trade of hoodwinking the workers.

Of Charles F. Fieldstack we are told that he has a wide acquaintance "among Republican politicians, and would probably be given the nomination on the Republican ticket." Hello, so he has not even waited until he was elected, to let us know on whose side he was. He is with Kohlsaat, the man who issued the injunction against the anarchists. This "representative of labor" is on the side of the regular army that shot down the strikers at Coeur d'Alene.

If the workmen of Chicago have anything in their heads superior to seaweed, they will turn down these steel pigeons with a thump that will jar into their heads the fact that they can no longer do a wholesale trade in gold-bricks among Chicago workers. If this scheme goes through, then Chicago union men can no longer laugh at the country jay who bought the Masonic Temple. They will have bitten at a colossal con game that is many years older than the "cave-in tunnel" or the "shell game."

A "labor party" that is to be a labor party must be a party that has brains enough to know that there is nothing in common on the political field between the boss and the worker. The laborer is producing all the wealth and the employer is taking it away from him. The kind of a political party that the workers of Chicago want is a party that can see this fact and that dares to say that it stands on the side of the laborer and the laborers alone. A genuine labor party is one that declares that the workers should have all the wealth their labor creates—that is all the wealth there is, and that when they cannot get it they will go and get it for the boss and he will have to go to work also. Then there will be no more capitalists and laborers but only laborers. What that time comes it will be soon enough to stand "for all the people" as the San Francisco Mayor now wishes to do. Until then any such attempt means a wide a straddle that the men trying it will either split in two or else go over body and soul to the fellow with the biggest pull. And that fellow is not the laborer.

The Socialist Party is the only party that dares to say that it is for the working class, and the working class alone, first, last and all the time. That party is now organized in every ward in Chicago. Those union men who want to join a genuine Labor Party better look it up.

Revolutions in Industry.

Inventions that Mark New Steps on the Road to Socialism.

It is difficult for an ordinary individual to keep track of the progress of inventions, so rapidly at present in one new device following another. We give below a few of the new inventions recently reported:

Thomas A. Edison declares that his new storage battery will be successful, and that he is arranging to place it on the market as soon as possible. It may work almost a revolution in transportation. It is believed that a small dynamo can be run by a windmill which will store up enough power in one of these batteries to run all the machinery on a farm, as well as supplying a current for heating and lighting the house. It offers the farmer greater advantages than any other invention of recent years.

Mr. Herbert Hoyle of Halifax, England, has invented a process for treating China grass, which grows in India and the Straits settlements, so that it can be used to manufacture textile fabrics. The cloth made therefrom is said to resemble silk, and to cost little more than cotton. The supply of the grass is said to be well-nigh inexhaustible, and it may revolutionize the cloth industry.

Another recent discovery subjects palm leaves to an alkaline preparation, after which they are boiled and allowed to ferment. Thus a fibre is obtained of great strength which bids fair to be extensively used in textile fabrics.

Dr. Thomas Tommasina, an Italian scientist, has invented an instrument which can be attached to a telephone, and which will register the approach of a storm a hundred miles away. It may prove to be invaluable on ships at sea.

The new Hungarian system of telegraphy has proved to be a marvellous success. The system has been installed between Budapest and Vienna, a distance of 116 miles, and is in operation.

working order at a speed of 60,000 words an hour. Negotiations are in progress for establishing the system in France and Germany.

A new alloy of aluminum has been discovered from which tanks and shells can be made. It possesses many advantages, as it will not corrode. The government of Sweden has ordered the directors of the state railways to prepare plans for converting the steam railways to electric roads. Waterfalls will be utilized to generate electric power, as is now done at Niagara Falls, and with this power the railways can be operated.

A German scientist has recently devised a method of manufacturing artificial gutta-serena from gum. It will be of immense value in treating brain cancer, among other things. It is claimed the new Berlin's electrical typewriting machine can be manufactured and sold much cheaper than the Monotype machine, and that it will not wear type. It weighs but 200 pounds, and can be operated by one-quarter horse power.

N. E. C. Financial Report.

The financial report of the National Executive Committee for the month of October shows that, including advance on hand at the beginning of the month of $154.35, the total receipts for the month amounted to $99.55. Expenses for the month amount to $112.55 leaving a balance on hand on Oct. 31 of $121.35.

State Charters were issued to the State organizations of California, Indiana, Illinois, Massachusetts, Missouri, Oregon, Nebraska, New York, and Texas. Local charters were issued to 30 locals in 17 different states during the month.

On TO NIGHT to the Socialist Party.

News of the Week and its Philosophy

Labor political parties are discouraged by the press in discussing the proposed political action of the Chicago Federation of Labor. According to one afternoon paper such a party would only be founded on the bread and butter question and would leave out such vital questions as the tariff, the financial ones and the ship subsidy. As soon as the laboring man learns that these latter questions are strictly bread and butter questions to the capitalists, he may begin to look around for a few questions that will come directly home to him. As long as he is willing to get excited on the other fellows' bread and butter questions, the capitalist is happy. Let him learn a lesson from them and look after the bread and butter question for himself. As soon as he has solved that, it will be time enough to bother with the others.

Bring a friend to the hall and show him what the Socialists look like when on dress parade.

Another grand jury composed of men from the boulevards is sitting at the criminal court this week. Comrades, this matter of a jury selection is not one of the things that just happens. The capitalists are just class conscious enough to see that their kind of a grand jury is chosen.

New the governor of Minnesota is talking of calling the state legislature together to take some action on the question of the railroad trust. As the railroad corporations and other capitalist interests elected the legislature, it is not likely that they are alarmed over what is to be done to them.

Out at Dunsmuir the poor house is so crowded that many of the inmates are obliged to sleep on the floor. This too is at a time when prosperity is at its height. What will the poor house look like when hard times come? Inmates will then be obliged to sleep on the fire escape and in the grape arbor. As the Socialists propose to abolish the poor house, it might be well to put these in power before the hard times get here. Do you know of a simpler solution to the poor house problem?

Carter Harrison does not think the labor union will accomplish much by going into politics. He thinks they can get what they want from the old parties. The experience of the labor union has been that they can get what they want in the old party platforms, but they are beginning in some instances to desire to have these promises carried out. Their experience to date has not encouraged them to believe that they can get anything but promises out of the old parties. Carter Harrison says that should they be successful it will only be for one term, and that San Francisco will never do it again. The mayor is right and he is wrong. If the working men arise in blind fury and elect a set of city officers they will accomplish little, but if they do so with reason they elect one of their own class to office with the distinct understanding that his only mission is to help their class, then something may be accomplished, and the experience of the Socialists in other countries demonstrates that they will continue to elect and reelect their men from year to year.

The way politicians are beating about the bush in regard to the Chinese exclusion law, shows that they would not think of re-enacting it if they did not fear another, and let demonstration. With a Socialist administration the Chinese would stay at home where they belong, but capitalism is always looking for the cheapest labor and capitalists want them because they will work for little wages.

A SOCIALIST THANKSGIVING.

"Coming Events Cast Their Shadows Before."

IMMIGRANTS.

More Expelled from These Inside Asylums Than Out.

Speaking of conditions in the Denning Inmate Asylum, the Daily News has the following to say upon the subject editorially:

"It should be plain even to an imbecile that the question whether the head of a hospital is a republican or a democrat, or whether republicans or democrats get the contracts and the offices, is of not the least possible importance in the practical business management of that hospital. The fact is probably plain enough to some of the unfortunate patients at Dunsmuir. What they need is skilled, kindly treatment, proper food and clean, comfortable surroundings. That they should fail to get these things is a disgrace to common humanity."

There are a great many people outside the asylum who have not yet absorbed the knowledge that the Daily News credits the inmate patients at Dunsmuir with possessing. There are a few of workmen who never had "proper food and clean, comfortable surroundings" who yet think the world would come to revolve if the head of the nation were not either a republican or a democrat, even when a capitalist newspaper tells them that an imbecile in the asylum knows better than that. It is rather a mean way of putting things, of course, but there is no denying the conclusion that the saying that there are more fools outside than inside the asylum, is well founded.

MORE PRESS CENSORSHIP.

Wishaire and the Appeal to Reason, the Latest Victims.

Comrade Gaylord Wishaire, editor of the Challenge, notices that the denial of second-class mail rates to his publication by the U. S. Government has decided him to issue it in Canada. The address of the Challenge will henceforth be Toronto, Ont. We notice also that the Appeal to Reason has been called upon to show more why it should not be excluded from the second-class mail rates. There is little doubt but that the Appeal will be quite able to satisfy the U. S. authorities on this matter, but it certainly looks as if capitalism is waking up to the dangerous agitation being carried on generally by the Socialist press.

Smoking will be Permitted.

A smoker will be given at the Socialist Temple, 123 S. Western Ave., at Saturday night, November 23, for the benefit of the Worker's Call. All the speakers of the party will be present and deliver short speeches. A vaudeville entertainment will be given in connection with the party. Admission is free, but a collection will be taken for the Worker's Call. Let every able member of the party be present.

Notice.

All those who have not noticed for the West Side Picnic tickets will please do so at once at this office. H. W. Tarr.

GOOD THINGS NEXT WEEK.

Catholicism, Advertising and a Exposure of Capitalist Methods of Selling Workers.

The next number of The Worker's Call will be a hot one. A. M. Brown will write a reply to the attack on Socialism by the Rev. Jos. Rickaby, S. J. This is the pamphlet issued by the Jesuits and circulated by the hundreds of thousands through the machinery of the Roman Catholic Church in the hope of checking socialism. Be sure that every Catholic in your neighborhood gets a copy of next week's Call. A most remarkable article from one of the publications designed only for circulation among the big capitalists and which gives away the whole map, telling just how the masters feel the slaves and keep them contentedly working, will be another feature. This article will make a sensation. How much of the laborer's protest do you suppose is wasted in advertising? Our next number will tell you exactly, as it has all been figured out by an eminent statistician who spent a very long time in getting this information. Read next week's Call and you will have one fact to show the foolish wastefulness of the present system.

Don't neglect to be present at the Socialist Temple TO NIGHT, Saturday Nov. 23. See ad.

Are you still hunting for education?

LACKS INCENTIVE.

Candid Admission to Capitalist From That Modern Laborer, H. W. Tarr, Interested in Their Product.

Commenting upon ex-President Cleveland's speech at the Carnegie Institute, in Pittsburgh, in which Grover stated that such gifts as the Institute would help best the "dislocation between capital and labor," the Tribune takes exception editorially as follows:

"The dominant and startling FACT about the social organization of today is the extreme degree to which the primary motive of the worker has disappeared. Once the individual's handiwork—clothing, shelter, weapons, or tools—was produced for his own use, and hence he had a direct interest in its quantity and character. When, in the days of small industries, he made commodities to barter or to sell, he had a direct personal interest in the exchange value. Now, however, when he is employed in the factory, and receives not the whole or any part of what he produces but wages, he has ceased to believe he has any stake in the product. It is the demand for labor about which he is chiefly concerned. It is because the trade unionist thinks he has no stake or direct interest in his product, that he seeks not to increase its amount, but instead to increase wages, to decrease the length of the day, and even to limit his regular output. These are now the great aims of the labor world which, by progressive industrial centralization and despotic qualifying influence of the piece system—is being more and more divorced from any interest in its product, and so from a fundamental incentive."

Whether this vanishing motive which has been behind all the art of the world—great works of art have never been produced on the mere wage basis—is yet to be restored, through some social reconstruction, to labor, is a question which hangs on the horizon of social speculation. Its progressive decline, however, and the absence of any equivalent, prevents LABOR today NOT IN A CO-PARTNERSHIP RELATION, BUT IN A DIRECTLY NEGATIVE ATTITUDE TOWARD INDUSTRIAL RESULTS. Nor is this significant PART materially qualified by the splendid philanthropies of the time. In other words, the Carnegie Institute DOES NOT TOUCH the fundamental branch in the social order."

If the Socialist who penned this editorial indulges too much in this sort of thing, his job will undoubtedly be imperilled, though perhaps he may, at rare intervals be permitted to tear holes in the fabric of the capitalist system of production, as in this instance. However, the above is fully offset by numerous editorials, probably from the same writer, showing the "futility" of British trades unionists in trying to limit their output, or attempts to inculcate the idea that instead of the workmen's attitude towards industrial results being distinctly negative, the interests of capitalist and labor are identical.

In present of the greatest event of the season TO NIGHT at 1st Regt. Armory.

New Socialist Headquarters.

After a search extending over two months the comrades of the Fifteenth Ward Branch have at length succeeded in securing a most desirable local headquarters, centrally located in the ward, at 355 N. Rockwell street. The place will be open by Thanksgiving Day, and a series of lectures on Socialism to run through the winter will be arranged for. The Branch will meet for business every Friday evening, and once a week (date not yet decided upon) a special school for training Socialist campaign speakers will be conducted. The new headquarters will accommodate a membership of from 150 to 200 persons, and will be equipped as comfortably and thoroughly as possible. Socialist papers and literature will be kept on hand at all times, and the comrades intend to push Socialism in the district with all possible energy during the coming winter.

Election Returns.

Complete election returns come in but slowly, the official report for the States of New York and Massachusetts not yet being announced. The total Socialist vote in Ohio has increased between 70 and 80 percent, the official returns giving the Socialist Party 1,500 votes as against 435 a year ago. The S. L. P. polled 1,044 as against 1,000 last year. The combined vote is therefore 10,153 in 1901 as against 4,433 in 1900, a most encouraging growth.

Comrade W. H. Ferguson of Victor, Colo., reports that the vote of Teller Co., Colo., was 68 as against 194 a year ago. The following returns from Mystic, Iowa are sent in by Caspar Steitz, City of Mystic, 1st ward, for Governor, Baxter, H. P. received 15 votes, a gain of 1 vote last year. Second ward S. P. 22 votes, a gain of 11. Third ward S. P. 15 votes, last year 11. Comrade Steitz reports the total vote of Appanoose Co. as 128, a gain of 10 since last fall, and states that there is a good prospect of carrying the town for Socialism next year.

Capitalist papers are making a great "sensation" out of the fact that a professor of chemistry has succeeded in extracting light from rotten beef, just as if it was a new discovery. We know of several patriots who volunteered for the war with Spain three years ago, who extracted so much light from rotten beef that they are now in the Socialist Party.

Don't run out of Socialist ammunition. Call postals can always be obtained at this office.

TO NIGHT! TO NIGHT!

This is the Night to attend the Grand WINTER FESTIVAL

A tip for Catholic workingmen. Join a Socialist Educational Club instead.

Archbishop Corrigan dashed nastily when Father McGrady compared with the right.

Socialism is coming, but we can meet it half way by helping circulate the party given.

Unlike Mr. Croker, we will stay right here and prepare for the next campaign.

In some few localities we notice that the Socialist vote has not increased over 100 per cent.

If the priests run the labor unions, and the capitalists run the priests, where will the union men get off at?

The prospect of a world without classes is always most terrible to those who pretend there are no classes now.

Capitalists don't care how much the trades unions indulge in politics so long as the politics in question bear a capitalist label.

Those people who are waiting for the trusts to break up are more to be commended for their patience than their wisdom.

At the time of going to press the chances of Miss Stone and Edward R. Molloy of New York seemed about equal.

We don't believe that Li Hsing Chang went to heaven. He was a reformer, and they can't use that kind of people up there.

Organized workingmen seem to keep on striking right along, just as if Bishop Potter had never said a word about "conciliation and arbitration."

Judging from the interviews conducted to the new mayor of San Francisco the union men might as well have spared themselves the trouble.

We suggest to Mr. Theodore R. Tilton that it would be prudent to move away that labor union of his in the future, before a severe frost comes along.

Socialism must be growing, even if we are to judge from the increased output of sermons purporting to attack it which appear in the public press.

If Socialism signifies no "insurrection" how can you account for the outpouring of the fallows who are making preparations to suppress it?

The working class will never be with out "friends" so long as it remains a class. When classes have disappeared these "friends" will also vanish.

What a Thanksgiving celebration there would be amongst the capitalists if some one could only discover a really effective campaign against Socialism!

If you published a picture of a job, holding his arched palm behind his back, and was then sent to jail for forty days for doing so, would it fit you?

New York and Beth Lew is finally installed in the mayor's office, the workingman can go back to his job and daily stand at the usual rate per day.

When the stupid stupidity of the working class is considered, the reason for Thanksgiving on the part of the capitalist, at least, becomes all open to parent.

Workingmen who feel disappointed over the failure of the Goldmans to stop the conflict in the railway, that the Gallegos are still against a case of a strike.

Isn't it significant that none of the priests who are at present organizing the members of their flocks are union men, ever found it necessary to say until the Socialist Party signs of growth?

THE WORKERS' CALL

Published every Saturday at 20 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill., at the corner of the postoffice building.

The Workers' Call is published for and under the control of the Local Chicago of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, a corporation without capital stock, the whole ownership of which must be retained by the members of the union.

"John the Baptist," or a party who belongs to the first individual, is out after the Postmaster-General urging him to repeat because "the Kingdom of God was at hand." When we read this item we at first thought that this "John the Baptist" might be some sort of a herald announcing the advent of Socialism, but when upon further perusal we discovered he was only striking the P. M. G. for a job, we were forced to abandon the comforting theory which we had constructed before coming into possession of all the facts relating to the case.

No better evidence of the importance of the Socialist movement of today could possibly be given than the fact that the most powerful church organization in existence has avowedly undertaken the task of wiping it out. In this the twentieth century, the spectacle of an ecclesiastical Mrs. Partington attempting to sweep back the tide of social and economic evolution, with a religious broom, may not be in itself a very edifying performance, but it will serve to illustrate the significant fact that the here who for years have represented Socialism as an empty dream of the future, are finally forced to concede by their action that it is the most dangerous reality of the present indeed.

Last week a minister told the Teachers' Federation to give up attacking corporations and get after the individuals owning stock in them. Then he declared that he knew of a man who was president of one of the great reform organizations of the city, who was also either the president of or a heavy stockholder in a corporation which was one of the best examples of a tax dodging corporation. Such men he said were the real culprits, and should be attacked. Two months ago this man was shouting against anarchy with the best of his kind, but he seems to have been converted to their doctrine since then, though being a trifle more prudent or less outrageous than the average anarchist, he mentioned no names.

People of the Chicago high schools are so rapidly deserting the study of the classics in favor of commercial branches of education, that Superintendent Dealey believes that an extermination of the latter will be necessary. This simply means that the old methods of education must give place to the growing needs of capitalism. A knowledge of Greek and Latin is of little use in the art of extracting surplus value from labor in the interests of the capitalist class, and the schools must turn out a product that can be used for that purpose. Consequently the classics relapse to favor of the time-worn course so that capitalism may secure the desired quality of human labor material at the lowest possible cost of production.

Not the least remarkable effect of the growth of American capitalist imperialism in the world's markets is to be found in the fact that the ruling classes of less developed countries are beginning to see the value in dealing with their own rebellious working class. For instance the French coal miners are being warned that the facilities which the American coal can be laid down in France renders all idea of a successful strike on their part unthinkable. Other "reactionaries" go further and declare that a general strike of all the workers in France would not last over ten days, and that the United States is "under the impression." This is the plain fact that the international character of capitalism must be recognized by international Socialism. Modern production is fast breaking down national frontiers and boundaries, and making it not only possible but imperative for the workmen of the world to unite.

HARVEST FAIR AND FAIRNESS

Just how thoroughly capitalism dominates the present, and shapes and transforms customs of a past age until they reflect nothing but its own image, may be seen by a glance at the local "carnivals" now being held in different parts of the city. In the middle ages the word carnival was a time of sport and merry-making indulged in entirely for the sake of the amusement offered. To day the carnival assumes a wholly business aspect, and not the slightest attempt is even made to conceal the fact. For instance we are told that the South Halsted street "carnival" which opened last Saturday, owes its existence to the fact that the business men of the locality have seen "their trade gradually slipping away, and the carnival is an attempt to bring it back." The newspaper item then continues: "It is to arouse not only the people of the wards around Halsted street, but is expected to show those of Berwyn, Clyde and Cicero that they need not go farther to do their shopping."

The modus operandi of the carnival is much the same as that of the middle ages, with some help from displays made possible through modern science. There are flag poles, various colored bunting, booths, and vaudeville performances, intermingled with the "display of goods," the whole illuminated with 4,000 electric lights, while 5,000 tin horns and wooden rattles have been distributed gratis to the children of the district by the local merchants who, as the report states, "stand within their shops taking care of the Saturday's trade."

In this respect capitalism has utterly reversed the spirit and content of the ancient carnival. The form of amusement still remains; the motive has been completely changed. The carnival of ancient times took shape wholly from the desire of the resident community for amusement. Trade was only incidental, and such as it was, consisted altogether of objects intended to provide satisfaction or supply wants during the period of the carnival alone, and the sellers of these objects were not the residents of the locality but wandering peddlers and travelling merchants who were attracted to the scene by the chance offered to supply articles needed to keep the merry-making going on.

Modern capitalism, however, reverses this in every respect. Today it is not the inhabitants of a given district that set the carnival afoot, but a very small minority of those who are in "business" on the principal thoroughfare. Its purpose is not amusement, but trade. The objects to be sold are not intended to keep the festival going, but in most cases are the common every day necessities of life. The horns, rattles, and other similar objects which formed the stock in trade of the ancient carnival merchant, are now distributed gratis in the modern carnival. Formerly the traders were attracted from the outside to the carnival makers; now the traders are the carnival makers themselves, and attract the crowd from the outside to their locality. Formerly the local paraphernalia of the event was supplied by the concerted effort of the vast majority who wanted amusement—now it is supplied by an insignificant minority who want trade.

About all that remains is the name. Everything else has either vanished or appears in an inverted form. And strange as it may seem, very few are aware of the change, and still fewer of its real significance. And still another matter that is not so strange though it may be thought so, is the fact that amongst the "business" men who have gotten up this travesty on the sports of a past age, few Socialists may be here and none to be found, and this fact is perhaps the most significant of all.

TRANSFERRING AFFECTIONS

It is an undeniable fact that any system of slavery whether chattel or wage, depends largely for its continuance upon what might be termed the mental slavery induced by custom and habit amongst the economic victims. So powerful are these agencies that in most cases they are sufficient to convince the majority that on the whole the system of which they are the unconscious victims is not only the best possible that can be devised, but is actually "something to be thankful for."

And knowing this, the ruling classes have not since a day of public thanksgiving to which their wage slaves are not only invited to participate but are carefully impressed with the idea that they above all have the best reason to feel grateful for present conditions, and to this end the organized efforts of capitalism, the churches, are detailed to invest the day with whatever "divine sanction" the working-classes will believe them to be possessed of.

Add the working-classes will be properly impressed with the efforts of the exploiters and their parasites. Because they have been told an endless number of times that they have a lot to be thankful for, they come to the conclusion that it must be so. The solemn adjurations from the pulpit on the necessity of gratitude, the parading and recounting of the "prosperity" enjoyed in reality by the capitalist class, but made to appear as if all classes shared therein, creates in them no suspicion of vain repetitions. It is easier to accept these statements than take the trouble to think them over. So on the whole they respond willingly and celebrate the day, mainly by the consumption of food and drink of better quality and greater quantity than they can ordinarily procure.

Where these things are not procurable the judicious charity of capitalism intervenes, and a feeling of thankfulness to the donors is inspired in the recipient, which generally serves the double purpose of inducing dependence and advertising the business of the judicious giver.

Now, what in reality, have the work-classes to be thankful for? The only answer that the capitalist can give to this inquiry can be summed up in one word—Work. They are to give thanks for work, because on the whole they have had perhaps somewhat more of it than in preceding years.

They have been permitted to produce food clothing and shelter, to mine ore and coal, to operate railroads and steamships, to weave fabrics of wool and cotton, to build palaces, mansions and warehouses, to make and repair roads, in short to perform the entire labor of the nation—and they are to be thankful that they have been allowed to do these things—and are still alive to keep on doing them.

They have had so much physical labor that they have no energy left for mental labor—not even so much as would permit them to think out a distinction between work and the results of work—to arrive at the fact that their masters give thanks for the latter, while they are left to express gratitude for the former.

They have no suspicion that they are really called upon to give thanks for their own slavery. But if the latter quality is desirable, heaven knows that they have plenty to be thankful for.

However it should not be imagined that all workmen are alike in this respect. There are several hundred thousand that are not thankful for the above state of affairs—and the are known as Socialists.

Not that Socialists are opposed to gratitude on principle. But first they want to know what kind of a thing they are asked to give thanks for. In this respect, wanting to know, may be criminal in the eyes of the capitalist, but it does not follow that it excludes gratitude. Socialists have inspected the sample set up by the capitalists and simply don't like it and say so. If this be ingratitude, make the most of it. But after all we Socialists have something to be thankful for. We like a Thanksgiving turkey as well as anybody but it is a particular sort of bird that we are after and with the help of an intelligent and ungrateful workman we will get him yet. Our article has striven to depict the first in question, on the front page; and we are making preparations to fall upon his neck at the proper time, so that all the people may have something to be really thankful about.

Isn't it about time that the idle rich gave a dog party or a charity ball or something of that sort, just to let us know that they are performing their duty to society? It would relieve the monotony of the slinking process in which their "industrious" brethren are continually engaged.

It may be a good thing for strikers to have the "sympathy of the public" with them, but unfortunately that commodity is in the keeping of the capitalist press, which has a fashion of holding on to a good thing in the interests of its owners.

Antious Inquirer: We don't know whether the post office is a Socialist institution or not. Why not apply to Brother Wayland of the Appeal to Reason, Grand, Kas? We believe that he is in possession of the very latest inside information on that subject.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE

Now that American capitalism, purged of the spells extracted from American wage slaves, is going around the earth seeking to destroy its weaker foreign brethren, the German press, representing German "public opinion," declares definitely that the Americans will not be permitted to absorb Germany's marine transportation and shipping industries.

Now are they going to prevent it? It is stated that the Imperial credit will be used to safeguard these industries which the American capitalists desire to consolidate and thereby effect greater economy in their management, and make them more efficient profit producers.

The proposition to use the Imperial credit for this purpose sounds very like the Populist schemes which were current here some few years ago. It reads big on paper, but when subjected to a Socialist analysis becomes ridiculously insignificant.

The Imperial credit will be used to maintain the competing lines now engaged in the shipping industry under the German flag. This idea is about on a par with the proposition that Rockefeller should invest his capital both in the People's and Ogden Gas companies in order to maintain them as rival industries, with all the waste that competition implies, attached.

But even if the government did adopt this ridiculous proposal, it would avail nothing. German, or no other shipping business, can be maintained in the competitive form, against the industry as it can be and will be organized and operated with the concentration of capital at the disposal of the American ruling class. The German lines will either have to consolidate or quit business, the very fact that the big trusts on this side of the Atlantic are getting after them being in reality tantamount to an ultimatum. If they will not sell they cannot operate.

When the great American Steel Company (the trust) was being organized, it invited the Union Iron Works of San Francisco to come in. The latter was a large concern operating with millions of capital, and having even the support of the National Government through political interest. The Trust said to its proprietors in much the same tone that it speaks to workmen: "You can accept our terms, or you are at liberty to refuse if you see fit." The Union Iron Works refused.

What happened? The Trust, controlling the mines, the source upon which the Union Iron Works depended for its raw materials, simply declined to supply, which was equivalent to saying: "When you of your own accord come into the Trust, there will be plenty of iron to run the works." The Union Iron Works saw the point and came in. In like manner the German ship owners, the imperfectly organized individual capitalist concerns which attract the attention of the big trusts will get a lesson on the "freedom of contract" which they themselves have used against the working class.

Last week several prominent club women visited the sweat shops and tenement house districts of Chicago on a tour of inspection. What they saw filled them with amazement, horror, surprise, and a great many other words of similar import. When properly filled they came back and reported their discoveries. They had unearthed a multitude of girls and women who were working 16 or 18 hours per diem for a wage of from 22 to 26 cents.

Being prominent club women instead of obscure Socialists, their "discoveries" secured the attention of the public press, which as usual "deplored" liberally. One journal, however, stated that the reason why these women and girls worked for such wages was due to the fact that they had no other means to secure "the comforts of life!" The same paper contained Dun's commercial report for the week, in which it was declared that property was never before so widespread, the only drawback being that the merchants could not secure enough railroad cars to ship their commodities.

According to special correspondent Curtis, the Socialist Party of Germany, although very impractical and visionary, is yet an exceedingly good instrument for promoting useful legislation. But Mr. Curtis didn't advise the American workmen to imitate their example by voting the Socialist ticket and thus becoming a "useful instrument." Probably an oversight on his part.

Labor organizations in Dallas, Texas, it is said are about to petition Congress to "investigate" Judge Kohlsaat in order to discover if he has as the unions believe, violated the law by issuing injunctions against striking workmen. Had the workmen themselves "investigated" the system of class rule which Judge Kohlsaat represents, there would be no necessity to trouble Congress about the matter, for the reason that there would be no such individual as "Judge" Kohlsaat.

These Alabama negro voters who have just been disfranchised, might possibly find some consolation in perusing Booker T. Washington's literary masterpiece entitled "Up from Slavery."

CONSULAR REPORTS

Significant Documents Showing the Trend of Modern Industry Throughout Europe.

The literature that is being put out by the various departments of the United States government constitutes the greatest mine for Socialist workers in existence. No other government has anything comparable to it. No private publishing house approaches the volume of the output. Almost every phase of economic life is touched upon in some of these reports. To be sure it is crude, undigested, and after dissection, but Socialists should know how to work it over and secure the grain of wheat from the chaff of the bushel of chaff. Almost all of this literature can be had for the asking. The quotations which follow are taken from the November number of the Consular Reports, to secure which regularly it is only necessary to drop a postal to the Secretary of State at Washington saying you would like them.

Here is a little item showing how general is the movement that is still converting rural property owners into city proletarians.

"Three generations ago, Germany was almost exclusively an agrarian state. In 1827 48 per cent. of the population followed agriculture, 46 per cent. industry and commerce, while all other pursuits were placed at 11 per cent. In 1884 only 20 per cent. of the population were engaged in agriculture, while the number employed in the various branches of industry and commerce had risen to 58 per cent. All other vocations being placed at 11 per cent. In 1890, the population of the empire was 54,340,000. Of this number only one-third may be said to have been dependent on agriculture for a livelihood, while fully 55 per cent. relied upon industry and commerce for an existence. Germany, like England, although not to the same extent, has sacrificed her agricultural interests in order to become a great exporting nation, and the importance of Russian and American grain has exerted a powerful influence in bringing about this change."

Yet fifteen years ago Kropotkin wrote a book, "Fields, Factories and Workshops," one of the main points of which was to prove that the process of economic specialization of countries had then reached its height and that the tendency now was for each country to become industrially independent. Great and "beautiful philosophy," anarchy!

"The uses to which corn is put in this country are of course entirely on the increase. Most of the bread consumed by the laboring classes contains 15 per cent. to 20 per cent. of corn meal. In view of the shortage of the corn crop in Europe this year, there is a great effort to extend the corn propaganda. Belgium furnishes an especially good field, because of the industrial crisis it is passing through, which necessitates economy on the part of the laboring classes. The Belgians are urged to eat corn. Belgium in 1900 did good work, but the trouble was it did not reach the masses of the people who so much need nutritious food. It is the poverty stricken people of Europe that should be reached—the people who work for from 40 to 60 cents a day. There are millions of this class on the continent, and Belgium has more than its proportion of the world's corn supply. Corn each year if they were aware of its value as human food and were taught how to prepare it."

"It is an ill wind that blows nobody good," and the extremity of the Belgian laborers is the opportunity of the American corn merchants and the Belgian capitalists, who hope thus to establish a lower standard of life and consequent wage scale. Wonder what the Belgian Socialists will do about it?

"The Germans are making efforts to raise cotton on the West coast of Africa. The latest experiment in this direction has been made in Togoland, and is described in the following article, taken from the Brunswick Landbote, dated September 1, 1900: 'If the present attempts succeed, a great future is opened to our Togoland colony. The government has taken into its service four intelligent negroes from Alabama, who have had a good school training, and are experienced in the cultivation. They were selected by the president of Tuskegee Institute in New York last year, taking with them all necessary tools and machines. The president of Tuskegee Institute has received a letter from one of them saying: 'We have brought under cultivation 100 acres of land, and a part of it has been planted in cotton. Indian corn and peanuts are also being raised. The cotton has already more fruit than many a farmer in America gets in a whole harvest. Six months ago there was nothing to be seen here but thickets and elephant grass. Now we have several buildings have been erected. I am engaged in setting up the cotton gin so as to be ready for the harvest. I and the natives are glad to work, but they cannot accomplish much more than get tired. It is a pity that there are no more colored cotton planters preparing to settle in Togo. The attempts of the English to establish cotton planting in Africa have failed, because the work was done by white men who could not stand the hot climate. The Germans have made the experiment with negroes, whose ancestors came from Africa and who have become masters of cotton planting in America. This pioneer work opens up the prospect of the development of a mighty cotton industry upon German colonial soil.'

Horner T. Washington is thus getting an international reputation as a trainer of wage slaves, while the cotton farmers of the South may also receive a slight jar before many years.

Here is an idea for Comrade Lockwood and his Socialist automobile:

"The great objection to electric motors—that they will not run far without recharging—is said to be overcome. It is recorded that recently in England a circle of 40 miles was run without recharging. It was done with a battery of 48 four-plate cells, with a capacity of 48 ampere hours. The carriage was a four-wheeled dog-cart, with two motors of 20 horse power each. The motor of the battery which enabled it to make such a record was that in going down grade the motors were reversed, thus making dynamo for charging the accumulator. By this way the current was not only saved, but a new current actually generated, rendering the battery stronger at the bottom of the grade. It was at the time, 'Night on the watered energy of the automobile as it has been a common sight in London.' A. M. SIMONE.

EXAMPLE OF SELF CONTROL

Anarchistic Comments on the Failure of Fulton St. Through the City Government.

Nearly every one has noticed the air of superiority assumed by those intellectual giants known as "Philosophical Anarchists." They think that any manifestation of their sapientry does, and ought to, make a Socialist feel spell-bound and helpless. Any hint that there may be a proper deal for collectivism is met with a smile of mild tolerance and pity.

Lucifer, a weekly paper, is largely filled with the writings of this class. It is located on Fulton street, Chicago, which street, says Lucifer, needs repairs of the pavement. The street car company agreed to keep the pavement in repair, but will not do so; whether the refusal is due to too much anarchism, or not enough, is not evident. The Fulton Street Improvement Association was formed, and welcomed by Lucifer as a "new anarchistic organization." The delegation explained to the editor of Lucifer that many streets were paved by individuals at a less price than the city would do the work. (Where such work is up to standard requirements it is accepted by the city, and the assessment cancelled, as is well known. This is contrary to anarchistic teachings in regard to the state; the objection to the state being that it insists on doing everything for everybody.)

The final result was that, instead of building a pavement on true anarchistic principles, the Association prevailed upon the City Council to compel the street car company to repair the pavement. What a fine opportunity was here lost—that of illustrating how well one anarchistic body could compel another ditto to keep its contracts. But instead, the despotic city was called upon.

Lucifer says: "It may be said that it was only through the city government that the street car company was finally forced to repair the street. Perhaps. But the street car company wants to run its cars, and there have been instances in which street cars have been prevented from running on streets whose residents were determined to prevent their passage."

This is anarchism. Thousands of passengers are to be stopped on their way, while individualistic residents and anarchistic railroad companies dispute about the setting of paving blocks in a few bad spots, here and there. I asked an individualist what if certain persons on a street refuse to supply their share of pavement? The answer was that they would not be allowed to step upon it. A picket would thus be necessary to guard each person so refusing, to see that he always goes out the back door and through the alley. If this person could overcome the picket by force, well and good; if an, double the pickets.

"Anarchism means self-control," says Lucifer. The self control of the street car company as it resists all requests to keep its agreements and repair the pavement, is truly admirable. C. F. H.

YOU KNOW TIME!

At last we Socialists will have to toe the mark. A product of the Chicago University has told us all about it in an article in the Tribune. This is what we will have to do in order to "convince the public." "Socialists," says this Sir Oracle, "must show either that an equal distribution of products would not have the effect assumed by Archbishop Corrigan, or else that some less fatal rate of distribution could and would be followed."

What are the efforts assumed by Archbishop Corrigan? This is what the University man refers to as an authentic expression of the feeling that seems to prevail regarding the merits of Socialism. We quote the Archbishop: "If in New York all were Socialists, each of the 4,000,000 inhabitants would contribute a four-millionth part to the common fund, and other things being equal, would be entitled to a share to show the falsity of this conclusion; certainly not a glittering prize for personal ambition, nor the most tempting inducement in the world."

In order to convince the public we critic in one of the "public" we would tickle. Assuming that our university critic is one of the "public" we would call his attention to the fact that the Tribune itself refers to this very passage of Archbishop Corrigan as follows: "He (Corrigan) misrepresents socialism by a modified rendering of the absurd idea as often heard, that it would mean an equal division of everything among everybody." This may be found in the editorial columns of the preceding Tuesday and we claim that it lets us out. We don't have to show.

But now, you educated donkey, can you show us why the Tribune permitted your article to appear in its columns, when five days before, it stated that what you imagine to be an authentic expression, was an absurd misrepresentation of Socialism? If the Tribune says to effect that you are absurd why should the Socialists bother about what to say? Retire at once to the extreme rear and assume a sitting position.

Charity may cover a multitude of sins, all right, but when it provides a "Thanksgiving" dinner, it manages to conceal several good-sized contradictions as well.

It is stated that the Fifty-seventh Congress won't contain a single Populist representative, but perhaps we can make good by placing a few Socialists in the Fifty-eighth.

More subscriptions are ALWAYS wanted.

CORRESPONDENCE

St. Louis, Nov. 8, 1901.
The National Committee has elected the following temporary committee on municipal affairs in accordance with the decision of the Indianapolis Convention: A. M. Simone, secretary of the committee, Chicago; Victor L. Berger, Milwaukee, Wis.; John Hartman, New York; Emil Lien, San Francisco, Cal.; John C. Chase, Haverhill, Mass.

The National Committee has issued charters to local branches at Lakeland, Fla.; Livingston, Mont.; Oklabama City, Okla.; De Soto, Kas.; Mineral, Kan.; Concordia, Mo.

The National Committee is about to arrange a western agitation trip for John C. Chase of Haverhill, Mass.

John M. Work of Des Moines, Ia., has been elected National Committeeman from Iowa.

WILL TEACH SOCIALISM.

Respectful Candidate for Governor of Ohio
Wm. Thompson, a Student of Ohio Propaganda.

Comrade Harry C. Thompson, who received 7,353 votes for governor of Ohio in the late election, has decided to establish a People's School for working men and women. It will be remembered that Comrade Thompson was recently discharged from the position of cashier for the Union Mutual Life Insurance Co. Referring to it in a recent letter he says: "We have been more than generous of the thorns than the roses for a little while. It is easy to think of the Cause and to know above contradiction that it is worth living and dying for; but to be actually discharged by a respectable, representative corporation is also a very real disgrace to many of our friends. If we did not know the nature of Capitalism we too would see the disgrace of the actual discharge. This was a plain case of the real nature of the struggle. I have letters from the Company showing real appreciation of my work as cashier in protecting their interests. When they employed me I knew my life was bound up in the People's cause, and it could only be a question of time before the deeper phase of interests became manifest, and then THEIR interests would have to be destroyed. It is only one more worker and thinker turned loose to hasten the end."

"With all this advertising I do not see how I can crawl back to the service of corporations. My whole desire and the preparation of long years is for another service. I love to teach. After election I think the whole organization here will take up the establishment of this school with heartiness. Some of the friends are already devotedly attacking the difficulties. We have made a wonderful advance in a year, and are moving toward ward organizations all over the city."

"The earnest thought of years has tended toward the expression possible in the People's School; but I realize more than ever the great difficulties in imparting clear views of such a complex humanity in preparation for this next conflict for liberty. The evolution of civilization must be continued by growth and logical revolution. We build on the good, the real, of the past, and Socialism is being modified by necessity and the other causes, aid and hindrances to all evolution. I expect to map out the lines ahead for the school. Most of the comrades seem to have confidence in its success."

We hope the Cincinnati comrades will have nothing under to make the school a success, in order to further the cause by establishing so necessary and useful an institution.

His announcement is as follows: The People's School will be established for those who would like to become more intelligent concerning the meaning of the times and to be wiser in their views of life. There are hundreds of men and women who have not the time, talent, or "knack" to get from books and libraries the facts that give a feeling of real intelligence, and which impart an interest in life as a definite opportunity to accomplish something. Those who have never read much, who have not had the advantage of an education, who have not had the time to read, are welcome to this school. Those who have had a school education, who have studied books without any adequate understanding of the special opportunity of this particular crisis in history, are also welcome. No questions will be asked about how much you know. There will be no examinations. It will not be necessary to read much.

A clear outline of the lesson will be written on a blackboard. This will be carefully explained. Pupils may take notes and ask questions. The idea of teaching will be to place in the mind of each pupil the points of some needed lesson. Then a copy of the outline and the pupils' notes will enable him or her to think and remember the lessons that make up the intelligence of the future. There will be no necessity to commit to memory the language of another.

The first classes will be in History, the Evolution of Civilization, and Social Evolution. The school will be a study of the evolution of the human race, of industry and the results of socialized effort will be studied in their effects upon modern society. Feudalism, commercialism, and socialism, will be analyzed and explained. Revolutions in the form of government leading to the greatest measure of individual liberty will be proven to be the natural evolution of mental development. Pupils will be furnished with information, taught to think and to arrange their own outline, and then to express their original reorganization of truths in a clear manner. They will enjoy their growing ability to speak clearly in the class, take part in discussion, learn to teach their family and friends in their turn. Later, some of the world's best literature will be examined.

There will be afternoon and evening classes in general education. The cost of tuition will be slight and the course of study will be arranged on a plan. Address HARRY C. THOMPSON, Hyde Park, or come to "The New Economy Club" at the Vine at the Vine Street Congregational Church, Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock.

Behind that recently formed 1000,000,000 trust engineered by H. H. and H. H. the nation of Socialism jumps up so distinctly, that even some of the capitalist journals seem to have caught a glimpse of it.

Physical and Social Materialism.

By Marcus Hitch.

"A materialist philosophy," says George Plechanow, "like every modern philosophical system, must furnish an explanation for two classes of facts; for the facts of nature, on the one hand, and for the facts of the historical development of mankind on the other."

The old French materialism of the 17th century took the fully developed individual by itself as a separate phenomenon, detached from its surroundings and history, and undertook to explain it by purely physical causes, without the assistance of divine power. It was avowedly atheistic. But it broke down at two points; it could not account for the origin of the individual; it could not say whether the chicken existed before the egg or whether the egg existed before the chicken. Neither could it solve the question of ethics; it saw that human nature is a product of social environment, but when asked what determined the social environment it could give no answer except that human nature determines the environment and the environment determines human nature. This is what has been called metaphysical materialism, abstract materialism or individual materialism, as distinguished from dialectic materialism.

This old materialism was supplanted by the results of two lines of investigation wholly distinct from each other both in time and in subject matter. Darwin with his evolutionary materialism helped it out on the question of the chicken and the egg. Marx with his social materialism explained the mystery of human nature and morality. Is there any necessary connection between these two, as is frequently claimed?

The earlier of these was Marx. According to Marx himself he reached his conclusions by a study of legal institutions and particularly of Hegel's Philosophy of Law. The first publication of the law of social growth by class struggle is to be found in Marx's "Poverty of Philosophy," published in 1847. In 1848 appeared the COMMUNIST MANIFESTO, which has ever since been looked upon as the standard exposition of the doctrine. Nothing important has been added to it since, and if Marx had died after writing the Manifesto, the doctrine considered purely as a discovery would have been left but little. A remarkable feature of this doctrine is contained in the preface to Marx's "Critique of Political Economy," published eleven years later in 1859, but this part of the preface belongs back in the earlier period and has nothing to do with the subject of the book itself. With the publication of the Manifesto in 1848 the foundation of Marxian Socialism based on class struggle was completed. At that time Darwinism did not exist. Nothing was said about dialectic materialism as distinguished from the old French metaphysical materialism. It was not thought necessary to show any connection between Socialism and materialism, and no attempt was made to do so.

Marx found that the ruling and moving force in society, instead of being an ideal World-Spirit, as claimed by Hegel, was in fact nothing more new than the social industry prevailing at the time. "Does it require deep intuition," says the Manifesto, "to comprehend that man's ideas, views and conceptions, in the word man's consciousness, changes with every change in the conditions of his material existence, in his social relations, and in his social life? What else does the history of ideas prove than that intellectual production changes its character to conform to material production? The ruling ideas of each age have ever been the ideas of its ruling class." These words relate to social affairs, not to so-called materialistic materialism.

In 1882 the doctrine of Darwinism was first made public. Those of the Socialists who were already materialists joyfully embraced it, and from that time on attempts have been made to show that there is a necessary connection between Socialism and materialism. The common but ambiguous phrase "materialistic conception of history," has a tendency to create the impression that Socialism is "materialistic." Is this true? The evolution of industry by the ever-increasing use of infinitesimal inventions, discoveries and improvements seen analogous to the variations by means of which the development in plant and animal life goes on; and this industrial Darwinism is complemented by "political Darwinism," which has the claim for a unit. These are the apologetics pointed out by those who see an inseparable connection between Socialism and materialism.

The acceptance of Darwinism seems to imply what is commonly called atheism or materialistic materialism, and no doubt many Socialists agree with Engels when he says: "The entire natural world is governed by law, and absolutely excludes the intervention of action from without." In our evolutionary conception of the universe there is absolutely no room for either a Creator or a Ruler." (Engels' "Socialism," p. 15.)

But however it may be with the natural world, certainly one can accept the original doctrine of Marxian Socialism, the SOCIAL world, the world of human society, as governed by ascertainable economic laws, without surrendering his belief in a creator or ruler in the natural world. This implies that God does not intervene in social affairs, and if he does so in individual affairs this does not affect social relations except in so far as it results ultimately and indirectly to effects on the economic development of society.

Engels says: "I use the term 'historical materialism' to designate that view of the course of history which seeks the ultimate cause and great moving power of all important historic events in the economic development of society, in the changes in the modes of production and exchange, in the consequent division of society into distinct classes, and in the struggles of these classes against one another." Engels' "Socialism," p. 15.

Historical materialism is the term commonly used by Engels. But history means history of human society; historical means social. Hence, as a variety of names is sometimes used in making a new idea clear, it might also be called social materialism, economic materialism, or simply economicism, meaning the supremacy of economic causes in social life.

This doctrine implies that inventions and discoveries, however wonderful, have no effect on society unless and until they take an economic form and begin to affect social industry. So-called progress of enlightenment or development of intelligence of itself has no effect on a class-ruled society, because a class-ruled society is an economically ruled society. The discovery that the world was round was as barren as Leibniz's discovery of America, until its commercial and economic effects began to be felt. So of the discovery of gunpowder and printing by the Chinese. Until put to economic use they served merely as scientific toys, having no social effect. The same may be said of religious and philosophic beliefs; they do not affect society unless they first affect economic relations. In fact society may be said to be bomb-proof against all influences except those which modify its economic organization. A corporation is said to have no soul, neither has the de facto incorporated class of property owners, mislabeled "society," any soul. Its god is its belly. Its so-called soul of social consciousness is to be found only in its economic relations. It is moved primarily through economic motives. Each society is a corporation for pecuniary profit, so to speak, that is, for the material well-being of its members. If the individual has a soul, his soul can have no effect on society except through economic agencies. This state of affairs is inevitable so long as the economic question remains unsolved socially; so long as individuals and classes are warring with each other over the question of a livelihood. When this war is over, when society has taken hold of and subjected these economic forces which now tear its body, the growth of society will proceed on different principles. Our morality is not the result of our industrial system. Our industrial system is the cause of our shocking morality. Morality demands the abolition of various forms of vice, crime and human suffering, such as the death of a helpless infant in open court by actual starvation (which recently happened in Chicago). Our industrial system demands the retention of these things. They are the foundation upon which the profit system is built. Without the shedding of blood there is no remittance of profit. It is possible, without endangering the system, to slightly change the form of these evils or partly conceal them, or shift them from one locality to another, as child labor has been shifted to the South. But to take the necessary measures to stop these things effectually, i. e., at their origin, would overthrow the system. For the capitalists it is true that the remedy would be worse than the disease.

The non-Socialist recognizes no law of social growth which he is able to explain. When asked if the development of the social productive powers is not the controlling factor of social life, he will admit that this is ONE of the factors, but will add that there are other factors. When asked to state what these other factors are and what proportion of weight is to be given to those other factors, and what proportion to the economic factor, so that we may have a basis for a calculation, he replies that this is something which is hard to determine, in fact so hard that it never has been determined, cannot be determined now and probably never will be determined; all of which means that he is a social agnostic or anarchist; for him there is no such thing as a science of history or of society whose laws are ascertainable. For him one course is just as apt to succeed as another. And one time is just as reasonable as another for the growth of any social movement whatever. It is all haphazard anyhow.

The question arises, in this pretentious science which we have called economicism, true? Is there any such thing as a science of society, and if so, is it based on economic development? No other explanation of social changes except the economic has ever been given which is any better than the old one of the metaphysical materialists, i. e., that the society depends on the environment and the environment depends on the society.

As soon as man becomes a tool-making animal, he enters upon a new phase of development. His sociological development comes to be important. His historical career begins. His physical environment is no longer determinative; his industrial environment is henceforth the controlling factor. The education of mankind at large does not depend on schools and book learning, but upon actual participation in production, in business, in marriage, in all the details of existence, the living of life is hard education. As we make our living with society and not outside of it, the kind of tools we use and the methods of co-operation in which they are used constitute the all controlling influence which shapes the course of human society. It is not simply the quantity of production or the capacity of the industrial plant alone which is important, else we should expect to find in tropical countries where means of existence are most abundant, the highest development. Such is not the case. It is the character of the tools which constitute the total industrial plant of society, and the method in which this plant is owned and operated, that determines the degree of development, that is, the degree of education obtained by society as a whole.

If Socialism is a science, it is able to stand on its own feet without the aid of religion or materialism or other outside support. But if it is only a doctrinaire philosophy, such as the so-called philosophies of anarchism, of free trade, of single tax, of personal liberty, etc., it will indeed take a vast amount of religion and arguments without end to keep it afloat, and even then it will finally go by the board, the same as all other philosophies, because irrefutable arguments are not sufficient to overthrow a ruling class. Truth does not prevail in social affairs unless it is backed by the material interests of the strongest class. If the foundation of social institutions is not economic, but religious, then there is no use trying to unite Christians, Jews, Mohammedans, Buddhists, etc., into one international and interreligious Socialist movement. Religion divides men, economics unites them. Science, instead of making itself infinitely great, tends to make him infinitely small, where it cannot wholly dispense with him.

Talk Socialism to a man who is somewhat versed in history, and he will reply that it is an old idea which has often bubbled up before, and has always bubbled down again in a little while, and that the same fate awaits modern Socialism. The sure way to silence him is to explain the cause of class struggle, and point out to him that now for the first time in history industry is adapted to collective management; and that now for the first time in history the exploited class has the necessary education and political power to secure control of the government; the so-called republics of antiquity were merely aristocracies based on slavery, but now the day of the belated proletarian is at hand. In his own voice.

Having arrived at the conclusion that Socialism is a science, it is clearly materialistic in the economic sense of the word, but not necessarily so, in the sense in which that word is used when speaking of materialistic materialism as a philosophy. There are two kinds of Socialism; materialistic Socialism and some other kind which is not materialistic. All Socialism, whether so-called utopian or scientific, has reference solely to an economic condition, and in that sense is materialistic. What effect it will have on other human institutions we do not fully know, nor is it necessary that we should know at the present time.

Some persons are both Socialists and materialistic materialists; others are Socialists but not materialists; others are materialists but not Socialists; others are neither materialists nor Socialists. Economicism or Socialism forms a common ground upon which may be united people of widely divergent views as to religion and cosmic theories, provided they agree in the view that the life of society depends on its industrial development. This leaves the individual free in his religious beliefs, because these cannot affect society unless they first affect industry. It leaves religion to stand on its own merits after the present economic prop has been removed. It also leaves Socialism free to stand on its own merits unimpeded by religious controversies, and philosophic systems, materialistic or otherwise.

The attempt to combine social materialism and materialistic materialism into one doctrine under the name of dialectic materialism, seems to us unwise, as unwise as it would be to load Socialism down with some particular doctrine as to medical science or some other matter not directly connected with social relations. Social materialism is dialectic, i. e., evolutionary, so is physical materialism; but there is no connection between them, which is of any importance in Socialist propaganda.

Marx was first and foremost a social philosopher, not a theorist, a naturalist, or an economist. His economic writings were written many years after the completion of his immortal work as the founder of the science of history, and have given rise to an amount of discussion altogether out of proportion to their importance in Socialist literature, and have thus unfortunately diverted attention from his earlier and more important work, all to the immense misfortune of the capitalists. We say this not because we value his economic writings less, but because we value his political writings more.

The only safe ground for a Socialist to stand on is that of economic independence, regardless of consequences. This is the minimum demand. Unless a man is ready to accept the triumph of Socialism in the economic field with all that it implies, he will not feel perfectly at home in the Socialist movement. Until economic independence for all becomes a demand to him then everything else he will not be enthusiastic for. If he has some cherished object, such as religion, family, nationality, native language, personal liberty, a private property, a philosophical ideal, or the like, which he prizes higher than economic freedom and feels that they cannot thrive in that state, but must have economic subjection to keep them alive, he will be drawn by conflicting emotions; he is pushing for Socialism, but is bracing his feet to keep it from having an unwished-for effect. What ideological superstructure will be erected on the foundation of economic liberty we cannot now tell. Neither will any amount of steering at the present time determine this. Economic freedom will have certain effects on social institutions, and we shall have to hear them as best we can, whether they be "materialistic" or the opposite.

We conclude, therefore, that all Socialists are necessarily materialists in one sense, and in one sense only, that is, in the sense of being social materialists; that inasmuch as they are advocating and working for a unified, co-operative society, the burden is on them to show that such a society, which has never before existed, is now attainable or inevitable; they must give a reason for the faith that is in them; that in order to show this they must take refuge in the law of social growth by class struggle, running its complete course to final self-extinction and ending in collectivism; that in doing this they not only reject the doctrine of political accidents, but are also compelled to drop God out of the social life or rely on his inactivity, or confine his workings to the lines of ascertainable laws. As to political affairs, we are practically atheists or agnostics. We do not believe in the divine right of kings, nor in the divine right of classes, nor in the divine right of private ownership of public utilities. We are agnostic politicians for the very reason that we are NOT political agnostics or social agnostics, as all non-Socialists necessarily are.

Further than this it is not necessary to go. Socialists need not today take up an active fight for atheism, or materialism, as the bourgeoisie felt compelled to do when attacking feudalism, because at that time the church set itself up as the guardian of science and forced the then revolutionary bourgeoisie into a hostile attitude towards any and every form of religious belief. Today the church no longer poses as the guardian of science, but it still poses as the guardian of politics. It will readily pardon a scientific attack on all of its thirty-nine articles of religion but will tolerate no criticism of existing property relations. There is no room for jokes here, and no room for science either. It is the exclusive jurisdiction of the church. It is only so far as the church will pose as the guardian of the political class, state, as the supporter of class law, class justice, class morality, class property and class order, that Socialism is compelled to fight the church as an organization. ORGANIZED religion is not a matter of individual belief, but is a SOCIAL affair, and hence is today capitalistic, and is attacked by Socialists; but their does not apply to individual beliefs.

Conclusion: Physical materialism and social materialism are two entirely separate things; as also are Socialism and individual religious beliefs.

All the Socialists of Chicago will gather TO NIGHT at the First Regt. Armory for the Great Winter Festival.

What's the use of putting up a "labor" candidate if he is in favor of continuing present social and industrial conditions? The capitalist will put up a man who advocates the same thing, and thus save you the trouble.

An inquiry into sweatshop conditions in Chicago reveals the fact that hundreds of girls and women are working 15 and 16 hours per day in order to earn from 25 to 30 cents. In the interests of the Chinese we demand that the exclusion act be extended.

Upholders of the present system of robbery was eloquent in telling us of all the things we wouldn't have under Socialism. The plain truth is that under Socialism we wouldn't have capitalism, and it is that fact alone that worries them.

New let the Chicago workmen arise in their might and demand better telephone service. There is quite as much sense in that as in demanding the election of candidates who will conserve the interests of the capitalists.

Judging from the ordinary budget of news from New York it would be rather difficult to infer that the cause of "democracy and good government" had just scored a signal triumph in that city.

LOCAL PARTY NOTES

DISTRICT NO. 4.

At Sunday's meeting five Branches were represented. Light attendance at business meetings was reported. Members were reported as willing to pay dues, but not inclined to attend business meetings.

The Organizer reported 15 members in good standing in the 34th Ward and 20 in the 27th.

Committee of printing was ordered to get up posters advertising the agitation meetings to commence January 1st. Report on sale of Ball tickets 1st. Report on sale of Ball tickets 1st. Report on sale of Ball tickets 1st.

NORTH SIDE.

The first indoor meeting held on the North Side on last Sunday, November 18th, 3 p. m., at Social Turner Hall, was a complete success.

The speakers were Comrade Joe Wanhope, editor of the Workers' Call, and Comrade Johanna Greis of New Jersey.

The first address was made by Comrade Wanhope and was carefully and well delivered, the only complaint being that it was too short. Comrade Wanhope was in his usual good trim and delivered a spirited but clear Socialist address.

He was followed by Comrade Johanna Greis and it was evident from the close attention and many outbursts of applause that those German comrades, friends, sympathizers, and listeners who were present, appreciated the address of the comrade. An audience of over one hundred were present, and a very good collection was taken up. Ten new members were secured. A quantity of literature was sold.

The next meeting at this hall will be held on Sunday, December 1st, at 3 p. m., and Comrades R. Morris and Untermyer will speak. We hope for as much success as at the November 18th meeting.

The first meeting to be held with the co-operation of the 21st, 22d and 23d Ward Branches will take place at Senefelder Hall, 565 Wells St., on Sunday, November 24th, 3 p. m. Comrades Knox and Morris will speak. All subscribers to the Workers' Call in the three (3) above named wards are invited to attend; a discussion will follow.

The North Division Committee is making arrangements for a large mass meeting on the "Free Text Book Question." Time, place and speakers will be announced next week.

As the time draws near for the Simpson-Leake debate, tickets are being sold rapidly. All comrades having tickets must notify us by Monday, December 1st, of number of tickets sold, and return all not sold, as the capacity of the hall is limited. The rule charging 25 cents at the door will be strictly enforced. So buy ahead of time. This will be certainly the greatest treat offered the Socialists and their sympathizers. Both men are able exponents of their different philosophies. Come early and avoid the rush. Tickets for sale on West and North sides and at Workers' Call office.

TEMPLE NOTES.

On Thursday Comrade T. J. Morgan delivered the first of his series of lectures before the Woman's Auxiliary. These are to be given every other week.

On Saturday the Temple Dramatic Club gave their initial performance before a well-filled house. The performance was completely successful, the stage and equipments being found satisfactory in all respects. Succeeding performances will be given every second Saturday of the month. Any comrade wishing to join, please address Dramatic Club, 120 S. Western Ave.

Comrade Slesman was the speaker at the Sunday afternoon Socialist School. A large class, mostly men, were present and great interest was displayed in the highly instructive address of Comrade Slesman. In the evening John Collins spoke on the "Bread and butter question" and presented it in a most convincing manner.

On Monday (18th Inst.) Mrs. Simons' school was well attended. This school affords an opportunity to acquire a groundwork in Socialism which should not be missed.

Next week's speakers: Sunday, November 24th—Afternoon school, Comrade Smiley; evening address, Comrade Knox. Wednesday, Nov. 27th—Clarance Darrow will speak without fail. Subject, "Law Courts and the Poor."

Next week's speakers: Sunday, November 24th, 3 p. m., for the purpose of reorganizing the 24th ward hall. All Socialists of this ward are urged to be present.

Of course there is a most intense "public indignation" aroused over the traffic in the dead bodies of the friendless and unknown, but on the other hand the prospect of the County Hospital patients perishing from cold, hunger and misery, and the fact that the bodies were with admirable resignation and fortitude.

Economists and the Wage System.

Extracts from Lectures Delivered Before Class of Social Economy by May Wood Simons.

What constitutes a wage laborer? Is it merely the fact that he belongs to the propertyless class, that is the class that has no part in the instruments of production, or is it the amount of income he receives that is the test of his being a wage earner? It is neither of these. The wage earner is distinguished from all other classes by a certain FUNCTION he has to perform in society. He is the producer of wealth. His function in society is to produce its goods. Labor is today a commodity that, like any other commodity, is bought and sold in the market, but labor as we saw in our last lecture, has not always been wage labor. Marx says, "The slave does not sell his labor to the slave owner. The slave along with his labor is sold once for all to his owner. He is a commodity which can pass from the hand of one owner to that of another. He himself is a commodity, but his labor is not his commodity. The serf sells only a portion of his labor. He does not receive his wages from the owner of the soil; rather the owner of the soil receives a tribute from him. The serf belongs to the soil and to the lord of the soil he brings its fruits. The free laborer, on the other hand, sells himself, and that by fractions."

The history of the evolution of the slave into the wage-earner is the history of the successive steps the subject class has taken toward something of personal freedom.

Unconsciously for the most part the slaves passed from slavery to serfdom, forced on by economic conditions. He himself showed little intelligent effort to change his condition.

Likewise the serf displayed but a slight self-interest to aid economic forces in bringing about a change to the wage system. It is the wage-earning class alone that has manifested an enlightened class interest. It is this class alone that has consciously said: "We will understand economic forces and, working along in the line of social development, will not fail through ignorance to reap the benefit that comes to us through industrial changes."

We begin, then a study historically, of the origin and growth of the wage-earning class, using English economic development to illustrate our point. Going back to feudalistic times, to the beginning of the thirteenth century, we find a decided change taking place in the condition of the serfs or villeins. Gradually they were becoming free tenants subject only to a money rent instead of a certain number of days' labor. The lords were frequently in need of money to fight their battles. At the same time, beginning in 1084, and continuing to 1173, we have that strange movement known as the Crusades. To go on these journeys required money, and the lords and barons gladly parted with certain of their powers in order to obtain ready money.

By the time of the Great Plague in 1348, villeinage had become well nigh extinct. The villeins who were better off had developed into small farmers, while the poorer ones, the cottars, had grown into a separate class of agricultural laborers. They were not entirely without land, but possessed so little that the greater part of their time was spent tilling the soil for others for wages.

In 1348 began the Great Plague, which in its economic effects was of importance. Starting in Asia and spreading to Italy, it came on into Western Europe and England. The ravages were terrible and whole counties were depopulated. Upon the laboring class it fell with greatest force. The result was a scarcity of labor, and a consequent rise in the wages of labor. For harvest time the rise was 50 per cent, and generally in agricultural labor it was 100 per cent. So great was the fear of the landlords that their land would not be cultivated, that at first this increase was paid without great protest.

But, as was to be expected, it was not long before the upper class objected to paying so large a part of their profits to the laboring class, and a proclamation was issued declaring that "no man should either demand or pay the higher rate of wages, but should abide by the old rate."

By the close of the Middle Ages certain important changes were plain in the condition of the laborer. The raising of wool and the manufacture of woollen goods were beginning to take a prominent place in English industry. The increased cost of labor had caused many landowners to do away with cultivating the land and turn it instead into sheep farms. Great numbers of free tenants were thus left landless and became wage laborers, and frequently travelled from place to place in search of work.

Gillebrun in his Industrial History says: "Labor had become nominally independent after the Peasants' revolt of 1381, and at the same time it consciously felt that it was in opposition to capitalist and land-owning interests."

In its desire for freedom it began to shake off even the self-imposed restrictions of the guilds. The old craft guilds began to lose their power. They had served their purpose and helped to build up a body of independent organized workers. Now they were only a relic of the past.

We come now to the time when the cottage factories disappeared and machine work took the place of hand work. This revolution in methods of production was brought in by the great inventions and by the discovery of steam power.

Soon conditions in the factories became so bad that some measures to check them were plainly necessary. And now one word concerning English factory legislation that has been repeatedly pointed to as an example of disinterested legislation on the part of the upper class for the benefit of the lower.

The manufacturing and merchant class that rose with the industrial revolution, soon began to show signs of over shadowing the landed nobility. The latter, to clip the wings of these small owners began to vigorously advocate factory reform. Lord Shaftesbury and others succeeded in thus reducing the hours of labor. There is never a doubt but that these reforms were needed, but the point is this, when the corn law agitation came up, and this same class could have given to the laboring class cheaper bread, they fought against the repeal of the corn laws and thus proved that when they saw their own pecuniary interests at stake, they were not so benevolently inclined toward the laborer. But it was through the corn laws that the capitalist class found its opportunity to retaliate and strike a blow at its old enemy, the landed nobility.

Economic Systems.

At all times the orthodox Political Economy has been a reflection of the interests of the ruling class. As these interests have continuously changed with the changes in social organization, the doctrines of political economy have changed with them. Hence, when we come to discuss the contrast between Socialism and Political Economy it is necessary to explain which of the various systems of Political Economy we mean.

Therefore a short survey of these various systems that have prevailed may not be uninteresting. The word Mercantilism meant constantly in economic writings, is the term applied to the economic policy that prevailed from the beginning of the 15th to late in the 18th century. This was not so much a school of Political Economy as the policy of the statesmen of this time. Great nations were just beginning to take form, and each nation sought to make itself a self-sufficient, independent economic unit. Each nation endeavored therefore to keep the balance of trade in its own favor, hence this policy is called "the balance of trade theory." To the mercantilists the only real wealth was gold and silver coin or bullion, and they sought by every possible means to increase the supply of these in each separate country. Therefore they tried to sell as many goods and buy as few as possible to make the value of the exports greatly exceed the value of the imports.

By this means a stream of coin would be kept flowing into the country having the favorable balance of trade, and that country would accordingly grow in wealth.

We find traces of this same idea existing down to the present time, as for instance in the cry for more markets, and in the newspaper boasting over the growth in "our" exports.

But the fact is that we are sending away actual useful wealth in exchange for this coin, and this while a large per centage of our population are desperately in need of the goods. Then, again, the class that receive the income from the "favorable balance of trade" is never the same as the class that produced the goods that were exported.

This second school is known as the Physiocrats. The Physiocrats laid great stress upon the importance of agriculture as a profession and upon land as a productive factor. In many ways this school was the forerunner of the Single Tax. Indeed, Turgot, the greatest of the Physiocrats, proposed a scheme for raising revenue which he called "le impot unique"—the single tax—and in which he proposed to place all taxes on land.

At the beginning of the past century the system of capitalism began to enter upon the stage of history. The industrial revolution which ushered in capitalism in England, is generally supposed to date from about 1780. In 1776 appeared an economic treatise that most ably set forth the policy of the time. This was Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations. The old exclusive national policy was breaking down. All the nations of the world were becoming one great community under the influence of manufacturing and commerce. The old restrictions of the guilds and the Mercantilists on trade gave way before this new power.

Thus the maxim of Laissez Faire, or, the let alone policy, handed on by the Physiocrats, began to prevail and was, advocated by Smith in his book. But Laissez Faire implies free competition, and by this means Smith claimed men's wants could be supplied at a minimum cost.

It was held that if anybody who wished, started in any line of manufacturing, competition would give the largest rewards to the most competent producers. The ultimate result of all this was to be that the best men would always receive the highest rewards, the least successful would be driven out of business, and the goods would be produced at the lowest possible cost.

Of course the weak point in all this, as every Socialist knows, is that all men and methods do not start on the same level. It is not as South supposed, a contest between equal industrial units, and consequently the best stands a very good chance of being handicapped that the worst wins instead.

Every person was to be free to compete or to contract with every other person. To interfere with these sacred rights of contract and competition was the highest possible crime. Now there is one special contract that all capitalist governments and their Political Economists are particularly concerned with. That is the "wage contract," for nowhere was it more frequently violated than the sacred freedom of contract prevailed than in the bargain between employer and employee. Nothing must be done to keep the laborer from selling his labor power as he and his employer should see fit. So the first child labor laws were declared unconstitutional—not because they were against the interests of the employer; oh, no! but because they infringed the "freedom of contract" of the child who was thus prevented from exercising his sacred right of making a contract with his employer.

Of course the Socialist has been quick to point out that a contract when the contracting parties are not of equal strength is not a "free contract" at all, and that therefore no such sacred right ever existed for the laborer.

Another idea of this school of Political Economy was that capital was the result of saving. It was held that all capital was accumulated by virtue of the fact that its owner was economical and put by a portion of his earnings each week or month or year for re-investment, and everybody was advised to do likewise and also become capitalists.

The fact is, of course, that capital is accumulated not by individual saving, but by re-investment and expenditure in the purchase of labor power which will yield surplus value. Capital is thus the result of exploitation, not saving.

One of the best examples of the way in which this invariable law theory worked out was shown by the wage fund theory.

This law, if it had been true, as it never was, would have made labor unions and all efforts of laborers to increase their wages useless, since only a fixed part of capital could be devoted to the paying of labor.

J. S. Mill is the text book in Chicago University, but it is Mill with much left out. For example, the following will not be found in the edition used: "The restraint of Communism would be freedom for capitalists with the present condition of the majority of the human race. The generalization of laborers have as little choice of occupation or freedom in this and most other countries, are practically as dependent on fixed rules and on the will of others as they could be in any system short of actual slavery."

The New Socialist Temple.

A number of offers from land-owners for a site for the new Socialist Temple are under consideration. The executive committee, consisting of Comrades Barnard, Daly, Farber, Heckman, Morgan, Jessa, Kennedy, Kerr, Lambert, Smith, Wachusky and Wright, has been given full charge of the preliminary arrangements, and will soon decide on the site and style of the building to be erected. Contributions in cash to the building fund have been received:

Wm. C. Morgan	10.00
A. H. Hugel	10.00
R. C. Williams	2.00
A. M. Anderson	1.00
Geo. R. Grant	10.00
John Peterson	5.00
John H. Hansen	2.00
A. A. Wiggins	5.00
Total	84.00

Comrades are urged to get in their contributions as soon as possible. The base of the old Temple expires next April, and we want to get a roof over our heads by that time, so as to avoid any interruption to our work.

The building will be owned by the Socialist Co-operative of Chicago, and party members can join the Co-operative and thus become a joint owner in the new building by paying $5.00. No one who is not a party member can buy any share in the building for any amount of money. This will be a guarantee that both the building and the Co-operative will be managed strictly in the interests of the Socialist Party.

The location chosen will be a central one, as convenient to all parties of the city as can be found, and every Comrade has a personal interest in making an immediate success of the building project. Pay what you can now, for we need to secure a site, and that takes money. You can put your name down for as much as you can save each month till the building is completed.

Here is another way to help effectively that will cost you nothing. You are paying several dollars a week for food, coal, laundry work, etc., and the profit is going to those who are trying to maintain the present capitalist system. Do your trading with the Socialist Co-operative. It will cost you no more, probably less, you will get genuine goods, and the profits will go to the cause of Socialism.

For further particulars call at the Socialist Temple, 120 S. Western Ave., any evening, better take in one of the propaganda meetings, held on Sunday, Wednesday, and Thursday. If more convenient, call at my office, 50 North Avenue, any time between 11 a. m. and 4 p. m. You can get your membership card at either place.

Socialist School.

Every Sunday afternoon during the winter, lectures dealing with some phase of Scientific Socialism will be delivered at the Socialist Temple. An opportunity is thus afforded to many people who are Socialists to post themselves on the subject without going to the expense of purchasing high-priced books. These lectures will in no sense be propaganda speeches, but will be conducted for the sole purpose of educating those interested in the doctrine of Socialism. All who are desirous of acquiring the science of Socialism as taught by Marx, Engels, Liebknecht, Kautsky and others, will do well to become members of this school. A class for children will also be started soon. The school is free.

Rickaby on Socialism

A Review of the Pamphlet Now Being Circulated by the "Catholic Truth Society."

The Rev. Joe Rickaby, S. J., has written a pamphlet on "The Crying Evil of the Hour," which evil he declares to be Socialism. This pamphlet is being circulated by thousands among the Roman Catholics of Chicago, and is intended to be a crushing refutation to Socialism. As the letters after the author's name indicate that he is a member of the Society of Jesus, popularly known as the Jesuits, and as it is through this particular order that the Catholic Church usually acts in all countries where it enters politics, we are justified in concluding that this is an official declaration of war from the "powers that be" within the Roman Catholic Church. That this action will raise trouble within their own ranks we may be sure. There are many who, like Father McGrady, will refuse to recognize the policy of the high church dignitaries on this point.

Perhaps the greatest danger, or rather the only danger, to Socialism lies in the fact that some Socialists will fall into the trap which such an attack constitutes, and respond by jumping upon the Catholic Church as an institution. This would be just what the enemies of Socialism would most desire. It would change the discussion from the dangerous ground of Socialism to the perfectly safe position of religion. So long as the laborers spend their time thinking about religion, Socialism is fairly safe, and it does not make any difference to the safety of capitalism whether their thoughts on this subject take the negative form of secularism, infidelity and agnosticism, or the orthodox form of Catholicism, Protestantism, or the doctrines of the Salvation Army and the Christian Scientist. All these matters are strictly none of the Socialist's business. AS A SOCIALIST. To attack the Catholic Church because of the action of Rev. Rickaby and Archbishop Corrigan and the "Catholic Truth Society," is as silly as to call for the abolition of the Post Office because of the recent discrimination against Socialist papers, or to join in the cry of "lynch the niggers" because Booker T. Washington is a valuable decoy duck for capitalism. It is not churches, nor post offices, nor negroes that we want to abolish, but capitalism, and if this incidentally hurts any of these others, that is none of our fault.

So it is that in a consideration of this pamphlet I shall discuss it in exactly the same way as if it were written by a Hindu, an Ingersollite, a Presbyterian, or a Salvation Army lassie. It is only possible in the brief limits of a single article, to touch upon some of the more manifest absurdities of his argument, and perhaps at some other time I may go more into details.

He puts the issue fair and square at the start. Designating the capitalist and laborer of today by the names of their biblical prototypes Dives and Lazarus, he says: "Property now is on its trial. If the existence of Dives is a benefit to Lazarus, then we will not touch it, but if his existence is a benefit to no one but himself, so much the worse for Dives in the time that is coming on earth." Good! We accept the issue, and if we cannot show the uselessness of the capitalist, then the Reverend has won out. But instead of attempting to show that Dives has a reason for existence, the writer takes a sudden turn, and after a most thrilling description of the woes of the present worker, with which we most heartily agree, proceeds to define Socialism. "Socialism involves a transfer, sudden and probably violent, of all capital to the State." But Socialism proposes nothing of the kind. Here is our old bug-a-bee of "State Socialism" once more. It is the same old straw man that has been nervously howled over time without number. What Socialists propose is that the present state should first become a government of the workers and then that it should proceed to acquire the means whereby wealth is produced. If the capitalists refuse to give up their plunder then they will necessarily have to be put down as rebels who refuse to obey the laws. Otherwise there is no necessity of violence.

But we will not quibble over definitions of this point, but will go on. As we read further, we find that this writer has proceeded to build a utopia and to outline a future society from the fragments of his own brain that would out-Bellamy Bellamy. After declaring, which is a quite fair statement of the case, that Socialism proposes a purely democratic form of government, and that "The people collectively is to be sole proprietor, not of all the wealth to the country, but of all the wealth that may be lawfully employed in producing other wealth," he goes on to make some most astounding conclusions. He then declares that a man "may not hire hands to cultivate his garden and then sell the produce; he may not build houses and rent them; he may not import wine for the market." And the reason why he cannot do all these things according to the Rev. Rickaby, is because the state will make such actions unlawful.

such thing. The reason why it will be impossible for one man to hire another or to rent him a house, is not because the state has forbidden such actions, but because everyone being able to secure all that his labor will create, without the interference of a master, he will naturally refuse to sell himself to such a master. No law will be needed. Indeed if anyone is fool enough to hire himself out to another under Socialism, no one could have the slightest objection.

So it is with his silly little illustration of the fisherman and his family under Socialism, who having prospered "in their craft" will start another boat and man it with hirelings. But if whoever wishes, can use a boat which is the common property of all and receive all the fish that he catches, where can any fool be found to sell themselves for less than their whole catch, and if they receive all they catch why would anyone want to hire them?

"Socialism," he continues, "to be successful would need to embrace the civilized world." It will do, that same, but not for the reason he gives in the next sentence, where he says: "Otherwise the threatened capitalists would hasten to transfer their wealth to countries where private capital is still allowed." Did it ever strike the Reverend that it would be a pretty hard job for the capitalists, who are usually not accustomed to hard labor, to dig up the coal and iron mines, tear up the railroads, pack away the mills and factories, cart off the great city blocks, and scoop up the choice residential districts and valuable suburban property of this country, and carry it away to some country where the wicked Socialists would cease from troubling and the weary capitalist would be at rest. And by the way, Rev. Rickaby, would you just mention where such a country is located? What you mean is that they would carry away their paper titles, their stocks, bonds, deeds, mortgages, etc. Well, good riddance to bad rubbish with them. The laborers could get on very well without them, thank you.

Then he pictures the terrible times that would be ahead of his imaginary Socialist state, if ever his imaginary Socialist government should find itself in the power of an imaginary "fighting guild" who should inaugurate an imaginary revolution to establish an imaginary tyranny. "This is the sort of stuff that dreams are made of," not Socialism, and need not occupy our attention further than to ask what would be the object of all this commotion in a society in which there was to be no economic gain from political supremacy. What would his "fighting guild" live on while they were drilling and getting ready to do all this? For real assured the workers would not give them anything to live on while they were wasting their time in such foolishness.

Then he proceeds to an analysis of the "iron law of wages" which the Socialists abandoned nearly twenty years ago, and comes to practically the same conclusions as the Socialists hold today, so there is no need of our quarreling on that point. Then he takes up Marx's theory of value. He says: "These costs are valuable, not merely as representing a certain amount of labor, but as being tolerably well adapted to meet a public need. But who thought of adapting them? Who foresaw the need and was there to meet it? Who set up the machinery, improved and perfected it, bought up the raw material, got together the workmen, inspected and controlled them? All this is the doing of the capitalists, not of the hands." Hold on a minute, my friend. On the preceding page, in discussing the manufacture of these same costs, you said of these same capitalists whom you gave the names of X, Y and Z: "Y and Z are perhaps away hunting on Lake Lacarum and X has not been on the premises more than two hours a day and has never laid a finger on the costs in any stage of their manufacture." Really the Reverend should have edited his work more carefully, so as not to make these little slips. But at any rate he would have to have a very foolish lot of readers if some of them had brains enough to know that the work of buying, planning and hunting today is carried on by hired overseers, superintendents, etc., and that the capitalist plays no useful part in production.

Then another tack is taken, and we are assured that capitalists are valuable because they form our "Cabinet Ministers, clerks, authors, scientific investigators, musicians, artists, poets, the men who refine our tastes and brighten our lives." This is just plain ordinary everyday lying. The Rev. Rickaby knows perfectly well that the capitalist class very seldom does any of these things, and that for one great author, inventor, musician, etc., he can point to that has come from this class, with all the opportunity that is offered their children, a dozen can be pointed out who came from the creators of wealth; and this in spite of the terrible handicap that has rested on the latter.

The present exploiting class is the most useless known to history. This accounts for the utter lack of great figures in the fields of art, literature, music, etc., at the present time. Capitalism offers premiums only to bogs, and crushes, starves and freezes the genius and the artist.

Then he proceeds to tell us how he is going to heal the sores of Lazarus. He would have kind and paternal employers, who should establish fatherly relations with their employees, and bring back the old fatherly relations into the industrial world. Surely the priest has laid aside the robe for the cap and bells. Are there really such fools as to think that the corporation is going to disappear and the little individual shop return? But he seriously proposes (at least he gives no sign that he is joking) that seven Companies might become paternalistic by delegating to their various agents in command of their work-people, the office of a father. How would you like that, laborers? Just imagine the floor boss or the division superintendent coming around to you and running your life for you in a fatherly sort of way. That would be "Pulmanism" with a vengeance. He proceeds to scold the capitalist for not spending more money on his laborers, forgetting that he had already pointed out that if any capitalist dared to do this he would be competed out of existence. He declares that "if no capitalist is possible except money-grubbers, it is a waste of words to argue against Socialism; the Socialists

THE WINTER FESTIVAL.

Socialist Ball Rooms All Previous Records. First Regiment Armory is Crowded.

By far the largest and most successful social gathering ever held under the auspices of the Socialist Party of Chicago came to a conclusion early last Sunday morning at the First Regiment Armory Building in this city. The unanimous verdict of every one present was that it had not only far surpassed every previous similar gathering, but had gone beyond the expectations of the most sanguine and enthusiastic of those who had worked so hard to ensure its success.

At 8 p. m. on Saturday night the doors of the great building were thrown open for the entertainment. All preparations had been made beforehand to provide everything necessary for the pleasure and comfort of the assembly. A strong corps of volunteer party members were placed in charge of the different departments, which were fully manned and equipped in readiness for the occasion.

From 8 until 11 p. m. a continuous stream of pleasure-seekers poured into the building and at the latter hour there were probably three thousand people on the floor and galleries.

A magnificent band provided excellent music and the grand march was led off by between four and five hundred persons, the first floor space of the entertainment have not yet been accurately computed, there is every reason to believe that they will be fully as satisfactory as the social success of the evening.

The thanks of every member of the Socialist party is especially due to all those active comrades who rendered such indispensable service in arranging and conducting to a successful conclusion the largest and most important function of this sort ever given by the Socialist Party of Chicago.

All Branches are requested to see that all tickets for the Winter Festival that yet remain in their hands, and cash for those sold, are turned in at this office, 36 N. Clark St., as promptly as possible.

How the World "Moves."

"James Eads How, of St. Louis, philanthropist, Harvard graduate, polished man of letters, reformer and heir to a million dollars and more, has become a new boy.... Mr. How believes that he is not entitled to the money left him earned it, and that it is his duty to return it to the public in some way that by his forbears because he has not will work good." Thus the world moves in spite of the ballot-box and "class consciousness."—Fred Society.

If this is the anarchistic idea of "moving," how long would it take for the world to get somewhere on their principles and which way is it moving, and where will it get to? Great is the "beautiful (and idiotic) philosophy" of anarchy!

are right and capital stands condemned." And you showed us only ten pages back that "Suppose I act on higher principles, and retain my workmen at 45 pounds each; but my neighbor employs coolie labor; the consequence is that he can offer his goods in the market cheaper than mine." Under these circumstances the one who must charge the most for his goods simply goes out of business. Permit me to congratulate you, Rev. Rickaby, on the excellent argument you have put up for Socialism. You have demonstrated that "The Socialists are right and capital stands convicted," and by the conditions of the discussion, "So much the worse for Dives in the time that is coming on earth."

The Socialists of Chicago are so much impressed with the case that the Reverend Joseph Rickaby, S. J., has made out for Socialism against his will, that they have purchased a large quantity of these pamphlets and have them on sale at two cents each at the office of the Workers' Call. If you cannot come to the office one will be mailed to your address anywhere in the Postal Union for four cents in stamps. Get one and give it to your Catholic neighbor if his church has not already supplied him, and point out the good things in it.

A. M. SIMONE.

On Monday, December 3, B. Berlyn will speak before the Socialist Machinery Club at the Socialist Temple, 128 S. Western Avenue, 8 p. m. All Socialists are invited.

Keep your eye on your subscription number.

For Next Week's Issue.

Make sure that you secure a copy of our next issue, as it will contain much matter of unusual interest. A speech delivered by the famous lawyer Clarence S. Darrow to the prisoners in the Cook County Jail, will be one of the most striking features. This address was passed over by the capitalist press of the city, who found it too hot to handle. It was revised for the Worker's Call by Mr. Darrow himself.

Another article from a big financial magazine, openly confessing that capitalism rules the working class only by force and fraud, will also appear. It should have been published this week, but through lack of space was held over. The paper will also contain extracts from the admirable lectures of Mrs. Simons at the School of Social Economy, an article detailing the progress of the trusts, by a writer well known as a close student of this subject and many other interesting features. Call the attention of your neighbor to these facts, as we are making special efforts to put an unusual amount of interesting matter before the readers of the Worker's Call.

Saving the Guns.

The soldiers of the First Regiment Armory were so frightened when they learned that their building was to be used by the Socialists, that they took all the guns out of the racks and hid them away. These terrible Socialists might have been plotting all the time to start a revolt, and had only been waiting for a chance to get within reach of the necessary weapons. Rich-

IN MEMORIAM

Three Thousand Union Men Perform the Last Rites for Ferdinand Trapp the Murdered Machinist. Orator at the Grave. An Impressive Ceremony.

Followed by 3,000 unionists, the remains of Ferdinand Trapp murdered by a non-union employee of the Allis Chalmers Co. were laid away Sunday November 24th. At an early hour a long line of friends and sympathizers stood outside of the home of the murdered man waiting to be allowed to take a last look at their friend and comrade, and not until the time set for the funeral service did the steady flow of mourners cease to push by the door of the home.

The coffin was surrounded by floral offerings sent by the different local lodges of the International Association of Machinists and other labor organizations. Similar tokens of respect were also sent by the Knights of Pythias, and the gloom of death seemed to be dispelled by the beautiful colors and fragrance of the flowers.

At 10:30 a. m. the members of Liberty Lodge, of which the deceased had been an honored member, arrived in a body, and the men after looking on the face of their departed brother for the last time, formed outside and remained as a guard of honor until 1 p. m. when the order was given the funeral procession to march.

At 12:45 p. m. strains of military music were heard in the distance, and shortly afterwards the members of the local unions of the International Molders union appeared on the scene headed by their banner. Immediately after them came the members of the Linemen's union with faces clouded with grief, each man wearing on his arm the token of mourning. Representatives of other organizations came in carriages, and it soon became apparent that the funeral of the murdered union man would be one of the largest ever seen in Chicago.

At 1:30 p. m. when the last of the mourners had looked upon the face of the departed brother, the funeral service began. No stately pomp marked the proceedings but in a voice trembling with emotion Stuart Reid, ex-general organizer of the International Association of Machinists preached a funeral sermon that was fitting to the memory of one who had been a true union man and had sacrificed himself for the cause.

His text was a portion of the XI chapter of the Gospel of St. John, "Behold how he loved him" and the tears of many fell as the speaker told of the love of the members of the union for their departed brother. He feelingly referred to his work for the union, and said his memory would be enshrined in the hearts of union men wherever his story of devotion to the cause reached.

After the sermon, a short prayer was delivered in which the Almighty was asked to lighten the burden of the widow and the loved ones of the deceased. The Knights of Pythias then took charge and conducted the impressive funeral service of that organization.

At 1:30 p. m. preparations were made to remove the remains and as the body was being taken out of the house the strains of "Nearer My God To Thee" played by a military band, came floating in mournful tones bringing tears into the eyes of hundreds of those waiting to begin the funeral march. Thousands of people stood in the street and as the coffin appeared all heads were uncovered, although a chill miserable rain was falling. After the body, came the floral offerings which were placed in three carriages and carried behind the hearse.

Blocks away, the head of the procession began to move and soon the long line of mourners were marching with solemn mien to the strains of the "Dead March in D-flat" played by two military bands.

The rain began to fall heavily and the streets were heavy and slippery, but not a man broke line from the time the procession started from the home of the deceased until it disbanded at Madison and Rockwell streets. At the latter point the marchers formed on each side of the street and stood with bared heads until the long line of carriages, nearly one hundred in number, passed through.

When the funeral procession reached Waldheim cemetery, a heavy rain was falling and the mourners shivered in the face of a South Western wind that chilled them to the bone, but hundreds stood around the grave and listened to an oration delivered by Stuart Reid who spoke of the virtues of the departed and declared the cause he died for, as noble as the mission of the Carpenter of Nazareth itself. He said in part: "The union seeks to uplift men and secure to them a just proportion of the good things, that the creator intended should be theirs. Its fundamental principle is the doctrine of love, and though it is often maligned it will yet be victorious and prove to the world that its mission and that of the Carpenter of Nazareth are one. Brother Trapp has only passed away in the flesh, his memory still lives in the hearts of his comrades and all true union men, and although he has been cut off in the flower of his youth, shot down by a contemptible assassin his work will live and hasten the hour when justice shall prevail, and the common brotherhood of man be firmly established."

When he finished the oration, the rain was falling heavily, and he and the hundreds who stood around the grave were chilled, but when he lifted his hands and invoked the blessing of the Supreme Being for the widow and relatives of the deceased, and the cause of unionism, every head was bowed and bent, and the supplication seemed to ascend heavenward like incense wafted from the censers of the worshippers of the Gods.

Before the ceremonies at the grave were completed, the shadows began to fall, and the atmosphere grew more chilly, but not one of the mourners moved from the grave. They opened death to part from their loved one and when a few voices untrained, but with a depth of feeling in them, began to sing, "Nearer My God To Thee," hundreds of voices were lifted up and the strains of the grand old hymn woke the echoes of the city of the dead and seemed to break for a moment the gloom of the fast approaching night.

"Dust to Dust, Ashes to Ashes" was said, and the coffin of the departed was soon hidden in mother earth. The floral tributes completely covered the cold earth that covered the body of the martyr, and the mourners after gazing on his last resting place for a few minutes slowly turned away and left the cemetery.

A Peep Behind the Scenes.

Inside History Leading up to the Attempt to form a New Labor Party in Chicago. Harrison, Brought to Time by the Capitalists, Does no Longer Give Political Offices to "Labor Leaders". Disintegration of the Democratic Party Makes Birth of a New Party Necessary. Well known Labor Skates Take the Initiative. Star Chamber Methods Adopted. Growth of Socialism in the Union a Menace to schemes of "Political Scabs". Capitalist Politics in Trades Unions Now an Object of Suspicion.

Things are developing rapidly in the new "Union Labor Party" in Chicago. Every day that passes makes it more evident that it is simply another decoy duck to entice the laborers within reach of the capitalist hunter. This party would never have appeared had it not been for a series of happenings in local politics.

Five years ago Carter Harrison went into power as the "friend of union labor." He received the endorsement of a large number of trade unions, and he paid his political debts by giving City Hall jobs to the "labor leaders" that had engineered the deal. He even went further and pretended to be upon the side of the unions in times of strikes, and occasionally permitted the police to be conveniently blind when "scabs" were being "persuaded" to be men instead of curs. But the building trades lock-out came on and the building trades capitalists forced Harrison to show whose dog he really was. He fired the stool pigeons from the jobs he had given them as the price of their treachery; sent the galling gun in front of the headquarters of the Building Trades Council, and instructed his police to see to it that "rights of property were preserved," no matter how many rights of men were violated.

Nevertheless, the laborers rallied to his support and elected him for the third time, thus declaring that they liked the dose he had given them. But the capitalists were watching him too close this time to enable him to reward the "political scabs" that had once more betrayed their fellow workers. So there arose a large crowd of sore heads around labor headquarters. Still they did not dare to openly break with the Harrison machine lest they lose the last chance to sell their "influence" and betray the laborers of Chicago.

Then came the grand smash-up in the Democratic machine. As this piece of mechanism flew into a multitude of fragments, with Harrison, Burke, Gabe, Carey and a half-dozen others each securing a wheel or at least a cog, it became evident to these professional labor politicians that there was henceforth "nothing in it" for them. Then it was that we began to hear of a "Union Labor Party."

Meanwhile the union workmen of Chicago were being made to realize as never before the tyranny of capitalism and the crushing weight of class government. Injunctions, police abuses, and lock-outs followed fast upon each other's heels. One judge made it a criminal offense to even ask a traitor to labor to brace up and be a man. Another said that henceforth it should be a crime for one body of workers to tell another that any master was especially oppressive to his wage-slaves. Union workmen were forbidden to picket or to wear against unfair shops. Under these conditions it is any wonder that the union laborers of Chicago declared that it was time that they returned to the counsel of the Socialist and carried their battles into the political arena?

In this troubled water certain men saw an opportunity for rich fishing. The gang of political beetles that had infested the unions for years, and that were now left stranded by the wreck of the Democratic ship, saw a chance to once more "enter politics." So it was announced that a "Labor Party" would be formed.

But in every union there were a number of men who knew that there was already a "Labor Party" in the field, definitely committed to the interests of the workers, with a clear cut program elaborated after years of study and experience in this and other countries.

These men began to ask why when such a party existed, it was necessary to form another. The idea quickly grew and soon became a demand, that the unions should, instead of starting a new party with untried principles and no political machinery, endorse the party which was already in the field and about whose position concerning the laborers there could be no doubt.

This by no means suited the would-be leaders of the new party. Hence they made haste to announce that no one who was connected with any existing political party and especially with the Socialist Party, would be permitted to have anything to do with the formation of the new party. But a glance at the list of names of those who are supposed to be assisting at the birth of what promises to be a still-born political child, reveals the fact that practically every one of them has been actively engaged in either Democratic or Republican politics within the last few years. As was pointed out in our issue for last week, some of them are already counting on being endorsed or even nominated by one of the old parties for the offices which they expect to get out of this business.

It thus seems that the only kind of politics that is to be barred from this new party is LABOR POLITICS. Any man who has dared to say that he stands for the laborers and the laborers alone; who has been bold enough to announce that the men who create the wealth of the world should own it, is to be disbarred from all connection with this Labor (?) Party.

Frightened out of their wits at the prospect of an exposure by those who really stand for the rights and ALL the rights of labor, these "political scabs" who were seeking to sell themselves and their fellows for a mass of political pottage, rush into print to endeavor to bar out from all connection with their schemes those whom they know would expose their weakness and treachery. Not daring to trust the rank and file of the union men, they begin their work with "star chamber" sessions at the Sherman House where none but the "leaders" are to be admitted. They realize full well that the great mass of union men if actually permitted to meet and discuss the question, have intelligence enough to detect the false character of a "Labor Party" that proposes to leave the boss undisturbed. The only hope the new party has for any existence whatever, lies in the fact that everything will be all cut and dried before the laborers are allowed to have any say in the matter. It is the intention of these would-be bosses to have everything all fixed up ready for the so called public meeting which is announced to take place at 33 Franklin street Sunday afternoon. We may be sure that if any man at that meeting dares to have an idea opposed to the scheme which the clique of the Sherman House have decided upon, he will not be allowed to speak or in any way to voice his opinions.

This, then, is the beginning of the new party. Conceived in the wrangles and disputes of a disintegrating Democracy; it is to be born from the hands of a gang of disappointed office-seekers. Professing to espouse the cause of labor, its inner councils are to be thrown open to all ears those whose loyalty to the cause of labor in the political field is certain. Unless the laborers of Chicago are more easily duped than we think, there will be a rude awakening for some aspiring office holders and political scabs when this disgusting political monstrosity is brought to the public gaze next Sunday afternoon.

Resolution on Socialism and Trade Unionism.

Adopted at the Independent Convention July 1901.

The Socialist Party in convention assembled, declares: The trade union movement and independent political action are the chief emancipating factors of the wage-working class. The trade union movement is the natural result of capitalist production, and represents the economic side of the working-class movement. We consider it the duty of Socialists to join the union of their respective trades and assist in building up and uniting the trades and labor organizations. We recognize that trade unions are by historical necessity organized on national grounds, as far as political affiliation is concerned.

We call the attention of trade unions to the fact that the class struggle is nobly waged by the trade union (three today, while it may result in lessening the exploitation of labor, can never abolish that exploitation. The exploitation of labor will only come to an end when society takes possession of all the means of production for the benefit of all the people. It is the duty of every trade unionist to realize the necessity of independent political action as a Socialist force, to join the Socialist Party and assist in building up a strong political movement of the wage-working class, whose ultimate aim and object must be the abolition of wage-slavery and the establishment of a co-operative state of society based on the collective ownership of all the means of production and distribution.

Independent political action on the part of the working class is possible only through Socialism.

Capitalist politics are always the same whether a banker or a working man is elected or the thief.

PROOFS OF DISCRIMINATION

New Big Capitalist Publications Violate Second Class Mail Rules With Impunity.

One of the newly promulgated rules of the Post Office department concerning second class mail, is that no paper which is offered for a nominal subscription price shall be admitted to the mails. But all the Chicago dailies carried an advertisement last Sunday offering "The Winner," a sloppy sort of mail order paper, for one year for ten cents, which would be less than the cost of the blank paper contained in it.

The labor state who is now filling the place of Third Assistant Postmaster-General, has specifically stated that if any publication advertising any premium in connection with its subscription, the price of which was stated in the advertisement to be equal to the subscription, would be barred from the second-class mails. The following is a verbatim quotation from the conclusion of a full-page advertisement in the December number of the "World's Work": "The regular price of the 'Review of Reviews' is $2.50, the publishers' price of the 'Little Masterpieces' in the cheapest binding is $6.00. We offer both the magazine and the 'Masterpieces,' the latter in the handsome red cloth binding, for 50 cents down and 50 cents a month for twelve months—or a check for $5.00 closes the transaction." There are three pages of such announcements but they all seem to have escaped the vigilant eye of Madden.

less than the combined price of the other publications, would suffice to bar the publication from being offered for the mails. But we find "Education," a periodical with a $2.00 a year subscription price, advertising this month to give the "Review of Reviews," "Business" and "North American Review," whose combined subscription price is $3.50, for $2.00, and throw in one year's subscription to its own publication for nothing.

One of the things which the Post Office makes the biggest fuss about is the rule that no publication PRINTING (not mailing) more than twice as many copies as it has subscribers shall be admitted to second-class entry. But the Chicago Bureau of Charles publishes a little leaflet each week, which consists of little more than a directory of the charities of Chicago, and a little reading matter on charitable subjects. According to the report of the Bureau, they had received less than $200 on subscriptions at one dollar per year. They have something near three thousand contributors to their fund and it is safe to say that practically every one of them was mailed a copy. Not only was this true, but the report itself was issued as a supplement to this little leaflet, and was thus permitted to take place in a free delivery city where only weeklies are admitted to the second-class pound rate, and this supplement is only issued once a year.

"The Challenge" was recruited because it "advertised William's ideas" too much. But I have before me at the WOMEN'S WAGES.

Appeals of Ethical Culture Advances Some Peculiar Theories on This Subject.

"Why do women get lower wages than men?" is the question discussed by M. Mangasarian, the lecturer of the Chicago Ethical Society in last Sunday's Tribune. There are a lot of reasons for this phenomena given, which would certainly never occur to any one not well posted in ethical culture. Here are several which M. Mangasarian puts forward. The first is given as follows: "In the world of outdoor labor women are comparatively speaking still a novelty, having but recently joined the ranks of the bread winners. For this reason she has yet to acquire the skill and to accumulate the experience which have been centuries of struggle."

The fact that the skill and experience of a woman has depended only through one sex, is, to say the least, original. One might also ask why outdoor labor is considered inferior to the question of woman wage-workers, when it is a notorious fact that the vast majority are engaged in indoor occupations, and that in these occupations they have displaced men in spite of their centuries of experience. The fact that production by machinery eliminates skill and thus makes the woman fully equal to the man as a producer, seems to be utterly unknown to M. Mangasarian. Then follow several other reasons such as the assertion that women do not take pains to learn a trade thoroughly; that they look upon their occupation as tem-

How the Game is Worked.

Editorial in the "Banker's Magazine" for October, Makes Open Confession of the Methods by Which Capitalism Subjugates the Minds of the Workingclass and Insures the Continuance of Exploitation. Now the "Willing Co-operation" of the Laborer is Secured. Obsolete Methods such as Loyalty, Patriotism, Religion, etc., are Discarded. Admission that in Modern Times Men can be Enslaved Only by Capital. Now the "Constitution" is Side Tracked. Article Intended Only for Capitalist Readers Gives the Whole Snap Away.

Consolidation and concentration of the forces of production and manufacture is the prominent feature of modern business operations. It is not necessary to enumerate the several lines of business and of labor which are now dominated by this principle. To accomplish great results, whether to conquer neighboring nations or to build pyramids, or to produce great quantities of oil or steel, to build railroads or dig canals, it is necessary to organize humanity by the DIRECT or INDIRECT application of FORCE. The original and crude method of organization was by the application of force to the bodies of men. The more MODERN and INGENUOUS method involves force applied to their MINDS. Under the rulers of Egypt and Assyria hordes of men were driven to work with sullen and unwilling minds. Nevertheless, the necessity of satisfying the mind while securing the service of the body was early recognized, and motives of CASTE and RELIGION, and so-called LOYALTY, helped to furnish SATISFACTION with a man's lot in life, however hard and subservient it might be.

For centuries the mass of humanity has struggled to free itself from the visible chains of outward force and the more subtle influences which restrained and deadened their thoughts and feelings. Slavery, the admitted right of some men to dominate and control others, has been discredited and discarded by civilized nations. The equality of men in certain radical rights is generally admitted. Nevertheless, the natural instinct of the race to conquer and bend to their uses the resources of the planet they dwell on grows stronger as the centuries pass. One achievement invites to greater and more ambitious efforts. The necessity of united effort grows more and more pressing. Modern times, therefore, but lead the race in their efforts to secure their following by methods entirely different from those of the ages past. In the old days, loyalty to leaders because of supposed divine rights, have been so much weakened that they cannot be invoked to produce great results.

The welfare of the individual is the keynote of modern organization, whether for government or for business. In the United States the idea that the individual has the inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, is perhaps more fully accepted in CONSTITUTIONS, LAWS and CUSTOMS than among other nations. Nevertheless, in no country are men more fully organized and CONTROLLED for conducting industrial undertakings than in the United States. This result has been accomplished by INFLUENCES which CONTROL the MINDS of men, and in consequence their BODIES. The chief of these is the desire for property.

During the early part of the last century in the United States the democratic ideas of Jefferson dominated and flourished. Individual effort accomplished much, because there was room enough to give each individual a wide orbit; but the results of these ideas in business were not very conspicuous. The country grew because of immigration and the natural increase of population, but government was weak, business was conducted in a sporadic and disorganized fashion; there was no general system. Every man did what was GOOD in his OWN eyes; it was a formative period, chaotic, abounding in business explosions, crises, panics, and general tendency to disintegration.

The Civil War was the epoch which opened the eyes of men to the possibilities of organization, by means of capital. Never before had the possible resources of the country been realized even by the most advanced minds. The POWER of money was, by the great expenditures of the government, shown to MASSES of citizens. The construction of railroads necessary to overcome the expanses of territory, gave a further impulse to the sciences of organizing human effort. Other enterprises requiring great organizations of men have followed. The problem, however, has been to effect this organization to secure the co-operation of the NECESSARY HUMAN FORCE without coming in conflict with the freedom of the individual as ENUNCIATED in the CONSTITUTION.

The MODERN leaders of men CAN NOT ENSLAVE THE MASSES BY DIRECT FORCE as the Pharaohs did. They cannot enslave them by rules of CASTE, or of LOYALTY, or RELIGION, as was done in later centuries. Their method of enslaving men is to organize them, and this was done by what political economists characterized as CAPITAL. What capital consists of, it is not very easy to define. It includes money and all kinds of resources that can be directly turned into money, and many that cannot. Generally it is a power that enables SOME men to secure willing co-operation of OTHER men.

As the ideas of industrial development have expanded, the necessity of larger capital has been met, and it has been secured by combinations and consolidations, until the command of property and money, and through them of willing (!!) labor is practically unlimited.—Banker's Magazine, Oct. 1901.

remarks of M. Mangasarian, if the slings be pardoned. If ethical culture is responsible for such economic phantasies as the above, there may be some truth in the oft-repeated assertion that genius and insanity are closely allied.

THE NEW SOCIALIST TEMPLE

General Outline of the Proposed Building With Financial Considerations and Cost of Maintenance.

While no formal action has yet been taken by the Executive Committee in charge of the Temple building project, a general agreement has been reached as to the main features of the new building. It is planned to have an auditorium that with the galleries will seat 1,000 people. This will be in the rear of a building about 50x125 feet, while the front of the building will be used for stores of the Co-operative, for committee rooms, etc. The size of the whole building will probably be 50x125 feet, though these figures may be modified when the site is finally selected. Several acceptable offers have been made and we urge the comrades to be prompt with their contributions in order that the right site may be secured without delay. If you have any money to put where it will count for socialism, here is the place!

How much is needed? It is impossible as yet to give exact figures, but just for a starter I will give my own guess, which must not be taken as an official statement by the committee. I believe we can get a suitable building site for about $1,000. The cost of putting up such a building as we shall need would probably be $15,000 if everything had to be paid for, but the large amount of labor that will be contributed will probably reduce the cash outlay to something like $1,500 making the building cost us $13,500, while its value will be at least $25,000. Thus I believe it safe to say that we can borrow $10,000 on the security of the land and building. The interest on this would be $500. Half of this can be raised by renting space on the second floor. I should be glad to pledge this amount on behalf of our publishing company, provided such an arrangement would be acceptable to the comrades.

The other half would easily be met out of the profits of the Co-operative. It is properly supported. The principal should easily be paid off inside five years by membership fees of those desiring to join the Co-operative.

The cost of keeping up the building, including the heating and lighting, could easily be paid by the ordinary collections at meetings, just as the cost of the old Temple is paid now.

So the question is reduced to the raising of the first $1,000. We can't count on large contributions. There may be a few of them and they will be a welcome help. But the greater part of the money must be raised from small contributions.

There are about 3,000 socialist workers in Chicago. Of these at least half are where they can reach the Temple by paying a five cent fare, and at least 1,000 are within easy and convenient reach of it.

If these 1,000 would join the Co-operative at once and pay in $2.00 each the problem would be solved and we could take up something else. But not to understand their own best interests, yet, so those who do understand must do more.

I have been appointed financial secretary of the building committee and on behalf of the committee I want to ask the comrades to act quickly and save time. Every party member can at least subscribe for a $1.00 membership in the Co-operative. If possible, send in the $2.00 at once. If not, send what you can and say when we may look for the rest.

If you are getting better pay than the average, put your name down for membership and also for a contribution of $1.00, $2.00 or $5.00 a month for five months. Be prompt and we can have the building ready next summer.

There is one way you can help that costs you nothing. Buy the things you need from the Co-operative; don't spend the money with the bourgeois, large or small, when you can put it where it will help your own cause.

Call at the Socialist Temple, 107 Western avenue, any Sunday, Wednesday or Thursday evening, and see what we are doing.

CHARLES H. HARRIS.

THE TWO INVITATIONS.

The superintendent of the second-class division at Chicago told me that if the Workers' Call took any subscription for less than three months it would be thrown from second-class entry. He assured me that there was no possible exception to this rule. But this same issue of the "World's Work" has a half-page advertisement of "Public Opinion" offering that publication for ten weeks for ten cents. No nominal subscription price about that either. Another of Madden's rules provides that no publication must contain a disproportionate amount of advertising of anything sold by the publishers. This has been interpreted in some cases to mean not more than four pages of the same issue of a magazine. But this same "World's Work" contains nineteen pages of Doubleday, Page & Co.'s advertisements, who are the owners and publishers of "World's Work." But this publication has already gained the name of being the ablest exponent of capitalism in America, and need not fear any interference by the present Post Office.

The "Back Buyer," a "house organ" of Scribner's Sons, which violates a half dozen post office rules in every issue, contains eighteen pages of advertising of books published by the publishers of the periodical, and also advertisements of "The Independent," "Eight Weeks for 25 cents," and the "Dial" four weeks for ten cents, the latter, by the way, being the exact terms of the offer made by the Workers' Call that promptly brought a notice of suspension of entry. This, too, was over a year ago, when the rules were supposed to be much less stringently enforced than at present.

An examination of the advertising pages of one other magazine, reveals an offer by Harper Brothers to throw in a subscription to either the "Weekly," the "Magazine" or "Banner," to every buyer of a set of their books. In another of his pronouncements, the Cur of the Second Class division specifically declared that any clubbing offer in which it appeared that the publication making the offer was given for present moment a sample of a publication of which there are hundreds in this country. It is a four-page circular, printed on a hand press by a child and is filled with the acts of the child's playmates and their pets, items concerning cats and dogs who have been slain or injured, etc., in short the babble of a child at play. But the United States government took this babble seriously enough to grant a second-class entry to this child's play thing.

Do not let this be misunderstood. We are not knocking in order to get some one else excluded, but are simply calling attention to the fact that the new rulings about which so much fuss has been made are only strictly applied when Socialist papers are in question. Here would be a good point for the State Socialist to explain about these being no class struggle.

A. M. JIMONS.

He had Barrels of it.

In Cincinnati a prominent minister, investigating the strike of the machinists, started to give a strike in the presence of Attorneys Eugene Polkey and W. H. Ganley.

"How much did you get, my good man?"

"Two dollars a day."

"Two dollars a day? Why, that is good wages. What did you do with it?"

"I'll tell you, but don't let it get out," said the strike, sarcastically. "After I paid taxes, assessments, living expenses for a family of six, I placed the balance in a four barrel, and when it was full I heeded it up and began on another barrel. My cellar is full of barrels of money."—Exchange.

It is an undoubted fact that the world is becoming more humane. About five weeks ago a baby died of starvation in its mother's arms in a justice court. Last week a Waukegan family took a sick pet team out to Florida in order to restore its health, and the animal cancelled all the way in a Pullman sleeper.

porary only until something better turns up, the something better in this case being marriage. Then women are too nervous. They cannot stand the strain of competition with men. They are over-anxious for results; they are not patient enough; they are not compelled to go to work; they don't save their wages, etc., etc.; all of which may be accepted or not as the reader sees fit, but why these things should be considered as a reason for low wages is certainly difficult to see. In conclusion he gives another cause for this state of affairs which one would suppose renders the others superfluous. It is as follows:

Notwithstanding that women are less easily satisfied than the men, still they are satisfied with less. Of this desire of woman to accept almost anything as a price for her labor employers have taken an undue advantage.

Endowed with less and less easily satisfied. We leave the reader to wrestle with this mysterious assertion as best he may. But about the last sentence there is no doubt. Women get low wages because they desire them. It is a matter of freedom of contract. It never seems to strike M. Mangasarian that the cost of production of a wage-earning woman is rather less than that of a man, and that this fact might have something to do with the matter. Perhaps the conception is not an ethical one, but it might be worth consideration.

Like all of his ilk, M. Mangasarian takes a peep into the future of women as wage-earners, and this is what he sees:

We are of the opinion, however, that it will not be long before women will become thoroughly acclimated to the world of outdoor work and not only command higher wages for themselves but also by their presence make the struggle for existence a little less fierce.

There will be more competition, yet the struggle for existence is to become less fierce, and women will command higher wages. The desire to accept anything as a price for her labor will disappear just as soon as she takes outdoor work. Surely the struggle for existence never was so fierce as these

Or shall we follow the example of the labor organizations of San Francisco and Bridgeport which recently elected union members into the mayoral chair of their cities, only to find that the incumbents immediately assumed the enforcement of labor that they intended to do nothing inimical to the interests of capitalism—or in other words that their election had not even a tendency to change in the slightest degree the relative positions of the working and capitalist classes?

They understand the nature of the conflict thoroughly, and as fully as they can will seek to prevent you from understanding it, knowing that when you do, you will of necessity utilize the Socialist movement. Crime; its Cause and Cure.

An Address by Clarence S. Darrow to the Prisoners in the County Jail.

"I looked at fate and crime and prisoners in the way the ordinary person does. I should not speak on this subject to you. The reason I talk to you on the question of crime, its cause and cure, is because I really do not believe in no such thing as a crime as the word is generally understood. I do not believe there is any sort of distinction between the real moral condition of the people in and out of jail. I think that one is just as good as the other. I think that the people here can no more help being here than the people outside can avoid being outside. I do not believe that any one is in jail because he deserves to be. They are in jail simply because they cannot avoid it on account of circumstances which are entirely beyond their control and for which they are in no way responsible.

I suppose a great many people on the outside would say I was doing you harm if they should hear what I say to you this afternoon, but you cannot be hurt a great deal anyway, so it will not matter. Good people outside would say that I was really teaching you things that were calculated to injure society, but it's worth while once in a while to hear something different from what you ordinarily get from preachers and the like. These will tell you that you should be good and then you will get rich and be happy. Of course we know that people do not get rich by being good, and that is the reason why so many of you people try to get rich some other way, only you do not understand how to do it quite so well as the fellow

There are people who think that everything is an accident in this world. I really think there is no such thing as an accident. A great many folks admit that many of the people in jail ought not to be there, and many who are outside ought to be in. I think none of them ought to be here. There ought to be no jails and if there were not for the fact that the people on the outside are so grasping and heartless in their dealings with the people on the inside, there would be no such institutions as jails.

I do not want you to believe that I think all you people here are angels. I do not think that. You are people of all kinds, all of you doing the best you can, and that is evidently not very well—you are people of all kinds and conditions and under all circumstances. In one sense everybody is equally good and equally bad. We all do the best we can under the circumstances. But as to the exact things for which you are sent here, some of you are guilty and some of you are not guilty. Some of you did the particular act because you needed the money. Some of you did it because you are in the habit of doing it, and some of you because you are born to it, and it comes to be as natural as it does, for instance, for me to be good.

Most of you probably have nothing against me, and most of you would treat me the same as any other person would: probably better than most of the people on the outside would treat me, because you think I believe in you and they know I do not believe in them. While you would not have the least thing against me in the world you might pick my pockets. I do not think all of you would, but I think some of you would. You would not have anything against me, but that's your profession, a few of you. Some of the rest of you, if my door were unlocked, might come in if you saw anything you wanted, not out of any malice to me, but because that is your trade. There is no doubt there are quite a number of people in this jail who would pick my pockets. And still I know that when I get outside pretty nearly everybody picks my pockets. There may be some of you who would hold up a man on the street, if you did not happen to have something else to do, and needed the money; but when I want to light my house or my office the gas company holds me up. They charge me one dollar for something that is worth twenty-five cents, and still all these people are good people; they are pillars of society and support the churches, and they are respectable.

When I ride on the street cars I am held up—I pay five cents for a ride that is worth two and a half cents, simply because a body of men have bribed the city council and the legislature, so that all the rest of us have to pay tribute to them.

If I do not want to fall into the clutches of the gas trust and choose to burn oil instead of gas, then good Mr. Rockefeller holds me up, and he uses a certain portion of his money to build universities and support churches which are supported in talking us how to be good.

Some of you are here for obtaining property under false pretenses—not I pick up a great Sunday paper and read the advertisements of a merchant prince—'Shirt waits for No. 30, washed down from $5.00'.

When I read the advertisements in the paper I see they are all lies. When I want to get out and find a place to stand anywhere on the face of the earth, I find that it has all been taken up long ago before I came here, and before you came here, and somebody says, 'Get off, move into the lake, by the lake, go anywhere, but get off'.

Some fellow who reaches into my pocket and takes out a five dollar bill; the fact that the gas company bribes the members of the legislature from year to year, and fixes the law, so that all you people are compelled to be "forced" whenever you deal with them; the fact that the street car companies and the gas companies have control of the streets and the fact that the landlords own all the earth, they say, has nothing to do with you.

Let us see whether there is any connection between the crimes of the respectable classes and your presence in the jail. Many of you people are in jail because you have really committed burglary. Many of you because you have stolen something; in the meaning of the law, you have taken some other person's property. Some of you have entered a store and carried off a pair of shoes because you did not have the price. Possibly some of you have committed murder. I cannot tell what all of you did. There are a great many people here who have done some of these things who really do not know themselves why they did them. I think I know why you did them—every one of you; you did these things because you were bound to do them. It looked to you at the time as if you had a chance to do them, or not as you saw fit, but still after all you had no choice. There may be people here who had some money in their pockets and was still went out and got some more money in a way society forbids. Now you may not yourselves see exactly why it was you did this thing, but if you look at the question deeply enough and carefully enough you would see that there were circumstances that drove you to do exactly the thing which you did. You could not help it any more than we outside can help taking the positions that we take. The reformers who tell you to be good and you will be happy, and the people on the outside who have property to protect—they think that the only way to do it is by building jails and locking you up in cells six weeks and paying for you on Sundays.

I think that all of this has nothing whatever to do with right conduct. I think it is very easily seen what has to do with right conduct. Some so-called criminals—and I will use this word because it is handy. It means nothing to me—I speak of the criminals who get caught as distinguished from the criminals who catch them—some of these so-called criminals are in jail for the first offense, but nine-tenths of you are in jail because you did not have a good lawyer and of course you did not have enough money to pay a good lawyer. There is no very great danger of a rich man going to jail.

Some of you may be here for the first time. If we would open the doors and let you out, and leave the laws as they are today, some of you would be back tomorrow. This is about as good a place as you can get anyway. There are many people here who are in the habit of coming that they would not know where else to go. There are people who are born with the tendency to break into jail every chance they get, and they cannot avoid it. You cannot figure out your life and see why it was but still there is a reason for it, and if we were all wise and knew all the facts we could figure it out.

In the first place there are a good many more people who go to jail in the winter time than in the summer. Why is this? Is it because people are more wicked in winter? No, it is because the coal trust begins to get in its grip in the winter. A few gentlemen take possession of the coal and unless the people will pay $7 or $8 a ton for something that is worth $2, they will have to freeze. Then there is nothing to do but to break into jail, and so there are many more in the jail in winter than in summer. It costs more for gas in the winter because the nights are longer, and people go to jail to save gas bills. The jails are electric lighted. You may not know it, but these electric laws are working all the time, whether we know it or do not know it.

There are more people who go to jail in hard times than in good times—few people comparatively go to jail except when they are hard up. They go to jail because they have no other place to go. They may not know why, but it is true all the same. People are not more wicked in hard times. That is not the reason. The fact is true all over the world that in hard times more people go to jail than in good times, and in winter more people go to jail than in summer. Of course it is pretty hard times for people who go to jail at any time. The people who go to jail are almost always poor people—people who have no other place to live and just have to go to jail. When times are hard then you find large numbers of people who go to jail who would not otherwise be in jail.

Long ago Mr. Buckle, who was a great philosopher and historian, collected facts and he showed that the number of people who are arrested increased just as the price of food increased. When they put up the price of gas ten cents a thousand I do not know what will go to jail, but I do know that a certain number of people will go. When the meat combines raise the price of beef I do not know who is going to jail, but I know that a large number of people are bound to go. Whenever the Standard Oil Company raises the price of oil, I know that a certain number of girls who are transgressors and who work after night long hours for somebody else, will be compelled to go to the streets and ply another trade.

A great many people will tell you that all this is true, but that it does not excuse you. These facts do not excuse and I know that Mr. Rockefeller and his associates are responsible and not the poor girls in the jails.

First and last, people are sent to jail because they are poor. Sometimes I say you may not need money at the particular time, but you wish to have thrifty forehand habits, and do not always wait until you are in absolute want. Some of you people are perhaps playing the trade, the profession, which is called burglary. No man in his right senses will go into a strange house in the dead of night and prow around with a dark lantern through unfurnished rooms and take chances of his life. If he has plenty of the good things of the world in his own home. You would not take any such chances as that. If a man had clothes in his clothes press and beef steak in his pantry, and money in a bank, he would not navigate around nights in houses where he knows nothing about the premises whatever. It always requires experience and people who fit themselves for it are no more to blame than I am for being a lawyer. A man would not hold up a man on the street if he had plenty of money in his own pocket. He might do it if he had one dollar or two dollars, but he wouldn't if he had as much money as Mr. Rockefeller has. Mr. Rockefeller has a great deal better hold up game than that.

The more that is taken from the poor by the rich who have the chance to take it, the more poor people there are who are compelled to resort to these means for a livelihood. They may not understand it, they may not think so at once, but after all they are driven into that line of employment.

There is a bill before the legislature of this state to punish kidnapping children with death. We have a law member of the legislature. They know the gas trust when they see it and they always see it—they can furnish light enough to be seen, and this legislature thinks it is going to stop kidnapping children by making a law punishing kidnappers of children with death. I don't believe in kidnapping children, but the legislature is all wrong. Kidnapping children is not a crime, it is a profession. It has been developed with the times. It has been developed with our modern industrial conditions. There are many ways of making money—many ways that our ancestors knew nothing about. Our ancestors knew nothing about a billion dollar trust; and here comes some poor fellow who has no other trade and he discovers the profession of kidnapping children.

This crime is born, not because people are bad, people don't kidnap other people's children because they want the children or because they are devilish, but because they see a chance to get some money out of it. You cannot cure this crime by passing a law punishing by death kidnappers of children. There is one way to cure it. There is one way to cure all these offenses, and that is to give the people a chance to live. There is no other way, and there never was any other way since the world began, and the world is so blind and so stupid that it will not see. If every man and woman and child in the world had a chance to make a decent, fair, honest living, there would be no jails, no lawyers, and no courts. There might be some person here or there with some peculiar formation of their brain, like Rockefeller, who would do these things simply for the doing them; but they would be very, very few, and those should be sent to a hospital and treated, not sent to jail; and they would entirely disappear in the second generation, or at least in the third generation.

I am not talking pure theory. I will just give you two or three illustrations. The English people once punished criminals by sending them away. They would load them on a ship and export them to Australia. England was owned by large and nobles and rich people. They owned the whole earth over there, and the other people had to stay in the streets. They could not get a decent living. They had to take their criminals and send them to Australia—I mean the class of criminals who got caught. When these criminals got over there, and nobody else had come, they had the whole continent to run over, and so they could raise sheep and furnish their own meat, which is easier than stealing it; they became decent, respectable people where they had a chance to live. They did not commit any crimes. They were just like the English people who sent them there, only better. And in the second generation the descendants of these criminals were as good and respectable a class of people as there were on the face of the earth, and then they began building churches and jails themselves.

Part of our country was settled in the same way, landing prisoners down on the southern coast; but when they got here and had a whole continent to run over and plenty of chances to make a living, they became respectable citizens, making their own living just like any other citizen in the world; but finally these descendants of the English aristocracy, who sent the people over to Australia, found out they were getting rich, and so they went over to get possession of the earth as they always do, and they began sending their criminals to Australia, and they had just as many criminals in Australia as they did in England. It was not because the world had grown bad; it was because the earth had been taken away from the people.

Some of you people have lived in the country. It's prettier than it is in here. And if you have ever lived on a farm, you understand that if you put a lot of cattle in a field, when the pasture is short they will jump over the fence; but put them in a good field where there is plenty of pasture, and they will be law abiding cattle to the end of time. The human animal is just like the rest of the animals, only a little more so. The same thing that governs in the one governs in the other. Everybody makes his living along the line of least resistance. A wise man who comes into a country early sees a great undeveloped land. For instance, our rich men twenty-five years ago saw that Chicago was small and knew a lot of people would come here and settle, and they readily saw that if they had all the land around here it would be worth a good deal, so they sold the land. You cannot be a landlord because somebody has got it all. You must find some other calling. In England and Ireland and Scotland less than five per cent own all the land there is, and the people are bound to stay there on any kind of terms the landlords give. They must live the best they can, so they develop all these various professions: burglary, picking pockets and the like. Again people find all sorts of ways of getting rich. These are diseases like everything else. You look at people getting rich, organizing trusts, and making a million dollars, and somebody gets the disease and he starts out. He catches it just as a man catches the quins or the measles; he is not to blame, it is in the air. You will find men speculating beyond their means, because the nights of money getting is taking possession of them. It is simply a disease; nothing more, nothing less. You cannot avoid catching it; but the fellows who have control of the earth have the advantage of you. See what the law is, when these men get control of things, they make the laws. They do not make the laws to protect anybody; courts are not instruments of justice; when your case gets into court it will make little difference whether you are guilty or innocent; but it's better if you have a smart lawyer, and you cannot have a smart lawyer unless you have money. First and last it's a question of money. These men who own the earth make the laws to protect what they have. They fix up a sort of fence or pen around what they have, and they fix the law so the fellow on the outside cannot get in. The laws are really organized for the protection of the men who rule the world. They are not made to do justice. They were never organized or enforced to do justice. We have no measure for doing justice; not the slightest in the world.

Let us illustrate. Take the poorest person in this room. If the community had provided a system of doing justice the poorest person in this room would have as good a lawyer as the richest, would he not? When you went into court you would have just as good a trial, and just as fair a trial as the richest person in Chicago. Your case would not be tried in fifteen or twenty minutes, whereas it would take fifteen days to get through with a rich man's case.

Then if you were rich and were beaten, your case would be taken to the appellate court. A poor man cannot take his case to the appellate court; he has not the price, and then to the supreme court, and if he were beaten there he might go to the United States Supreme Court. And he might die of old age before he got into jail. If you are poor, it's a quick job. You are almost known to be guilty, else you would not be in the criminal court if he were not guilty? He would not be there if he could be anywhere else. The officials have no time to look after all these cases. The people who are on the outside, who are running banks and building churches and making mills, they have no time to examine 600 or 700 prisoners each year to see whether they are guilty or innocent. If the courts were organized to promote justice the people would elect somebody to defend all these criminals, and give him as many detectives and as many assistants to help, and pay as much money to defend you, as to prosecute you. We have a very able man for state's attorney, and he has many assistants, detectives and policemen without end, and judges to hear the cases—everything handy.

Most all of our criminal code consists in offences against property. People are sent to jail because they have committed a crime against property. It is of very little consequence whether one hundred people more or less go to jail who ought not to go—you must protect your property, because in this world property is of more importance than anything else.

How is it done? These people who have property fix it so they can protect what they have. When somebody commits a crime it does not follow that he has done something that is morally wrong. The man on the outside who has committed a crime may have done something for instance, to take all the coal in the United States which is owned by one concern, and when the price two dollars or three dollars when there is no need of it, which will kill thousands of babies and send thousands of people to the poor house and tens of thousands to jail, as I have done every year in the United States, this is a greater crime than all the people in our jails ever committed, but the law does not punish it. Why? Because the fellows who control the earth make the laws. If you and I had the making of the laws, the first thing we would do would be to punish the fellow who gets control of the earth. Nature put this coal in the ground just as much for me as it did for anyone, and nature made the prairies up here to raise wheat for me as well as for them; and I have the great railroad companies, cars, along and fenced it up. Most all of the crimes for which we are punished are property crimes. There are a few personal crimes, like murder—but they are very few. The crimes committed are mostly those against property. If this is true the criminals must have a lot of property. How much money is there in this crowd? And yet you are all here for crimes against property. But these people up and down the Lake Shore, they have not committed crimes. They have so much property they don't know what to do with it. It is perfectly plain why these people have not committed crimes against property, they make the laws and therefore do not need to break them. And in order for you to get some property you are obliged to break the rules of the game. I don't know but what some of you may have a very nice chance to get rich by carrying the bed for one dollar a day, twelve hours, and instead of taking that nice easy profession, you are a burglar. If you had a chance to be a banker you would rather follow that. Some of you may have a chance to work as a switchman on a railroad where you know according to statistics that you cannot live and keep all your limbs more than seven years, and you can get fifty dollars or seventy-five dollars a month for taking your lives in your hands, and instead of taking that lucrative position you choose to be a sneak thief, or something like that. Some of you made that sort of choice. I don't know which I would take if I was reduced to this choice. I had an easier choice.

I will guarantee to take from this jail, or any jail in the world, five hundred men who have been the worst criminals and law breakers who ever got into jail, and I will go down to the lowest streets and take 500 of the most abandoned prostitutes, and go out somewhere where there is plenty of land, and will give them a chance to make a living, and they will be as good people as any on the face of the earth. There is a remedy for the sort of condition we are in. The world never finds it out, or when it does find it out it does not enforce it. You may pass a law punishing every person with death for burglary, and it will make no difference. Men will commit it just the same. In England there was a time when the different offences were punishable with death, and it made no difference. The English people strangely found out that so fast as they repealed the severe penalties and so fast as they did away with punishing men by death crimes decreased instead of increased; that the smaller the penalty the fewer the crimes.

Hanging men in our country jail does not prevent murder. It makes murderers. And this has been the history of the world. It's easy to see how to do away with what we call crime. It is not so easy to do it. I will tell you how to do it. It can be done by giving the people a chance to live—by destroying special privileges. So long as big criminals can get the coal fields, so long as the big criminal has control of the city council and get the public streets for street cars and gas rights, this is bound to send thousands of poor people to jail. So long as men are allowed to monopolize all the earth, and compel others to live on such terms as these men see fit to make, then you are bound to get into jail.

The only way in the world to abolish crime and criminals is to abolish the big one and the little one together. Make fair conditions of life. Give men a chance to live. Abolish the right of the private ownership of land, abolish monopoly, make the world partners in production, partners in the good things of life. Nobody would steal if he could get something of his own some easier way. Nobody will commit burglary when his house is full. No girl will go out on the streets when she has a comfortable place at home. The men who have a department store may not be to blame himself for the condition of his girls, but when he pays them five dollars, three dollars, and two dollars a week, I wonder, where he thinks they will get the rest of their money to live. The only way to cure these conditions is by equality. There should be no jails. They do not accomplish what they pretend to accomplish. If you would wipe them out there would be no more criminals now. They terrorize nobody. They are a blot upon any civilization, and a jail is an evidence of the lack of charity of the people on the outside who make the jail and place the man in control of jail.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Onset of the World-wide struggle of the Proletarian Army for Liberty.

FRANCE.

Comrade Amilcare Cipriani, delegate to the general committee of the Parti Socialiste Français from the Federation du departement Loire-et cher, introduced a motion demanding the exclusion of Millerand from the Party. He justified his motion with the Manifesto of the General Committee calling on all Socialists not to take part in the festivities in honor of the Czar. Millerand has taken a prominent part in the celebration of the Czar's visit to France. Cipriani points out that unless Millerand is excluded several federations will leave the party.

The Alsatian delegates moved, without mentioning Millerand, to stigmatize and exclude forever all those Socialists who had taken part in the celebration of the Czar's visit.

Comrade Viennet, a delegate from the Federation Socialiste Revolutionnaire, introduced the following motion:

"Whereas, Comrade Millerand, who has been expelled outside of the party, (by the Lyons congress), does no longer belong to the party, and cannot therefore be disciplined by the party;

"Resolved, that the general committee lay the matter on the table."

Comrade Renaudel, one of the original signers of the Lyons resolution against Millerand, held that the latter was still responsible to the party and should account for his actions during the Czar's visit, "by which it seems he intended to break the last ties that bound him to the party."

The general committee voted to put the question to a referendum.

In the interest of the unity of all French Socialists, it is to be hoped that the Millerand question will be definitely settled by this referendum.

ITALY.

The results of the municipal elections in Naples are now known. The city council consists of 64 moderate clericals, 12 Socialists, and 4 democrats. The lowest number of votes cast for the Socialists was 2500, the highest 6000. The Camorra did not succeed in electing a single candidate. In the district of Stella the police prohibited the distribution of Socialist ballots. The Socialists ignored the police and continued their distribution. Thereupon the police inspector had three Socialists arrested. The Socialist deputy Rinaldi was distributed the ballots himself and the police inspector did not dare to interfere.

HOLLAND.

The general committee of the Holland Social Democratic Labor Party adopted the following resolution: "We hail the plan of the longshoremen to boycott English vessels and thus to induce the English government to make peace with the South African republics, as a hopeful sign of an increasing self-assertion and reliance of the workingmen the boycott committee will carry it in their own strength; we trust that plan into effect when it is sure of the support of the workingmen of its trade, and when it has a sufficient boycott fund on hand; we express our full sympathy with the plan, although we can not bind our party members in the matter; and we endorse the position of the party members who have pledged their assistance in case the boycott is declared."

GERMANY.

The Bavarian Socialists collected 27,000 signatures protesting against the proposed agrarian tariff. A glance at the statistics of the employment agencies shows that the number of the unemployed has been steadily increasing since the end of last year. In certain branches of production from six to eight times as many men want help as can be placed. The trade unions have paid $2,250.00 marks more in assistance to unemployed members during the last quarter than during the same months last year.

The conditions are worst in the metal industry. Not only have many men been discharged, but the wages of those who have not yet been forced to tramp the streets in search of work, have been cut considerably. In many shops the production has been restricted. In 417 machine shops of Berlin, 16,000 men less are employed this year than last. A similar condition confronts the laborer in other industries. In Berlin alone over 50,000 men are now out of work, and the crisis has not yet reached its climax.

The government is making inquiries about the number of the unemployed and the possibilities of giving them work. The result of this inquiry among the employers is that they know nothing of any great number of unemployed. Of course very little will be done by the government to alleviate the sufferings of the working people.

PROGRESS IN KANSAS.

Successful State Convention Held, Ninth Session of the School of Social Economy.

The State Socialist Convention at Parsons, Kas., on November 24th, was in every way a most successful convention. There were present 37 delegates, representing 12 localities, and unaccredited delegates from four others, who were given the privilege of the floor without a vote.

A public meeting was held in Library Hall, besides several street meetings, the result of which was the addition of 25 new members to the Parsons Local.

The constitution adopted follows closely the model of the other states, and of the National Party. The only resolutions adopted were an endorsement of the resolutions and platform adopted by the Indianapolis convention.

The state headquarters will be at Abilene, J. D. Haskell of that place was elected secretary-treasurer, Wilbur C. Benton state organizer, and Walter Thomas Mills was nominated for member of the National Committee.

Mr. Benton will devote his whole time to the party work, beginning at once, on the close of the fall term of the Socialist Training School at Girard, at which he is studying.

We are in receipt of the ninth lesson of the International School of Social Economy. The subject of this lesson is the Ancient Trade Guilds; the Modern Trades Unions, and Socialism. The lesson gives an account of the rise of the guilds, of the political conditions which made their existence possible, of the end of the guilds on the establishment of the factory system, how the wage system made its beginning by hiring those who could get no one to hold them as serfs or take them as slaves, and with wages less than the average cost of living for either serfs or slaves. It points out how the labor organizations were forbidden to exist; how by spite of the law they have grown; how secured the legal right to be; have extended the electric franchise, have shortened hours, and advanced the standard of living. It traces the class struggle and shows how the conflict of the laborer with the capitalist must finally result in enforcing such a decision at the ballot box with the result that the side of the trade unions, through enlargement of their plans and triumph in politics, as Socialism proposes, will finally inaugurate the cooperative commonwealth. If you do not understand the origin and development of the class struggle nor see how the fight which has been made by the labor organizations, is the same fight carried on at the work shop which the Socialist Party is now making at the ballot box, then you should surely study this lesson. If you do not clearly see how the Socialist Party and the labor organizations are factors in the same fight, and why all Socialists should support the unions and all unionists join the Socialist Party, then the study of this lesson would make you see it.

For full particulars regarding this course of lessons, send stamp to: WALTER THOMAS MILLS, Editor.

MINNEAPOLIS NOTES.

Local Activity Spurred in Preparing for Socialist Propaganda During New Year.

Forty-eight new members elected at last regular meeting of Local Minneapolis, Minn.

"Woman and the Social Problem," is the subject of a talk by Anna Maki next Sunday.

The Karl Marx Socialist lectures by Dr. A. Hirschfeld are growing in interest, every meeting seems to be better attended and better appreciated.

Minneapolis has produced a boy Socialist orator in Harry C. Rayner, a member of the Central High School and son of Chas. D. Rayner, literary agent of the local. Our coming orator made his debut Sunday afternoon, treating the subject "The Social Problem of the Young," in an interesting and able manner.

WHAT WE WANT TO DO. Our hall is not located in the most desirable part of the city, but there are no bad features in connection with it, such as saloons, etc. The rent is cheap and it does very well for a "starter."

We ought to have a large building, containing, besides the lecture hall, reading rooms, class rooms, music rooms, etc. Other features might well be added, such as baths and gymnasium, etc., and run so as to pay actual cost.

We hope to have some of the prominent speakers in our movement, such as Debs, Harbo, Winchell, etc., to lecture here this winter in some of the best halls in the city. We also wish to hold meetings in all the wards of the city and get our speakers into trade union meetings, churches, etc. We wish to do all this, and much more, if the Socialists of this city will join our organization and help to push the work.

Many Socialists are working outside the organization, and think they can do as much as they can inside. This is a grave mistake. If Socialism teaches anything, it teaches the necessity of organization. Socialism can properly be defined as an organized system of society.

LOCAL PARTY NOTES

NORTH SIDE.

At the public meeting in the North Division on last Sunday a fair-sized crowd listened to Comrade Morris Fowler at address at Social Temple Hall.

A good collection was taken up and quite a lot of literature was sold.

On next Sunday, December 8th, another meeting will be held, Comrade P. W. Knox will be the speaker. This meeting will take place at Genefer Hall, 153 Wells street, at 8 p. m. We hope to have a successful meeting as the last one held at this hall.

The North Division is making a specialty of selling literature. So far we have had good sales for the following pamphlets: Marx and Engels' Manifesto, Engels' Socialism, Utopian and Scientific, Morris-Hyndman's Basis of Socialism, Liebknecht's No Compromise, the Call, and the Review, and a few standard numbers of the Pocket Library. This will help to disperse the propaganda.

Let all clubs do this, that is, keep only clear Socialist works on hand to sell, and the result will soon be apparent. For—no trash, no confusion.

TEMPLE NOTES.

On Wednesday, November 28th, Clarence Darrow delivered a lecture on "The Law Courts and the Poor," to a full house.

On Saturday the coordinated held a business and social night at the Social Temple. Comrade Morris Fowler gave a lecture on "The Law Courts and the Poor," to a full house.

Sunday evening we had a full house notwithstanding the weather, and Comrade A. M. Simpson gave us a good talk on labor politics.

Sunday, December 8th, Prof. Howard Holmes of the College of Physicians and Surgeons will speak.

Wednesday, December 11th, debate between Comrades Hardy and Higgins. Subject: "Resolved, that the purchasing power of the people is an important factor in the economy. Comrade Hardy taking the affirmative. General discussion allowed.

Thursday, December 12th, Comrade Morgan delivered his regular lecture at the women's meeting.

A new organization is to be formed at the Temple on Sunday afternoon, 3 p. m., under the name of the Liberator Club (German). AD. Germans invited.

The next Socialist Drama Saturday, December 14th.

Hall Meetings.

On December 5th at 2 p. m., Miss Mary Cebon and J. B. Smiley will speak respectively on the following subjects: "Public Morals" and "The Trusts, their Origin and End," at Room 111, 111th street and Michigan avenue (third floor). Everybody invited. Seats free. Free discussion.

Friday 8 p. m. Pogue's Hall, corner Maxwell and Jefferson. Speaker, Jas. R. Smiley.

Sunday, 2 p. m. Socialist Hall, corner Milwaukee and Armitage avenues. Speaker, A. M. Simpson.

Sunday, 8 p. m. Aurora Hall, corner Huron street and Milwaukee avenue. Speaker, J. H. Bard.

A Flattering Testimonial.

As a general rule it is not our custom to publish letters and communications celebrating the Worker's Call, though if we care to do so we could probably set up a page that would make Comrade Wilshire's "Challenge" sink into insignificance by comparison. However in the course of human events it sometimes becomes necessary to lay aside to some extent that natural modesty and reserve which we have so long practiced and accepted the rule for once. A testimonial which we received during the early part of this week, seems to justify this decision on our part, so at the risk of incurring the displeasure of the Post Office authorities we here reproduce verbatim the opinion of our intelligent correspondent upon the Worker's Call in the editor and its proprietors, the members of the Socialist Party of Chicago in general. The clipping for which our correspondent thanks the Daily News was included with his communication, and seems to be the point of a little property, owner against socialist activity on Milwaukee Ave.

"Editor Working News Cell:

I read one of your Anarchist papers recently. Of all the trash I ever read the worst. You fellows are always trying to run down the capitalists who give you work, if you don't like this Country get back to Europe where you belong. And that's what we are going to do with every mother son of you send you all back when get to strong with your socialism, and those that are not sent back will be jailed, and don't you forget it too. You are always trying to make some riots on the street corner with your Harbanga. You would work if you had a show, and you no it.

This is free America, the best government, for a man who wants to practice, and do what he likes, and we don't want any of your foreign ideas of dividing up either. Why don't you get out and work and stop saving Anarchy?

You are anarchist and you no it!

A CITIZEN.

Needless to say we regard this eloquent tribute to our humble efforts with unalloyed satisfaction and gratitude. His suggestion that we stop "singing Anarchy" will receive the most immediate consideration on our part. If our correspondent will reciprocate by accepting a pointer in return. As he admits that this government is the best "for a man who wants to practice," we would merely hint at the unlimited possibilities contained in an ordinary spelling book.

Debate at Mueller's Hall.

Relative Merits of Socialism and Anarchism Presented to Audience of Eight Hundred. Points Made by Both Speakers Liberally Applauded. Good Order Prevails Throughout the Meeting. Audience Intensely Interested in the Arguments. A Summary of the Debate.

Socialism vs. Anarchy, the debate which has been advertised for several weeks past in our columns, drew on last Thursday evening an audience of about 800 persons to Mueller's Hall on Sedgwick and North avenues, to hear the principals in the controversy, Abraham Isaak, editor of "Free Society," and A. M. Simons of the International Socialist Review, present their respective sides of the discussion.

In the absence of Clarence S. Darrow, who had agreed to act as chairman, but whom "circumstances" prevented from being present, Mr. T. P. Quinn was selected to act in that capacity, and about 8:30, after a few preliminary announcements, introduced the debaters and acquainted the audience with the time arrangement: agreed on, Simons (for Socialism) was to open the debate with a 20-minute address, followed by his opponent for a like period of time; twenty minutes each in rebuttal; and ten minutes each in conclusion, Isaak to close the debate, which was thus to occupy two hours.

In opening the discussion, Simons stated the question at issue as follows: "Which of the two philosophies, Anarchy or Socialism, offers the best explanation of social phenomena and provides the best plan of action for the abolition of the evils of present society?" His opponent assenting to this statement, the speaker went on to define Socialism as based on economic determinism, or as stated by Marx and Engels, that in every historical epoch, the prevailing mode of economic production and exchange, and the social organization necessarily following from it, form the basis from which is built up, and from which alone can be explained the political and intellectual history of that epoch.

The speaker then explained this economic determinism by illustrations from nomadic, feudal and capitalist society. He then stated that this philosophy was antagonized by idealism, which regarded all history as but the evolution of ideas, and held such abstractions as justice, truth, etc., as being absolute and eternal, insisting that society must be bent to fit these ideas. This philosophy, he asserted, took no account of social evil, law, and necessarily led to confusion and utopianism and the production of dreamers. Anarchists, he declared, accepted this philosophy, and revived the old theological dogmas, the fixed categories of good and evil, right and wrong, and the individualistic conceptions of the past century, such as the talk of natural rights, inalienable and eternal, etc. He quoted from modern anarchist writers such as Grave, Malato, and others. All anarchist literature, Free Society included, based its philosophy on these conceptions, which led inevitably to such ridiculous and impotent conclusions, whereas Socialism, being based upon material facts, in its study of society regarded dreams as unimportant and therefore reached practical conclusions, which were being constantly verified by evolution.

Whatever plans of action anarchism therefore evolved, were necessarily puerile and impracticable. He classified them under two forms, negative and positive. The first advocated such passive action as the refusal of military service, jury duty, payment of taxes, all of which he declared were doctrines which the bourgeois observed as faithfully as possible. He ridiculed the idea of the working classes refusing to pay taxes when capitalism had stripped them of all property, while the refusal of military service, even if practicable, required the organization which anarchism declares unnecessary.

Under positive action he fastened the formation of colonies, encouragement of trades unions and Co-operatives, and other exploded petty bourgeois reforms which the passing of every day makes more impracticable as revolutionary factors. Socialists, on the contrary, used these things intelligently. Anarchism, also postulated vague and indefinite suggestions of reform in education, propaganda in the country, without any clear specification of any sort. He cited various anarchist writers in support of these assertions.

The so-called revolutionary measures proposed by anarchism were equally impossible and absurd. The general strike and the idea of a universal armed uprising he characterized as too idiotic for discussion, as they not only grow less possible each day, but actually require an elaborate authoritarian organization which is mooted in any and every form by anarchism.

He concluded that when these silly and ridiculous conceptions were eliminated, but one thing was left, viz. Terrorism—individual warfare—assassination, which was the only logical result of the acceptance of the philosophy of anarchism. He quoted liberally from anarchist literature to show that this position was generally accepted, and in conclusion asked his opponent if he was prepared to justify assassination or did he propose to show that it was not the logical conclusion from anarchism.

The champion of anarchism then took the floor, and after asking the indulgence of the audience, announced that being his first appearance in debate, he began with a vigorous attack upon Socialism. He characterized Socialism as declaring that Anarchy was dead, and asking why in such case they had it as an object of attack. He then insisted he was a Socialist, a real Socialist, and that the members of Socialist political parties had no pains in the same.

Since the days of Robert Owen he declared that the revolutionary character of the working class had diminished, that the two and a half million Socialists in Germany were State Socialists, which in reality meant State Capitalists—authoritarians; that authority was the evil that power always tends to develop and increase, that in the transition from chief to king, the evil began by giving the chief the best of everything obtainable, and so increasing his power—that the government resulting from this development of power was not instituted to protect the property of the subjects but of the chiefs.

Socialism he declared meant fatalism, anarchism proclaimed liberty to all mankind. He admitted the economic factor, but only regarded it as partial and limited. The only point where anarchism and Socialism agreed was upon the abolition of private property, but whereas Socialism wished to preserve government, Anarchism would destroy it. Government was the evil. It was impossible to govern men without deceiving them. The power of government rested on fraud and ignorance, and freedom was therefore only possible through the abolition of government.

He then quoted Kautsky to show that the wage system was compatible with a Socialist society, that workmen would have no choice of occupation under Socialism and that they have more freedom in that respect now. He quoted Liebknecht to show that political action meant compromise, and stated that the German Socialist deputies were middle class reformers who wasted their time by quibbling over matters which had no interest for the workers or which they should have opposed in toto. That therefore the Socialist workmen of Germany were being deceived and defrauded through their acceptance of political action as a means of emancipation. Revolutions were necessary only because constitutions do not grow. Anarchist ideals could only be realized by showing government as an exploded ideal. Anarchism taught the individual to resist tyranny by asserting his manhood, by showing that emancipation cannot come through participating in government or using the ballot box as the Socialist tactics dictate. Intelligence, not the ballot box, was the factor, bloodshed was a mere incident in the revolution, progress was not made by voting; people did not vote as to whether they would accept inventions or not. The class struggle was not a political struggle. Marx himself denied that it was, therefore Socialist tactics stood condemned.

Twenty minutes for rebuttal from Simons, who opened by objecting to the dream picture of State Socialism drawn by his opponent; that if he wanted to dream he should select his own brand of opium. He showed that this State Socialism existed nowhere, but in the minds of dreamers and cited quotations from Engels, Liebknecht, Dühring and Vandervelde four modern Socialist writers, to show how Socialism regarded the "State" in the future. His opponent had wasted a lot of time in telling what things should be done, but utterly neglected to tell how. Government must be abolished. Good; but to abolish government it is necessary to get hold of it, necessary to wrench the power from the hands of those who now use it as an instrument in their own interests, and this could only be accomplished by united political action on the part of the working class.

His opponent had spoken of the strength of revolutionary ideas in Owen's time, but it was a notorious fact that Owen appealed not to the working class but to the bourgeois; that Owen was a dreamer of dreams like the modern anarchist of today. Socialism was in accord with evolution. It recognized that authority had an economic basis, that it will die out under collectivism, that the material interests of the laborers must and does urge them to intelligent action, as instanced by its appearance as the political expression of the aspirations of the working class in every capitalist nation on earth. He asserted that anarchism had added nothing to the economic thought of the world, that the term Anarchist Communist merely described an impossible hybrid—that as a term it was meaningless. That assassination was the only reality left to anarchism, and it now devolved upon his opponent to either justify or repudiate it.

In his twenty minute rejoinder Isaak replied that assassination could no more be dodged than lightning—it was inevitable. Caligula he said was a Socialist for eight years, but Caligula was a better man than the speaker, for the sight of misery and injustice gave him the courage to strike at what he thought was the cause of the evil, and this courage he (the speaker) lacked. He could write articles about it, but Caligula took action, whether rightly or wrongly he would not say, but he would not condemn him. He challenged the Socialists to show a case where voting ever changed anything. It never did throughout all history, and it never can. The American revolution was not put to a vote—had it been there would have been no revolution, for the majority would have sided with King George. Socialism led to its own tactical because opportunism existed in its political action but was denied. He quoted Bernstein in support of this and cited the "Anarchist Manifesto" of 1894, which declared that the Socialists were "Nothing," "But," were the Socialists.

"We are going to do something." "Good," replied the anarchist, "so are we."

Ten minutes were allowed Simons, who began by stating that he had forced his opponent, who had rejected economic determinism as fatalism, to fall back on a still more absolute fatalism in order to explain assassination. He showed that an investigation in Cleveland proved beyond all doubt that Caligula was not only not a Socialist, but had been a Republican for years, that he had voted at Republican primaries in Cleveland, and that the transition from capitalist politics to anarchist tactics was extremely easy. That assassination was a logical result of the failure of anarchism to evolve an intelligent line of action to be pursued.

He declared that the presence of immediate demands abated no hope of the complete revolutionary character of the Socialist program; that nothing was changed in the past by voting, merely because majority rule was recent, that it was a distinctive feature of modern capitalism. Socialism, he concluded, gave the only practical solution of the question—that the working class must capture the powers of government and that the use of the ballot was at present the most expedient means to that end. Anarchism must ever remain a dream—it can only express itself negatively in idiotic quiescence, positively in ridiculous demands for petty bourgeois reforms, or if carried to its logical extreme, assassination and private warfare. His opponent had deliberately falsified Marx and Engels in order to prove alleged assertions, he had quoted from writers who are not recognized as Socialists, and even then had failed to reply when these misrepresentations were brought to his notice. In conclusion the speaker urged his hearers to work unitedly for the emancipation of their class through the ballot of the Socialist Party. The debate was closed by Isaak with a ten minute address in which he claimed that no philosophy has anything to do with assassination more than with voting. When misery is recognized some one will strike at what he believes to be the cause of it. Anarchist tactics would yet work out liberty for the human race. Socialist tactics were bound to fail because the working class are now and always have been in the majority, but were powerless because they recognized government. He then cited several instances of individual anarchists refusing military service in the French army and escaping because the authorities dare not punish them for fear of after consequences. The speaker was in the midst of a reference to Millerand, the French cabinet minister, when the time limit for the debate expired.

Both speakers were liberally applauded during the course of the debate, although the Socialists evidently preponderated in numbers. Points made by both were quickly perceived by the adherents of each side, and due recognition was not withheld. Deep to the reports which appeared in the daily press (with which we shall deal in another column) the meeting was conducted with perfect order at all times. During the controversy on assassination there were a few hisses heard throughout the hall, but beyond this harmless expression of disapproval nothing further was noticeable. Whether the anarchist portion of the audience will hold the reporters responsible for the fanciful accounts of the meeting which appeared in the press next day, we cannot say, but we Socialists at least will be quite ready to find an excuse for them in material interests. They can only live by getting acceptable copy, and a Socialist meeting without "wild scenes of disorder" the poor fellows have learned through experience, is not worth reporting from a financial point of view. It would be too much to expect of the capitalist press to give a truthful report of an affair of this sort, an admission that apparently supports the anarchist contention that governments must deceive the people, if one is content to ignore the economic reasons which make falsehood of this sort necessary.

It is unnecessary to say anything further about the debate, as those present will judge according to their particular standpoint. It only remains to say that such side was ably presented by the principals, and listened to most attentively by the audience who were certainly furnished with ample material for future reflection.

One Way to Help the Workers' Call.

This is a way that costs you nothing and it is very simple. Buy your food at the Socialist Co-operative. One-eighth of the profit goes to Socialism, and as long as the Workers' Call needs it the money will be put there. Of the remaining profit another eighth goes to the reserve fund of the Co-operative, and the other three-fourths goes back to you. That is an easy way to save up money for helping the work along in other ways.

Hull House Labor Museum.

A Collection of Primitive Tools of Handicraft Showing the Evolution of Industrial Processes with Illustrative Charts, etc.

The Labor Museum of Hull House has just issued a most interesting report.

This museum aims to gather material illustrating the processes of production from the most primitive times. The earliest forms of tools are shown, and it is an interesting point which is brought out in the report that it was always possible to find in the vicinity of the museum people who were still accustomed to producing in this primitive form. The writer of the report, however, seems wholly to miss the point that this shows a terrible social waste of life, in that the knowledge of the improved methods of production has failed to reach so large a portion of the population.

Perhaps the most striking thing in the report is the chart which is given below showing the thousands of years during which society was slowly learning to use the most crude of tools, and the comparatively short time in comparison that steam has taken to revolutionize the whole face of society.

Concerning this chart and the lectures which were given at the museum, the report says:

"It was startling in its revelation of the length of time the stick spindle was used, compared with the more recent spinning wheel, and the infinitesimal time during which steam has been applied to spinning. Beginning with 2,000 B.C. the straight spindle was used to produce all the spun clothing used by mankind for more than three thousand years, and not until 1,500 A.D. was the spinning wheel introduced into Europe. The European spinning wheel was used but a little more than two and one-half centuries when steam was first bunglingly applied to textile manufacture,

SOCIALIST CO-OPERATIVE.

Notice of Special Meeting to be Held December 20th to Discuss Proposed Amendments.

In accordance with a petition of ten per cent of the members, as provided by the by-laws, the directors of the Socialist Co-operative of Chicago, hereby call a special meeting of the membership of the Association to be held at the Socialist Temple, on Saturday evening, December 29th, 1901, at 8 p. m., for the purpose of voting upon the following amendments to the by-laws and electing a building committee as provided by the proposed amendments.

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS.
Resolved, That Section 3 of the by-laws shall be amended to read as follows:

MEMBERSHIP.
Any member of the Socialist Party may become an active member of the coming in the latter half of the eighteenth century.

"Many of the Italian women who came to the museum had never seen spinning wheels, and looked upon them as a new and wonderful invention. The chart shows that steam has been applied to textile manufacturing but a short space in the long line of 3,500 years. Even then it is confined to certain countries of Europe and America, with spots in Asia and on the coast of Africa. A world map, exhibiting the places in which the straight spindle and the spinning wheel still survive, was a matter of unfeeling interest to the visitors of the museum."

"Of necessity, it was difficult to use chart to more than indicate the periods of adjustment which accompanied the changes in industrial methods; and although the times of transition were comparatively short, they were big with suffering. An attempt was made to fill out by the interpretation of literature that period when steam was first applied to the manufacture of textiles.

Perhaps the most striking picture is that drawn by Hauptmann in his drama of "The Weavers." An interesting lecture was given upon the Industrial Revolution in England, and the appalling conditions throughout the weaving districts of the North, which resulted from the hasty gathering of the weavers into the new towns, also the regulation of those conditions as the code of factory legislation was slowly developed. The rise of trade unionism among textile workers was also traced, and their connection with the British labor movement. The lectures in the museum found it easy, indeed almost inevitable, to pass from the historical

Here the report leaves the workers with no suggestion of future evolution, no idea of the possibilities which come to the human race by this recent victorious conclusion of the fight of man against nature. The Socialist, however, can easily point the moral, and show that the marvelous and productive increase in productive power for the first time makes human suffering wholly unnecessary.

Rent Interest and Profit.

Extracts from Lectures Delivered Before School of Social Economy by Mrs. May Wood Simons.

General treatises on economics usually contain at least two divisions of the subject, that of production and of distribution. According to the most common acceptance of the term, production means the creating of utilities—utilities being used in the sense of the power to satisfy wants. Men cannot create new MATTER, but they can take the matter about them and put into such a condition as to form new material, or into such a form or place as at such a time that it will meet the demands of some human want.

This process of securing new materials, as when the farmer sows the grain and thus uses the matter and force of nature to form more grain, and of putting things into the form and the place and at a convenient time, is known as production. This division has from the first occupied the attention of economists, and they have divided the production into three—the land, labor and capital.

Distribution on the other hand is not concerned as the name might seem to imply, in the moving of goods from place to place, but with the division of the results of production between the different factors. Hence arise the terms, wages, the reward of labor; rent, the return to land; and interest and profit, the portion that goes to capital.

It must be noticed that the Physiocrats had no theory of distribution and Adam Smith gave little attention to it. The reason is plain. Great and new productive forces were beginning to make themselves felt when Smith wrote. He turned his attention wholly to these new productive forces and wrote principally on how nations were to increase their wealth. The question of the division of the products had not assumed as yet any great importance. All eyes were fixed on the wonderful new agents that furthered production. Today, on the other hand, the problem of distribution is occupying well nigh the whole attention of economists.

In primitive times the organization of society was such that the three factors in production were united for the most part in the hands of one person.

The same man owned the land, labor and capital. Hence there was then no problem of distribution.

When production took the form of village communities, there was collective ownership of the land and tools, and the produce was divided according to certain rules and customs.

Under the guild system the master owned the raw material and tools, the capital. He managed the business and worked with his own hands. From the produce he supported his apprentices and paid his journeymen. The whole system was regulated by governmental supervision.

The past century, however, saw industry completely revolutionized. The laborer was now not only landless but without tools as well. He possessed nothing but his labor power. Labor was thus separated entirely from capital, so that in production one class provided labor, another capital and land.

Land being the first source from which the ruling class drew a return, we will consider that. In early times land was generally common property. Later it became private property, and individuals or the state have since then secured a return for the use of land which they call rent. Rent in this sense is for the use of land only and must not be confused with the so-called rent of houses, etc.

The most extensive treatise on rent in the English language, and at the same time the most far-reaching in its effects, is no doubt David Ricardo's work. He defines rent as "that portion of the produce of the earth which is paid to the landlord for the use of the original and indestructible powers of the soil." He sums up his doctrine as follows: "It is only because land is not unlimited in quantity and uniform in quality, and because in the progress of population land of an inferior quality or less advantageously situated, is called into cultivation that rent is ever paid for the use of it." In other words, he attributes all rent to the original differences of soil. This is practically the position taken by J. B. Mill and a large number of today's economists.

We come now to the return to capital in the form of interest and profit. There is no little confusion between economists as to where the line between these two shall be drawn. It is now conceded by many that a term, gross profit, should cover both interest and pure profit, but that interest is the return on capital invested, whether that capital be loaned or used in business by the owner, and that pure profits are the returns that come to a business through the superior managing abilities of the manager, entrepreneur.

How then, is interest on the return to capital determined?

Still another theory of capital is given by Edwin Barrow, in his "Positive Theory of Capital." He says: "In the previous book I tried to show and account for the natural difference that exists between the value of present and the value of future goods. I have now to show that this difference of value is the source and origin of all interest on capital." That is, he would say that a man will not give one hundred dollars' worth of goods for one hundred dollars' worth of goods to be received hereafter.

Pure profits the economists tell us

Progress of the Trusts

Never since the world began has the wit of man hit on any other device for making money which would compare with the modern formation of trusts. And the trick consists in issuing enormous quantities of watered stocks to pay interest on which the workers are being taxed. As this is one of the most striking features of the formation of trusts now going on, Socialists should watch it and continually bear it in mind. A notable instance of this kind is the Steel (Great) trust.

The trust was formed last March, after the laws of New Jersey had been modified to suit the incorporators. Originally it had a capital of $1,154,000, consisting of $24,000,000 of bonds, and $25,000,000 of common and preferred stock. These securities were issuable in exchange, at rates agreed upon, for the $73,971,071 of securities of the eight companies first absorbed, and for $25,000,000 in cash put up by the magnates.

A few weeks later the American Bridge Company (capital $30,427,000 each of common and preferred stocks) and the Lake Superior Consolidated Iron Mines (capital $29,541,000) were absorbed, and $70,000,000 of preferred, and $72,435,000 of common stock of the new company were issued in exchange for old stocks.

The new capitalization was thus increased to $1,214,527,000, though adding no visible assets or real wealth to the original company to take the place of wind and water. It has been estimated by competent authorities that the $24,000,000 bonds of the new trust probably cover the actual assets, aside from values due to monopoly power. Thus it appears that this great trust is capitalized for more than four times the actual cost of all the different plants it has absorbed. And during the first six months of its existence, notwithstanding the great strike of the iron workers, which appears to have hurt it very little, it earned enough money to pay good dividends on all this stock, and there is a good prospect that it will continue to do so.

In July, 1900, the Department of Labor at Washington issued a bulletin on "Trusts and Industrial Combinations," compiled by Prof. Jeremiah W. Jenks. In that bulletin Prof. Jenks gives details of fifteen trust combinations whose plants he shows could be reproduced for 65 per cent of their capitalization, and he says: "It is probable, also, that the establishments reporting do not represent, on the whole, the most speculative of the larger combinations whose securities are placed on the market, and that in consequence the result shown here is much more favorable as regards stock watering than the average of industrial deals in on the stock exchange." Thus Prof. Jenks states that while these plants are capitalized for over twice their actual value, most of the individuals dealt in on the stock exchange are capitalized for much more than that.

An example of excessive capitalization is afforded in the Central Pacific Railroad, which is capitalized at $147,124 per mile. It was principally built with subsidies from the government, and cost the original owners very little. The railroads of the country as a whole are capitalized for three or four times what it actually cost to build them.

In January, 1900, the American News

tions of the paper trust, then recently formed, and stating that the trust was capitalized for $55,000,000, while all its plants could be reproduced for $11,000,000. Thus, this trust is capitalized for almost four times the actual cost of value of its plant.

Facts like these might be multiplied indefinitely, but the point to which we now desire to call attention is that the great mass of "securities" dealt in on the stock exchanges, and to pay interest on which the working class is being "lured," is made up principally of water. It is probably safe to say that these securities, as a whole, are watered to three or four times their actual value, and every dollar which goes to pay either the principal or interest on these securities is earned by the sweat of some working man's brow.

To intelligent working men who have never been able to acquire a dollar except by actual work, and who find their labor closely watched so that they are docked for every hour of idleness, it must be an interesting sight to see these financiers manufacture hundreds of millions of dollars worth of fictitious "securities," and then bind them as a burden on the back of labor. And so the rich acquire fabulous fortunes without labor, and the poor work hard and see their earnings slip away from them. This is one of the ways in which the great wealth is acquired which is being squandered in luxury, as in the case recently reported, of Mrs. Bradley Martin, who has spent $1,500,000 on a necklace, while thousands of women by the hardest labor can get barely enough to hold soul and body together. LOCAL PARTY NOTES

NORTH SIDE.

The last Sunday meeting at Senefelder Hall, 445 Wells street, was a success although the attendance was small; quite a lot of literature was disposed of, and a splendid address, which was appreciated by close attendance, was delivered by Comrade May Walden Kerr. A good collection was taken up and a new member added.

TEMPLE NOTES.

On Wednesday, December 12, Comrade Brennan gave us a good talk on "Modern Slavery." Discussion followed.

Thursday, December 13th, Mrs. Woodman gave a talk at the ladies' meeting, but as most of them were at the North Side debate, the attendance was small. Sunday, December 16th, Dr. Bayard Holmes delivered a lecture on the subject "How to Live." Some of the comrades who did not know our rules desired discussion, but as our Sunday meeting is a meeting mostly of whole families and we rarely get through before 10 o'clock with regular program, the Temple committee have thought it advisable not to have discussion at Sunday night meetings, but we invite it at all other meetings of the week.

Saturday, December 15th the Socialist Dramatic club will give a performance. If you miss this you'll be mad with yourself.

Sunday, December 16th, Comrade Strickland will speak, 8 p. m. Comrade A. M. Simons will talk to the afternoon school.

Wednesday, December 19th, Comrade Belyin will speak on Thursday, the 19th, Mrs. Wentworth.

At its last business meeting the First Ward Branch appointed four committees—lecture, advertising, house, and visiting—to have charge of the work in the ward for the winter, also a literary agent.

Next Sunday (16th) Comrade Simons will speak at the Branch Hall at 445 North Rockwell street at 1 o'clock. Comrade Strickland will speak at the same place on Monday evening, Dec.

Twenty Eighth Ward.

Notwithstanding the bad weather a good sized crowd gathered at Socialist Educational Hall to hear Comrade Pimons speak. At the close of the lecture criticism was invited, but those who are famous for their abnormally developed bump of intellectual combativeness, were conspicuous by their silence. Songs were sung to the piano accompaniment, and the spirit of true comradeship reigned supreme.

A Christmas festival will be held on December 25th, and judging from the talk of the committee in charge, something grand will take place. Bi-weekly lectures will begin Wednesday, January 9th, and continue until the spring election.

SOUTH SIDE.

The South Side entertainment which will be given on December 15th at headquarters, 751 W. 53d street, will contain many unique features, amongst which will be an auction of good things to eat. Each lady will bring a basket holding lunch for two people which may be decorated to suit her own taste and convenience, and which will contain a card bearing her name. The baskets will be auctioned off to the highest bidder who will share the lunch with the person who furnished it.

Coffee will be provided extra. Let every one who can either furnish a basket or buy one come and help every one else have a good time. Sociability helps socialism.

A. RASMUSSEN, Organizer.

The third annual entertainment and ball given by the 33rd ward branch of the socialist party for the benefit of the propaganda fund will take place at Kensington Tavern Hall at 241 W. 34th street, on Saturday, Dec. 24, 1901, commencing at 8 p. m. The J. Morgan will preside on "The Revolution of 1776, its Disgraces and Consequences" and Professor Untermyer will deliver an address on Capitalism and Socialism. Tickets 50 cents a couple.

As Capitalism Sees It

New York Journal of Commerce Declares Editorially That Trusts Lead to Socialism. Significant Admissions Which Demonstrate that the Ruling Classes Already Discern the Coming Economic Changes. Socialism Now an Appreciable Force in Politics.

It is not a new discovery that great combinations in the field of industry whose profits are dependent on the maintenance of a non-competitive and, therefore, artificial price for their product, are not exempt from the danger of failure. A more interesting question, raised by some recent developments in this line, is whether the temporary reverses of some of these combinations may not be as reasonably expected to give a new impetus to further combinations as to be the signal for their dissolution into their constituent elements. We are disposed to agree with President Bullock that financial combinations are not likely to lead to the termination of the corporate existence of the trusts, and to the resumption of independent operations by their various plants. Receiverships or eventual reorganizations would, more probably, be the accepted form of procedure, so that the enterprises now consolidated would remain under unified management, and might conceivably, include others previously independent of them. In other words, the failure of efforts to form a potential monopoly is more likely to lead to the renewal of these efforts on a larger scale than the resumption of the competitive conditions in which the combination had its origin, and which were regarded by all the parties to the combination as "wasteful," "irrational," and "self-destructive." The disasters which may overtake a number of the great monopolistic combinations might be plausibly traced to their inability to exclude effective competition, to limit production, and to fix an artificially high standard of price. In that case, safety for the future would be sought and found in making the best terms they could with other interests in the same field, and so minimizing the danger of again losing control of their market.

Meanwhile, there can be no question that the policy of consolidation is in control of the larger part of the field of manufacturing industry; that the chief railroad systems of the country have been brought under the control of a few

A READY ILLUSTRATION.

Mr. Gov. Altgeld Talks on the Control of the Press and His Speech Furnishes an Example.

It would not be very difficult to show that outside of the direct suppression of Socialist journals an inside press censorship exists which seems to be a well defined arrangement between the journalistic mouthpieces of capitalism as to the exclusion of matter which by common consent of dominant class interests is deemed objectionable. Last week we referred to an incident which occurred at the recent debate between representatives of Socialism and Anarchism at Muller's Hall, in which the advocates of the former openly taunted the press reporters with the fact that the journals which they represented dared not print his statement that Chicago was a Republic. This statement which can be easily substantiated, seems by common consent of the capitalist press to be strictly tabooed in their columns.

Another instance of the understanding which has been arrived at on this subject may be given here. Last Saturday ex-Governor Altgeld lectured on "American Ideals" before the Good Government Club of the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor. Carefully prepared proof sheets of his address were sent before hand to all the leading capitalist papers, all of which gave considerable space to the lecture. Here, however, is a paragraph which was omitted in every one of them. We reproduce from the advance sheets prepared for the press.

"It was first charged that Czolgosz was connected with anarchist societies and was carrying out their decrees, but this failed utterly. Then it was charged that he had heard a woman make an incendiary speech. An enterprising newspaper in Chicago managed to secure that speech and published it, and it proved to be the most harmless document imaginable, it depicted all violence. Then it was charged that he had listened to the criticisms upon the government by Mr. Bryan and his friends, and that therefore Mr. Bryan and his friends should be held responsible for the assassination of the President, but further inquiry developed the fact that CZOLGOSZ and his father were REPUBLICANS and not only had not supported Bryan but did not go to that kind of meetings; that they lived in Cleveland and VOTED THE REPUBLICAN ticket not only at the general elections but attended REPUBLICAN PRIMERIES, therefore if political speeches had anything to do with the crime, the leaders of the Republican party must be held responsible. Thus the absurdity of all this wild talk became apparent, and it also became apparent that while repressive measures may do infinite harm they will not serve the purpose that is aimed at in this direction of the same men who dominate the iron and steel industries, and that, as a corollary to this process, the tendency to centralization has become well established in the banking business, and there has been effected a union of financial interests sufficiently large to exercise a material, if not a controlling influence on the money market. The process has gone too far to be sensibly affected by partial failures; the system has become too firmly established to admit of the supposition that it can be quickly or radically changed. It is this fact which lends great importance to the political dangers which may come in the train of a highly developed trust system. As the authority already quoted puts the case, "The billion dollar trust seems to furnish a practical demonstration of the possibility of organizing the largest industries upon a national scale, and the concentration of all the railroads into a few groups controlled by a single set of interests, is a brilliant triumph for the policy of centralization. For these achievements the trust organizers have the applause and gratitude of every Socialist. The popular discontent caused by the monopolization of one necessary of life after another, prepares the soil in a manner ideally perfect for the sowing of Socialism seed."

The last ten years has witnessed a remarkable growth of opinion favorable to the public ownership of municipal service industries. There can be no doubt that the same tendency will assert itself if thinking men ever become convinced that in manufacturing and other industries competition is impossible and monopoly inevitable. If the TWO ALTERNATIVES which will then present themselves—PUBLIC or PRIVATE MONOPOLY—IT IS NOT HARD TO PROPHESY WHICH IS THE MORE LIKELY TO COMMAND GENERAL APPROVAL.

But in taking account of the forces which are making for State Socialism, it is well to bear in mind that the fundamental principle of all Socialistic theory is that the value of a given product is determined by the amount of labor expended on it. The idea that the value of an article of merchandise expresses the relation between the desire of the purchaser and the necessity of the seller is counted by all the Socialistic writers as a patent absurdity. There being, according to their postulate, no wealth except that which is the result of manual labor devoted to material products, and the value of these products being proportioned to the average duration of the labor incorporated with them, it follows that the capital of the rich is derived from the unpaid toil of the laborer. In other words, men who work with their hands form an inferior class subject to the oppression of the privileged class of capitalists by whom they are systematically robbed of their just dues. A theory like this necessarily leads to what is known as "industrial

Not a whisper of this has ever to our knowledge appeared in the capitalist press since Comrade Max Hayes of Cleveland set the investigation on foot that resulted in disclosing the political affiliations of the President's murderer. Obviously this was not "news." It would not even pay to publish it for the purpose of ensuring denial next day. The very rumor that Czolgosz was a Republican was too dangerous to be touched, and ex-Governor Altgeld himself has evidently a fairly clear conception of the reason why. We quote again from his address:

"This commercialism objects to the searchlight of criticism and therefore seeks to control the press of the land, and to a very great extent does control it; it seeks to control the pulpit of the land and to a certain extent does control it. We have in this country about ten thousand or more banks. They are so organized that the banks in New York can get word to all the other banks inside of an hour, and the other banks can in a few minutes get word to the manufacturers, the merchants, and the men that need accommodations, and thus they are able to CONTROL the columns of the newspapers that are dependent upon advertisement and accommodation, and are able to control the action of public officials.

"There is one class of papers that are not subject to control, that is the LAT-

Significance of the Peace Recently Reached in New York. Socialism in the Role of "Bottleneck."

Once again that political force, the conference which is to establish permanent harmonious relations between "labor and capital" has been enacted, this time with New York as the stage, and under the auspices of that conglomerate of exploiters, reformers and dupes known as the National Civic Federation. Prominent labor skinners have been stuffing the press reporters with professions of love for organized labor, veteran union smashers have been trying to cover up their past exploits by asserting that they have been persistently misunderstood by the working class, while oily ecclesiastics who have found no difficulty in serving God and Mammon at one and the same time, have been driving forth their unctuous platitudes about the desirability of "arbitration and conciliation."

Then several of the aforesaid "labor men" got an opportunity to speak their little pieces. After a feeble protest against Schwab's view of trade unions, they one and all assert that organized labor contains no menace towards aggregated capital, that the only reason for misunderstandings in the past lies in the fact that the contending parties have not understood each other—a not very luminous explanation in itself—but the conference is in no mood for criticism, so everything goes.

Then a wandering Socialist from Europe who happens to be present gets the floor for a few moments, and after the manner of his kind tries to inject-dissension into the hitherto harmonious assemblage. He thinks that there is an inherent antagonism between the interests of the contending parties which will work itself out through a social revolution and which will in turn transform the present economic basis of society. He ridicules the idea of harmony being effected through labor and capital meeting to slobber over each other's shoulders, but his remarks create no particular sensation. Slobbering is on the program and must be duly preceded with, so several other "labor men" who have not yet had a chance to hear themselves talk, get the desired opportunity and use it mainly to repeat in substance what their fellows have previously stated.

LABOR'S CHRISTMAS TREE.

CAPITALIST SANTA CLAUS—"See how I have decorated this beautiful tree for the benefit of the workingman. He can have everything on it that he can reach without overturning it."

THE papers that are published by poor but independent men at cross roads and in villages, and have a circulation anywhere from 500 to 1,000 in their neighborhood. These are too numerous for all to be reached, consequently, there has been an effort to destroy them. You have noticed that at several sessions of Congress a congressman named Lord introduced a bill to exclude these little papers from the mails as second class matter, on the pretense that they loaded down the mails and cost the government a great deal of money.

The Workers' Call is not published at a village cross road, but in the second city of the union, and it is perhaps the only paper in Chicago that welcomes the chance to publish what the capitalist controlled press dares not touch.

The First Political Exile.

The December number of Wilshire's Magazine, now published at Toronto, Canada, bears upon its cover in large type the legend, "Suppressed by the United States; 'I' now under the protection of the British Crown." The royal coat of arms with the letters E. R. occupying the central portion of the cover. The magazine contains seventy-eight pages of excellent reading matter, a considerable part of which deals with the events which forced the publication of the magazine to British territory and which should prove an eye-opener to the "patriot" whose patriotism has not entirely deprived him of reasoning power. Comrade Wilshire alludes to himself as "the first American exile," and reports that he finds his present location quite as desirable and less expensive than New York City.

Sunday, December 22, at 10:30 M. Rockwell street, 15th Ward Branch, at 3 p. m. J. Washington, speaking.

And the stage management of this burlesque is under the efficient supervision of the experienced capitalist stool pigeon who engineered the recent "trust conference" in this city. The same old gang of labor fakirs who assisted at that futile assemblage are again in evidence on this occasion, all well tried tools of capitalism, all fawning and cringing before the great men who graciously express their willingness to consider both sides of the question impartially.

Schwab, the high salaried slave driver of the steel trust, opens up by stating that contrary to popular belief, he has no objection to organized labor, but he does seriously object to its present form. He gives his ideas of what a labor union should not do. It should not be a trust, it should not seek to restrict the output, raise the price or shorten the labor time. With these objectionable features removed Mr. Schwab will tolerate labor organizations. Next comes Hannan with his evil record of years of union-smashing behind him. He has been grievously misunderstood in the past, but he will now speak the "sentiments of his heart." He always loved the unions, has always been the friend of labor, organizations; in fact since 1874 he has ever been their staunch advocate. He would give up his seat in the Senate, he would even willingly forgo his chance of the Presidency if he could only become an humble instrument in recommending the interests of labor and capital. So earnest does Mark appear in his protestations that his attitude is a "revelation to the labor men," who all along have mistakenly believed him to be an enemy of trade unions. They rush upon him and overwhelm him with congratulations and hand shakings, apparently delighted at discovering a champion of organized labor who has modestly dismissed his love for over twenty-five years.

Then an executive committee is chosen, an equal number to represent "capital, labor, and the public" respectively, the latter consisting entirely of lawyers, politicians and clergymen who are generally supposed to occupy a neutral position between the two.

A few words of unctuous twaddle from a distinguished pillar of the church, dwelling upon the intense feeling of "mutual brotherhood" which permeates all classes of American society, both capitalists and laborers alike, and the conference comes to an end. Harmony is restored for all time as the chairman of the assemblage has prophesied.

What does this pantomime signify? It means that the terror of advancing socialism is now before the eyes of the exploiting classes, and that they are now lying up all the reactionary forces at their command in order if possible to ward off the threatening apparition. It means that the knaves and traitors in the ranks of labor and the stinky creatures of the subsidized pulpit are now being called upon to do battle for the plunder upon whose bounty they have so long fattened. The sham profit sharing scheme of the steel trust will serve as a bait to divert the attention of the working class, and these traitors and knaves will be expected to boost it with all the energy and cunning they possess.

What will be the outcome? Nothing! They are too late. The class struggle is too much of a reality to be set aside by this rhetoric of shame. In a few weeks the very existence of this gabfest will have been forgotten, and Messrs. Labor and Capital will resume hostilities, the strike, lock-out and boycott will get into action, the Federal judges will ladle out injunctions, fines, and jail sentences as usual, the police Press Censorship.

All Signs Now Point to a Systematic Effort Upon the Part of Capitalism to Repress the Socialist Propaganda. Necessity of Perfecting Our Political Organization Now Apparent. Present Situation Long Foreseen by Socialists, Betokens the Climax of the Class Struggle.

Well, what are you going to do about it? Press censorship is here, and repression of free speech is at hand. Not alone is the underhand concealed manner in which they have been practiced these many years. It is not simply that alleged organs of public opinion are in the hands of capitalism and distort news to further the ends of exploitation. We are now confronted with a direct suppression of all publications that do not crawl before that same capitalism and defend that exploitation. Evidence has now been accumulated until no sane man can deny the fact that Socialist papers are to be forced from now on to fight not simply the unorganized hostility and indifference of the general ignorant slavish public and the scanty, grudging financial support of sympathizers, but they must also face the open, or covert, organized opposition of a plutocratic government machine.

Nor is the suppression of free speech to be any longer left to the chance efforts of ruffian assemblages and officious policemen, and to mask behind "irresponsible mobs" and "obstruction of the street." Now it is boldly debated in congress and advocated from the pulpit and public press. It seems as if American plutocracy, drunk with power and wild at the prospect of seeing themselves dethroned at the height of their glory, at a time when their tribute rolls in upon them in a golden tide so high as to overwhelm them in its very grandeur, are determined to make one last desperate stand for this privilege of plunder. Old forgotten laws are revived in Porto Rico to place Santiago Iglesias in prison for "conspiring to raise the price of labor"—a phrase that smacks of the middle ages. Think of it, workingmen of America! It is now a crime beneath the stars and stripes to "conspire" to bring more of happiness into the homes of those who do the work of the world. They are sending men to the penitentiary openly and with full publicity because they entered into a conspiracy to better their clothes and houses and feed and educate the children of those whose hands and brains make possible all clothing and shelter and food and culture. This has long been done indirectly and secretly and by round-about means. At Chicago, Panama, Virden, Coeur d'Alene, Homestead and a host of other places men have been killed for this, the most terrible crime of capitalism, an attack upon profits. But ostensibly they are shot as rioters, disturbers of the peace, destroyers of property, etc. But today the mask is torn off and it is to be made a crime to ask men to stand together as men in defense of the miserable homes and living that the capitalist system grants its slaves. Enjoined against picketing, forbidden to boycott, and denied the right to circulate literature defending their homes and families; herded in the palatial workshop by day and packed in foul tenements by night, truly the free American citizen is a sight to make gods weep—and men swear.

But all this means but that the chains of slavery are becoming more galling—not that new ones have necessarily been added. It means that the fact of master and slave is standing forth in all its hideous ugliness, and that means simply a light in the open instead of in secret. It means the line up by armies instead of a guerilla warfare in a thousand isolated shops and factories. The Socialist who has seen the beginning welcomes this new development. To him it is but the natural inevitable climax of the class struggle. But to the opportunist, to the pseudo-Socialist who hoped to help the capitalist society to become Socialist in spots all this is insupportable. He becomes panic stricken. At the very moment when according to his belief capitalist governments should begin to grant concessions of this comprehensive character, when the demands of labor should be receiving a most respectful attention from its economic and governmental masters, the chains are suddenly tightened and the class struggle, which they had been so carefully ignoring, stands forth in bold and sudden nakedness. The opportunist loses his head completely. He cries for force and begins to see spots of blood floating before his eyes. "Let us arm and drill the workers," he shrieks, as if capitalism would permit any such action, even if it would be desirable. For once we may be sure that capitalism will "save us from our fool friends."

But the revolutionary Socialist who has watched the course of social evolution and has been expecting and waiting for this day, knows that the world is not going to fall to pieces. He has no fear of any "catastrophe." He leaves that to the Bernsteinian. He sees in all this but the signs that economic development has reached the stage where it cannot be much longer contained within capitalist political outlets. He therefore redoubles his energies in educating the proletariat and preparing it for the political action. He sees no reason for getting frightened at the approach of a realization of his expectations. Unlike Tom Sawyer's cat he has not been asking for something he did not want, and is not going to have a fit when he gets it.

The most urgent need among socialists at the present time is not guns but brains, not military but intellectual drill, not hysteria but intelligence. It behooves us to bend every energy to perfecting our political organization ready to take advantage of the political situation which is soon to develop. Within the unions every effort should be made to show the union men that the time has now come for them to act intelligently at the polls. Every movement that passes offers new illustrations of the futility of strikes unsupported by political effort. The greatest obstacle to the extension of such an intelligent movement is the appearance of anarchistic idiots who would have the labor unions reject the strike in favor of the still more primitive and antiquated physical force struggle, instead of pressing on to the more advanced and really more revolutionary method of the ballot.

"Apparently Prosperous"

Not the least useful service performed by such bodies as the Salvation Army and the Volunteers of America lies in the fact that they are constantly compelled to destroy the illusions of prosperity with which the capitalist press habitually deceives the workers. A circular from the latter organization appealing for assistance to provide a Christmas dinner for Chicago's poor says in part:

"During these APPARENTLY PROSPEROUS times it is possible to forget that the unfortunate and needy class are ever with us, and even if slowly, they are SURELY on the INCREASE. Even in these days you can read in the daily papers of families in the most dire need and starving. Because of this we propose to give a free Christmas dinner to Chicago's poor people, as we have done in years past."

"Last year we served dinner to fully ten thousand and we feel it is necessary to make preparations for FULLY AS LARGE a number this year."

"The invitation is extended to all classes and conditions of people, not only homeless men, but whole families, newsboys and girls and poor women, and one look at those who avail themselves of this opportunity will convince you that it is indeed appreciated, and often by a CLASS YOU WOULD LITTLE EXPECT TO FIND IN SUCH CIRCUMSTANCES."

As the circulation of this appeal is mostly confined to the exploiting classes who support the system which it is responsible for the misery mentioned, its effect is somewhat lost, and for this reason it may be worth reproducing in the columns.

Tribute to Cheap Labor

In reviewing a recent publication entitled "Chicago the World's Workshop," the Chicago Tribune makes the following significant remark:

"From the standpoint of the manufacturer, it is asserted NO ONE FRAUDULENTLY stands out with GREATER FORCE than does the FACT that the city is the home of CHEAP LABOR—that PATIENT, FLOODING DREADFUL GERY which even in this age of automatic machinery is still so VITAL to the BASEWORK OF INDUSTRY."

Translated into every day ordinary English, what is this but a confession that the wealth of the city of Chicago is composed of the labor product of "cheap flooding dreads" who have been forced to produce in return for a bare subsistence, and that this condition is acknowledged to be the basis of industrial progress? What more has the Socialist ever pointed out? The trouble with most of the workmen who read this admission is that they fail to understand it. Consequently when they turn over another page of that journal and see a dissertation upon the "virtue of sweat shops," or an argument purporting to show that in retaining the tariff the capitalists really win; highly paid labor, they are unable to detect the contradiction.

The "Weekly Reformer" at Galt, Ontario, contains a full account of a most interesting lecture on Socialism delivered there by Comrade Bourgo of New York, and alludes to the address as a "marvellous product of eloquence, education and enthusiasm."

We ask our readers to give this article careful consideration and to specially bear in mind the source from which it emanates. The appearance of such matter justifies the assertion that the stunted calculating minds of those who are in present control of the industries of this country, can already distinctly see the inevitable tendency towards Socialism through the changes in production and distribution. These men have at least the merit of not attempting to deceive themselves, even though they may for material reasons attempt to deceive others.

This article only says in other words that the Socialist diagnosis of the economic future is correct. It gives substantially the same views of the trust problem that Socialists have always held. And to do so it gives the lie direct to the effusions which appear on this subject in capitalist journals which circulate amongst the working class. It cuts the ground from under the feet of the best of babbling knaves and fools who advocate publicity, regulating, licensing, or anything, as a "remedy" against trusts and combines, and incidentally demonstrates the utter futility of such anti-Socialist howlers as Corrigan, Corrigan, Rickaby, et al.

It was for publishing views almost identical with those of the "Journal of Commerce" that Comrade Gaylord Wilshire's paper, "Challenge," was barred from second-class mail privileges, and forced into exile on British territory, but the Journal of Commerce runs no such risk. As before mentioned, it circulates amongst "safe" people, whereas "Challenge" attempted to put the information within reach of all.

We shall draw upon these sources in future from time to time, as similar articles appear. Testimony towards the soundness of Socialist ideas is doubly convincing when it comes from the enemy. If workmen do not yet know enough to accept Socialism, perhaps the views of their masters on the subject may help them somewhat. At any rate we feel perfectly safe in helping capitalism "educate the masses" in this respect, even if by so doing we publish information that was not originally intended for the "common people." A good thing should be always pushed along. What is more to the capitalist than to see the capitalist's own propaganda being used to the working class good.

OBJECTION IGNORED.

It would be well for the organized workmen of this country if they could lay aside their imaginary importance in the eyes of the capitalist class long enough to take a glance at things as they really are. They would then discover that while at times it becomes necessary for their exploiters to flatter them, their normal attitude towards organized labor is really one of contempt and hostility, more open and undisguised when the votes of the workers are not at immediate request.

For instance the son of Judge Baker, of Indianapolis, who has been recently appointed by President Hoover to fill the place of Judge Woods as Supreme Court Circuit Judge for Indiana. Against the appointment the A. F. of L. passed a resolution of protest.

In commenting upon the appointment and the opposition thereto, the Chicago Tribune refers editorially in most contemptuous language to the action of the Federation of Labor, insisting that their objection is purely that the Federal should ignore it, and that the appointment should be confirmed.

It must be admitted that to a very large extent this contemptuous brush-off of the opinion of organized labor is deserved. There is really no reason at present why it should be treated in any other fashion. Workmen who year after year surrender their political power into the hands of their exploiters, justify the action of the latter when they refuse to listen to their protests afterwards. Had the vote of organized labor been cast in its own interests last November, the President would probably have hesitated to make an appointment so objectionable to the organized working class, and the Tribune have had neither opportunity nor inclination to add contempt to its natural hatred of the labor union.

SOCIALIST EDUCATIONAL CLUB

Meets every Tuesday evening at 8 p. m. at 1023 Milwaukee Avenue (near building). Secretary, J. S. Lichtenstein, 113 W. North Avenue.

SNAP SHOTS BY THE WAYSIDE

One of the resolutions presented at the recent A. F. of L. Convention, which requested that all affiliated labor bodies held absolutely aloof from the militia service, was laid on the table after a short discussion. The eternal and inalienable right of the union laborer to protect himself in the militia for the purpose of protecting scabs is thus once again affirmed.

Without a single exception the capitalist press has endorsed the conduct of the American Federation of Labor in not opposing the introduction of cigar-making machinery, although such introduction was bound to displace many skilled workmen in that trade. It gives them an opportunity of making a favorable contrast between the intelligence of the American and the British working class who through their opposition to the installation of new machinery, have thereby lost to their masters, commercial supremacy in the world's markets. But the next step in the evolution of this intelligence will hardly be an satisfactory to the exploiters. When the organized workmen demand collective ownership of this improved machinery of production, as they undoubtedly will in the near future, they will find a different sort of foe. To the capitalist class the limit of intelligence on the part of the workers is confined to their allowing their labor power to be exploited by the most improved machinery.

A glance at the alluring advertisements with which the store windows are now occupied, in reference to the approaching holidays, brings out one of the curious contradictions in the capitalist system which is often overlooked. The teachers of so-called "political economy" and the big employers, always lay great stress upon the virtue of thrift. The latter are incessantly telling the wage-slave to save his money and he will go ahead, and at the same time are constantly displaying seductive ads. to induce him to loosen up and let go of his coin, and in order to still further induce him to follow their advice, they hold out such baits as "selling below cost," "easy payment plans," "your credit is always good," etc., etc. When both sides of the matter are taken into consideration, the hypocritical falsity of the capitalist system stands out prominently.

To begin with, how can a working man save when he can hardly procure the necessities of life at present? How much less can he be expected to save when his exploiters treat him in a glaring and insulting manner those articles that he cannot fail to wish for but can never pay for? If he goes in debt to secure them and sickness or bad luck leaves him unable to pay for the stuff he thus buys on the installment plan, he is at once served with garnishments and followed up and ran down until his life is made unbearable. Advice of this sort given to the working class from their plunderers always has the merit of being impracticable, and only because of this it is given.

We have not observed that the capitalist press is putting forth any extraordinary efforts to arouse "public opinion" in behalf of Santiago Iglesias, the Porto Rican labor agitator who was recently sentenced under the Spanish laws to three years imprisonment for "conspiring to raise the price of labor." The fact that Iglesias is a Socialist may perhaps account to some extent for this negligence.

An American naval officer declares that the British government systematically covets the naval strength of the country in order to secure the nation into voting vast sums for its extension, and heaves the inference that this would be a good policy to imitate on this side of the water. However, such a procedure is not necessary here. All that is needed is to tell the working class that as they have provided several million dollars' worth of products more than they can consume, a larger navy is wanted to pound into the heads of foreigners the fact that they must consume the surplus. At least that is the manner in which Mr. Chandler M. Depew usually presents the question.

We notice that Hanna didn't tell the delegates to the "capital and labor conference" that the next struggle would take place between the Republican and Socialist parties, as he has declared on previous occasions. When there is a demand for hanging Mark is very careful to bend out only the brand of goods that is called for.

ADDRESS TO DELEGATES.

National Executive Committee of the Socialist Party to A. F. of L.

To Delegates to Twenty-first Annual Convention of the American Federation of Labor, Scranton, Pa.

Brethren and Comrades:—When a prevailing economic system becomes the very antithesis of human needs by reason of evolution in production the ruling class (such by virtue of previous social economic life it must prove its obsolete economic life by the subversion of remedial laws and the application of physical force. Any measure of emancipation by the subject class short of political revolution, will be utterly futile and hopeless. Arbitration at best is an armistice in which the opposing forces of labor and capital suffer under the terms upon which labor surrenders to capital. The price at which labor should be bought and sold is an inherently irreconcilable issue, that cannot be eternally arbitrated. The difference between compulsory arbitration and voluntary arbitration is the difference between being robbed according to government or being robbed according to agreement. While the trade union movement has grown in numbers, influence and resources; while it has raised wages, reduced hours, eradicated abuses, educated and fraternalized humanity and tended to the establishment of a better standard of living among the organized toilers—has accomplished these results in spite of the political power of the ruling class—progress along this line is being gradually arrested by utter disregard for free institutions and gross misuse of public power by the capitalist class; while the before mentioned achievements of economic organization have been neutralized by economic effects having their inherent cause in the capitalist system; thus:

a. Through trade unionism we may increase wages and reduce the daily hours of toil, but we cannot dictate to the capitalist class how many days in the year they must employ us. In 1919 there were only 23 in which the workers are employed 300 days in the year.

b. While the union has the power to increase wages self-preservation requires the capitalist class to charge all the profit the market will bear.

c. Through the introduction of machinery (not to mention trust methods) where one worker obtains employment in a new industry, eight workers are displaced with in former avocations. The capitalist class introduces labor saving machinery more rapidly in general than the trade unions reduce hours.

d. In declaring that wages will never be regarded as the equivalent of labor the workers should realize the full product of their toil. It is self-evident that the workers cannot receive the sum total of capital by a fraction in wages, while in addition the latter under competition tend to a mere level of subsistence.

e. The consequent loss of the heretofore economic organization. While the trade union cannot act as a political party, the possession of the public powers, dictated by self-preservation, requires the trade unionist to form his class political party in order to safeguard his economic organization.

The political organization of the working class is therefore an immediate necessity to co-ordinate with the preservation and continued growth of their economic organization; anarchism to either will now endanger both. If the Socialist Party is for any reason objected to as means to an end, those who profess to believe in the end are not necessarily relieved of responsibility for the proper political means. If the declining Socialist Labor Party erred in antagonizing the trade unions, it constitutes a good reason why the rising Socialist Party which supports the trade unions should be encouraged.

That the economic strength of the trade unions of Europe has increased co-ordinately with participation in political activity and possession of public power, is conclusive evidence that when men become imbued with Socialism, they gain interest in their trade union, which after all is the embryonic forerunner of industrial organization under the co-operative commonwealth.

With fraternal greetings we are,
 Faithfully yours,
 LEON GREENBAUM,
 National Secretary.

Justice.

By Wm. F. Fox.

"Reader unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's."

There stands the law, let no one say: "To Caesar things that Caesar's are."

Accord the lordly and the strong All rights that unto them belong.

Tis well! Now let us straightway see What may the dues of Caesar be.

Behold, where high in pomp he towers; He tolls not, yet he much demands.

He feeds on us; he is a shark; Let's give to him a right to work.

And when he puts his hands to use, We'll let him have what they produce.

If he refuse to sow or reap, His right to starve we will not keep.

Let him enjoy it! It is his; To Caesar still what Caesar's is!

Too long the suffering human race Has worked and starved in Caesar's place.

There stands the law, it is most just; And work or starve great Caesar must.

Affirm and print and paint and carve; "Caesar can work, or he can starve!"

So shall the Scripture be fulfilled, And Caesar get what God hath willed!

MINUTES OF THE MEETING.

Last week an application for a charter was received from a new local at Westville, Vermilion county, with 14 members. Comrade John Brauk of Georgetown is the organizer. Most of the members are French or Belgian coal miners.

Local Alton reports an increase of five members at the last business meeting.

Local Elgin has rented permanent headquarters. It sends in the name of Ernest Untermyer for International Secretary. Local Harris has sent in the name of A. M. Simons, and Local Evanston the name of Thomas J. Morgan for the same office.

The Evanston comrades report an enrollment of 24 dues paying members. A. M. Simons spoke there on December 1st and Seymour Steadman on December 12th. Philip D. Brown is to speak there December 15th.

Comrades in unorganized towns are urged to send in their addresses at once.

CHARLES H. KERR,
 State Secretary.

AT HEADQUARTERS.

"Well, the campaign is over," said the veteran filling his pipe and preparing to occupy the corner chair. "At least we are free to begin another." No response was forthcoming and after several puffs he began again, addressing the new convert who seemed the most attentive. "You see we've got to keep at it. Political campaigns are only incidental with us now. We take part because we must, but our efforts are really less effective than when popular excitement is at low ebb. We must appeal to the reason for a long time yet and get the brains of the working class with us. Sentimental appeals are of little use at present."

"I don't know about that," broke in the Utopian, "it was an appeal to my love of justice that brought me to Socialism."

"Hah," grunted the Revolutionist from the opposite side, "that only proves what he said. I never knew a sentimental Socialist yet that wouldn't applaud every smooth-tongued mountebank whom the rest could see was a radical for revenue only."

A nervous smile flitted over the face of the New Convert, and the old settler resumed.

"I wouldn't be that severe on our utopian friend, nor is that the point I wished to make. Our work is to organize the working class. To get them to think calmly and logically and so get power to emancipate themselves. This demands such painstaking care with detail and the results seem so inadequate that the sentimental enthusiast gets tired waiting for the revolution, and becomes an opportunist."

"Well, you can hardly blame them," interrupted the Agitator, "a fellow gets out night after night; he appeals with convincing logic; he impresses the motley group that stops to listen, to strike for equality, for Socialism. And the crowd passes on, some with a sneer, others with anger in their hearts against him because he has attacked the time-honored institutions of property and poverty and sought to make them discontented with the hovel and the crust whither they go. It makes me sick at heart."

"And just think what the world might be," interjected the Utopian. "What wondrous beauty would result from the injured intelligence the co-operative commonwealth would bring. No more ten-story tenements, their small, dirty rooms marred with starvelings, but homes, each the artistic dream of some trained architect. And men and women full-formed and rosy-cheeked, walking erect beneath the blue sky. Every city a garden; these smoky, stony, roaring canyons you call streets would be banished to Hades."

The New Convert's eyes glistened, but the Revolutionist rudely broke in: "More pipe dreams. You utopians are always reciting the history of the future. If you would get off your pegs and trade a few steps in the gutter, you would come to know, as Harrison puts it, 'A proletarian can get a far better focus on the co-operative commonwealth with a breakfast than with a utopian romance.' Your Pegasus may buck at the rhetoric but the idea's all right."

"I've been thinking along those lines myself," said the Organizer, pocketing his pencil and putting his note book away. "We think we have an organization, but what does it do? It runs a few meetings which one or two individuals could possibly carry on by themselves, develops innumerable wrangles in the party meeting, takes up our time and money and what do we get out of it? I tell you, boys, if our organization is to be real it will have to get down and touch our lives materially. We believe in the materialist conception of history and yet neglect to apply our theory. Is there any great organization that does not give its members some substantial pecuniary benefits? From the Roman Catholic church to Tammany Hall you'll find that the cash nexus is the surest bond and when that falls the organization goes to smash. Take a man two days this side of hunger, and Socialism twenty years away, is his logic as bad if he votes for 'something now.' The paternal assistance of the parish priest and the kindly ministrations of the Sisters of Mercy give the Catholic church a hold on the people. The sick and death benefits win members to the fraternal lodge, and the judicious charity of the Tammany leader, who watches over his voters as a guardian over his wards, builds up the machine which grinds on with the precision of clock work, come victory or defeat. We've got to get some similar scheme."

"What would you have us do?" queried the Veteran. "Now, mind you, we don't want any Bernsteinism."

"Well, this is the proposition. If it is hard work for a Socialist to get influence in the old conventional means and next to impossible to swing them into line with the party, that field of aiding the worker is hardly open to us. But there is the co-operative field. After the Veteran had said this, certain wages, what is the matter with the Socialist movement stepping in and through co-operative stores cut out the expense of maintaining a host of petty bourgeois store keepers. This money would be saved to the workers and used for the benefit of the co-operative movement. They have made it a success in Belgium. Why not here?"

"That's right. That's a fine idea," exclaimed the Utopian.

"Yes, but it can't be done," cried the Agitator, rubbing his head as if pained and then spoke. "I am not sure."

CORRESPONDENCE.

International Socialist Bureau.
 St. Louis, Nov. 24, 1921.
 Comrades:—At the International Congress held at Paris in 1920, a resolution was adopted establishing the International Socialist Bureau, with headquarters at Brussels, Belgium. The purpose of this bureau is that of being the center of communication and instruction whereby the Socialist Parties of all countries may be brought into international relations.

In order to accomplish this end the Bureau is charged with the duty of taking necessary measures to facilitate the international organization of the proletarian of all countries; to arrange for International Congresses; to receive and publish reports; and to attend to other matters within its scope and with which it may be charged from time to time. By the terms of the resolution the Socialist Party or parties of each country, which adhere to the resolution of the International Congress, may be represented at the International Bureau by two delegates or secretaries.

In accordance with this resolution, the state and local organizations are hereby called upon to make nominations of candidates for two secretaries, it being understood that the candidate receiving the highest number of votes shall be elected; and the candidate receiving the second highest number of votes to stand elected in the event that the Socialist Labor Party omits to elect a delegate in compliance with the conditions of representation.

Any member of the party to good standing may be nominated. In nominating candidates, the comrades will bear in mind that the secretaries may be called upon to pass not only upon matters concerning the Socialist movement of our country, but upon questions concerning the movement of other countries.

The officers of the locals in organized states are requested to forward the names and addresses of the candidates nominated, to their respective state secretaries; locals in unorganized states to forward their nominations to the national secretary; said action to be taken in such season that the nominations in both organized and unorganized states will reach the undersigned not later than January 1st.

LEON GREENBAUM,
 National Secretary.

FROM ILLINOIS.

Utah Socialists have called a state convention for December 25th. Connecticut held a state convention at Danbury on December 10th.

The Socialist Convention at Parsons, Kas., on November 28th, was attended by 67 delegates representing 12 locals. A public meeting was held in Library Hall, besides several street meetings. The result of which was an addition of 22 new members to the Parsons local. The state headquarters will be at Abilene; J. D. Haskell of Abilene was elected state secretary-treasurer, Wilbur C. Beutson, state organizer, and Walter Thompson, state nominating officer.

Chas. H. Vail will make a lecture tour during December in the states of Maine, New Hampshire, and Connecticut, under the joint auspices of the national committee and the respective state organizations.

The national committee has decided to co-operate with comrades in New Hampshire, Vermont, and Rhode Island, in placing H. W. Smith of East Pepperell, Mass., in the field as organizer.

The national committee has issued state charters to Connecticut. Local charters have been issued to Independent, Col., New Orleans, La., Burnham Township, Okla., Newburg, Va., Mt. Pleasant, Utah, Murray, Utah, and Sioux Falls, S. D.

The following applications for local charters were referred to the Kansas state committee: Thayer, Goodland, St. Paul, LaFayette, Canton, Neodesha, Pike Township.

Socialists of Oklahoma held territorial convention at Kingfisher on December 7th.

Bumper F. Clafin has been elected national committee member from New Hampshire.

Socialists of Colorado will hold state convention at Denver on December 25th. The state organization of Missouri has requested the national committee for two week's dates on the proposed election tour

Abstinance and Monopolies.

H. M. Hyndman in "Morning Post" of London, Eng.

Political economy has rightly been called the "dismal science" for, if it is not dismal in itself, it is beyond question that nearly all who have written on it, have treated their subject dismally. And, oddly enough, the two most striking exceptions to this rule of dismal science, were men whose thinking was as superficial and incorrect as their style was taking and pleasant. Bastiat and Henry George were readable but erroneous. Let us hope that in these days, when the study of political economy has become more important to the world than ever before, some one will arise who will succeed in combining soundness of theory with an attractive method of exposition. At the present time it is the fashion with a certain school of political economists in this country to declare that the economics of socialism are utterly fallacious and, therefore, unworthy of attention. This, though it is made clear day by day that the forecasts of leading socialists in the field of economics and sociology are being only too completely fulfilled; and scarce a month passes but some continental professor of distinction—my friend Professor Isakoff, of the University of St. Petersburg, for instance—joins our ranks. Thus, fully a century has passed since Robert Owen showed the danger of unregulated competition. Seventy-six years ago, when competitive capitalism was going forward conquering and to conquer, and when "individualism" was the pet fetish of the classical economists, Fourier predicted that competition would inevitably find its logical limit in monopoly. Forty years later Marx, in his masterly analysis of the production and circulation of commodities, showed that large industrial and agricultural combinations were crushing out the smaller workshops and farmers. Even the present writer was able to foresee, and did foresee, the coming domination of the United States by the great trusts as long ago as 1899. Yet a branch of human knowledge ceased to be an art and became a positive science when, knowing the antecedents, man is able to predict certain immediate consequences with an approach to exactness. As the late Dr. Rudolph Meyer well said, therefore, many years ago: "The time when political economists will be our statement will probably never come; the time when statesmen can afford to be ignorant of political economy has passed already." Never, to my mind, was this aphorism more applicable than it is today.

My object in writing this letter, however, is not to claim for Socialists thinkers and writers the power of correct forecast in the domain of sociology—though, within limits, this I might fairly do—but to direct attention to a development of the power of accumulation going on at this moment which it is certain that nobody foresaw. Nearly all individual human action up to a certain point is unconscious, and nearly all social action throughout history has been unconscious too. We are, in fact, only getting to that stage in the upward movement of human society when mankind, having begun to understand the course of its own evolution, will be able in the future to control these powers of production by which though man-created, it is at present itself over-mastered. We are still, as a whole, to be in the unconscious stage. I do not think that this is any where more apparent than in the growth of the huge trusts in the great Republic across the Atlantic, and the manner in which, after innumerable partial failures, for the process of "trustification" has worked its way, on through many difficulties since 1850—they have now absorbed nearly every branch of manufacture and distribution in that transatlantic plutocracy, misnamed a democracy; and have even succeeded in reducing the "free farmers of the Far West" to the level of a little better than a proletariat of agricultural laborers by the monopoly which has been secured of the railways and grain elevators. But how comes this most remarkable feature of this interesting, if formidable growth, and one which accounts for the American invasion of Europe in its more threatening manifestations. All the classical economists, and most of the ordinary English professors of political economy of today, account for the accumulation of capital by thrift, or saving, or abstinence. That last word abstinence is good enough for me. Capital is thus amassed we are told not by the appropriation of the fruits of other men's labor, but by the abstinence of the wealthy in not spending the whole of their income. That sounds very wise. It makes a rich man who gives up more riches "feel good," as the Americans say; and it makes the poor man who in his humble fashion is thrifty, think that he too has his economic virtues which it would be a pity to hide away in a napkin. A very telling essay, by the way, might be written on the ethics of accumulation.

Now, however, we have reached a level in this process of piling up vast fortunes where the conception of thrift or saving, or abstinence—you keep your money and you take your choice—has its humorous side. The late Mr. Peter Lorillard, the tobacco manufacturer, was an enormously wealthy man. A friend of his had him a large sum that he could not spend £200,000 on his own personal gratification in one year. There were certain limitations at the time. Mr. Lorillard was not to purchase for instance the Globe as a private yacht, or to build a Manhattan Abbey as a resting place for the bones of American millionaires. He was and the money directly on his own pleasure. With the best possible dispositions towards gastronomy, elegant luxury, sport, etc., Lorillard felt that of expending the £200,000 named with in the twelve months by just £20,000. Such was his abstinence! But the income—may I call it the revenue—of Mr. John D. Rockefeller this year is estimated at from £15,000,000 to £20,000,000. As I understand that the "standard of life" for billionaires has gone up materially since the late Mr. Lorillard made his mild effort at extravagance, let us assume that Mr. Rockefeller can spend on himself £1,000,000 out of these his wages as a "captain of industry." His abstinence and abnegation will thus result in "savings" to the tune of from £13,000,000 to £19,000,000 in this single year of grace. That vast sum he must do something with. That is to say, he must invest it. But how? Mr. Rockefeller and his friends already control the New York banks, the huge steel combine, a considerable portion of the railroads, and have a large holding in other trusts, apart from their original Standard Oil Company, with its monopoly of refining and distributing petroleum oil. What, then, is to be done with this vast overflow of Mr. Rockefeller's thrift? Abstinence on such a gigantic scale was never heard of before on the planet. These millions on millions must "lap over" into, and bring about the "trustification" of other industries, domestic or foreign. As a matter of fact, this inevitable and practically unconscious lapping up of industries has been going on for some time past. The trust has been a stage of growth. The preliminary stages are those at which the educator is made to stop rampant competition and cutting of prices among producers in the same branch of industry; first by a "pool" or a "cartel," among the separate establishments, then by a partial combination, and, lastly, by a fairly complete trust. These earlier stages are the most difficult of all, and success has as a rule only been obtained in this initial period after a great deal of trouble and disappointment. The next step forward is when the trust plays the part of the Ophiophagus and becomes a trust-trust; thus, by devouring its smaller antecedent competitors, constituting a thorough monopoly in a particular department of trade. The final development so far in this great economic evolution, is when the trust having become a monopoly, the profits of this monopoly, with its attendant monopolies, become so enormous that the owners thereof are absolutely forced to buy up other departments of industry, or transport, or distribution, and to "trustify" them. It is in this last stage which results in the tumbling over of American capital into Europe and other parts of the world. Abstinence having played its part, abstinence then becomes inevitable. Mr. Rockefeller and his associates cannot in fact help themselves. They are obliged to go on. I should not be in the least surprised, therefore, to see one or more of our great railways to the North controlled within the next few years by American capitalists. Not because they especially wish to capture English railways—I believe the capitalists referred to had no particular desire to go into the steel industry—this because to find an outlet for their huge accumulations, for the result of their enforced "abstinence," they must. But what of the "individual" in all this? Alas! economics has little that is good to hold out for him as an individual. The social law of order which he is at present working in "Get Money or Bust!" Howbeit, it shall go hard with that competitive frog who strives to emulate and overcome the "trustified" one.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Glimpse of the World-wide struggle of the Proletarian Army for its Liberty.

GERMANY.

The great sensation at the opening of the session of the Reichstag was Comrade Bebel's passionate speech arraigning the parties that demanded an increase of the taxes on grain and other foodstuffs. Our comrade ridiculed the royalties whose loyalty sinks down to nothing when they cannot get an increase of taxation for their benefit, and who threaten to become revolutionaries if their will is not done. He expressed his disgust with the religious hypocrisy that uses Christianity as a cloak to conceal the most unchristianous policy. He told the Prime Minister, who professed to be representing the interests of the nation, that he was merely representing the nation of exploiters and oppressors, but that the Socialists were representing the nation of exploited and oppressed.

Bebel proved the absurdity of the proposed new tariff by the words which the government had used two years ago to defend its retrograde tactics. He quoted the remarks of the politicians of the capitalist parties who had sharply protested against such a tariff on former occasions. He furthermore proved that the great land owners were exceptionally well off, while the great masses of the people, already employed in the limit, was to be taxed still more for the benefit of such spendthrifts and libertines. The most dramatic incident of the session occurred when Bebel, describing the suffering and woe of the unemployed, starving, sick and dying workmen, related a story of a public school in Cologne. A teacher asked a little boy why he wished to go to heaven. What was the answer? "Because there I would not have to go hungry!" "Is there anything more revolting, is there anything more insulting against the present social order than this reply of the child?" shouted Bebel. "Perhaps his father had spent all his money for drink!" exclaimed Count von Arnim, shouts of "Shame!" came from the Socialists, and Bebel retorted: "That is an ignominy! The gentleman is laughing! That is callousness of mind!" A great commotion stirred the house. Even the members of the right showed by their attitude that they felt the inappropriateness of Count von Arnim's remark. "This single sentence," writes Vorwarts, "revealed the abyss of the ignorance of the bourgeoisie." There are cases where families suffer through the callousness of the fathers. But to feel nothing but such disgusting cynicism as that remark revealed, when the miserable condition of the mass of the people was described in a way that moved the heart of every true man; to make the voice of the poor responsible for the faults of the ruling class; to blame an unlucky father for the hunger of his children—that was the self-denuciation of vulgarity."

And Bebel went on in his arraignment laying bare the avidity, the cruelty, the avarice, and the debauchery of the parties that demanded this tariff, and branding as tools of the exploiters the governments that supported them. He showed that the German Empire spent 1300 million mark per year in the interest of a few great landowners, while only 90 millions were spent for the mass of the working class. "And then the workers are to speak of the assistance of the middle class and of general welfare!" he exclaimed. "There can be only one result of this policy, an uprising of the masses and a revolution!" He dared the government to dissolve the Reichstag, and he declared that there was only one party in Germany that would benefit from such a course and from the (right—the Socialist Party. This speech constituted a great moral victory for the Socialists. No one who reads Bebel's words and compares them with the weak and tiring arguments of his antagonists, can fail to get the impression that the Socialists represent the nobler side of humanity. And the exploiters and their governments, will find out that the young strong world of Socialism is mighty through its higher ideals, even where it is still weak in numbers.

FRANCE.

The majority in the French Chamber of Deputies has given another fine example of capitalist morality. They voted to "refund the losses" of the plundering missionaries in China, and of the religious orders driven out of France. They passed a vote of praise for the troops that had looted and committed inhuman atrocities in the Chinese campaign. They voted down a Socialist motion to publish the official report on the question of pillage and plunder, and also the motion to submit the text of the Peking treaty to parliament. The ministerial wing of the Socialist deputies did not agree on the different questions. Eight of them voted in favor of praise for the Chinese warriors, eleven of them abstained from voting, and nine voted against the motion. The thirteen members of the anti-ministerial wing of the Socialist deputies voted solidly against this motion as well as against the loan to defray the expenses of the China expedition.

ROOSEVELTS' MESSAGE.

Observations on Some Significant Points Which Have Drawn Public Opinion.

Roosevelt's message has been treated from such a variety of points that it may seem impossible to still say anything new upon it. But some little points have been overlooked that are really more significant than many of the things around which controversy has raged. Everyone has laughed at his talk on anarchy and pointed out that he has but re-echoed the howlings of the newspaper press. His trust repudies is easy to ridicule. The steel trust, from motives of business policy, has already adopted the principle of publicity and has not suffered in the least. It would probably like to see all its rivals forced to adopt the same policy and there is just a chance that this wish of the steel trust may have been father to the publicity thought in Roosevelt's brain.

It is worth while to notice in connection with his treatment of the trust question that he definitely throws behind him the traditional political economy which has ever been the support of capitalism. The present exploiting stage of society with wage-slavery is commonly known as the "competitive era" because competition is supposed to be its guiding principle. But Roosevelt says of the trusts: "The creation of these great corporate fortunes . . . has been due to natural causes in the business world, operating in other countries as they operate in our own." "Good by, competition!" says Roosevelt. This means that even its strongest defenders are forced to admit that we have passed more than half way through the transition process from capitalism to Socialism. It is a much longer step from competition to monopoly than from monopoly to co-operation.

His proposal for a "Secretary of Commerce" is another movement the significance of which few Socialists have seemed to grasp. The executive of the modern state is but a committee for managing the common affairs of the whole bourgeoisie," says the Communist Manifesto. Roosevelt has added one more proof of this prophetic character of that document.

He congratulates the country that "wages are higher today than ever in our history," but forgot to warn Dunn's Commercial Agency against the simultaneous publication of their "Index Number" showing that the cost of living has gone up 23 per cent during the last year, which would amount to a reduction of wages, even according to the most favorable capitalist figures, of at least 10 per cent during the same time.

His praise of the work of the Department of Agriculture is in many ways well deserved. It is true that "it is searching the world for grains, grasses, fruits and vegetables specially fitted for introduction" into this country, and it has accomplished marvels along that line. The same praise is due the Forestry department which is today doing an excellent work, although on altogether too small a scale in proportion to the task before it. It would be a good idea to "post office Socialists" who have been somewhat disconcerted by certain actions in that department of government, to turn their attention to the Agricultural and Forestry departments which are ably assisted by a Socialist government, than any other department of our present political machinery. To be sure the actual farmer gets but small benefit from the improvements in production which this work makes possible, and there is no doubt but what the Forestry division would lay the foundation for future billionaires if capitalism should continue until "harvesting time" comes. But it is the business of Socialists to see to this part of the matter. The same praise is due his recommendations concerning the irrigation of the arid lands. Here also is a field in which governmental activity would do much more nearly approach the Socialist ideal than in the Post Office, because there would be practically no chance for direct governmental exploitation. To be sure every one who has had his eyes open knows the story of how for twenty-five years the little farmers have been petitioning for just this sort of legislation, and no one ever even heard them talking. But now thousands on thousands of acres of this arid land has fallen into the hands of great corporations and capitalist land-holders, and they were able to attract the attention and secure the co-operation of the whole machinery of government with ease. Nevertheless "let the good work go on." It will be easy for a Socialist government to attend to big land owners when once the canals and reservoirs are in the hands of a government controlled by the producers.

There are two sentences in this portion of the message which are striking in the deductions which logically flow from them. "Whoever controls a stream practically controls the land it renders productive" and "Whoever controls the machine controls the man who must use it" is the logical corollary of this statement. What then does Roosevelt conclude from his premises? "In the arid states the only right to water which should be recognized is that of use," he continues. But you have just shown that monopoly is due to "natural causes" under capitalism, and that therefore the same thing holds true regarding the instruments of production in a capitalist society that exists with relation to water in the arid land. The conclusion, which logically follows is that "After capitalism has monopolized the instruments of production the only right to them which should be recognized is that of use." That is the whole Socialist argument and it is plain that Roosevelt too is "coming our way."

Some of the "workers with capitalist minds" have been trying to tell socialists that if Roosevelt only knew, what Madden was doing in the second class mail division, his (Roosevelt's) "sense of fairness" would prevent the continuation of such acts. But we find Roosevelt repeating all the stale excuses in the same language as used by Madden regarding the need of "reducing the postal deficit." Hence we may be sure that Madden is but the office boy, the tool in the hands of much stronger forces behind the throne. A close examination of this portion of the message fails to show anything about Senator Mason using his frank to bend out thousands of advertisements for a champagne manufacturer. Perhaps this was an oversight, or the champagne may have deserved extensive circulation.

On Wednesday, December 16th, the debate between Comrades Hardy and Saunders brought out a good crowd, and a very interesting discussion followed. Thursday, December 17th, Comrade Thomas J. Morgan's lecture was much appreciated. On Saturday, December 18th, the Dramatic Club had a good house, considering the weather, and made a grand hit with a new Socialist play which many in the audience wished to have repeated on some more favorable night, to a full house. The songs and recitations between acts were as good as you hear at the down town shows. On Sunday Comrade Strickland stirred the comrades up to further action in the good work. On Sunday, December 20th, Comrade Wentworth speaks. Thursday, December 23rd, Comrade Thomas J. Morgan delivers his lecture to the ladies. On Christmas and New Year's nights there will be no lectures.

Canada Welcomes Wilshire.

Because H. Gayford Wilshire got after the syndicates, the trusts and combine of the United States in his magazine, printed in the interests of Socialism, his publication was placed on the blacklist of the United States mails and the usual courtesies of a second-class rate disallowed him. Mr. Wilshire sought to have his wrongs righted with out avail, and then came to Toronto, where the publication will be carried on.

Mr. Wilshire is a millionaire. He is a millionaire who is not after another million. He is a millionaire Socialist—out after the trusts to the death. "Banished to Canada" is the way he puts it. "Banished to Canada" from a so called free country to continue his legal calling under the flag of Britain and reign of King Edward."

He is the owner and publisher of Wilshire's magazine, formerly published in New York, and a monthly which has been widely circulated in the United States, and which has for its slogan, "Let the nation own the trusts, and not the trusts own the nation."—Toronto Daily Star.

SOCIALISM IN CANADA.

Ontario Comrades Meet in Convention and Prepare for a Campaign of Education.

The Socialists of the Province of Ontario met in convention in Toronto on Thanksgiving day, about seventy delegates being present from all parts of Ontario, there being twenty-five leagues in various parts of the province. The chief work of the organization was the formation of a central organization to carry on the work which has been done in a temporary and semi-organized condition in the past. The convention resulted in an executive committee of nine members being formed, together with a permanent secretary who is to be an ex-officio member of the executive committee. These officers are as follows: Provincial Chairman, James Simpson, Toronto; Vice-chairman, R. N. Price, St. Thomas; Secretary, G. Weston Wrigley, Toronto; Treasurer, Mrs. Darwin, Toronto; J. Charles Spencer, London; John R. Brown, Hamilton; J. D. Mulholland, Brantford; R. Powers, Orillia; J. D. Munro, Kaga-wong; William Wilkinson, Ingersoll. This executive will draft a constitution and platform and submit it to a referendum vote of the local leagues, name decided upon being the Ontario Socialist League. It was proposed that the organization be called the Ontario Socialist Party, but as the work of the organization will be largely educational for the coming year, and as it is proposed to organize a "Canadian Socialist Party" next September, Comrade John Spargo of New York, who was present, recommended the choice of the name chosen. Comrade Spargo addressed the convention several times, and his presence was of great value to the comrades here, who had had no previous experience in organized Socialist work. Comrade Spargo is making a five weeks' tour of Ontario addressing meetings on behalf of the Socialist movement.

The accompanying resolutions, were carried by the convention without division on a rising vote: That this meeting of the Ontario Socialist League in convention assembled, declares its adherence to the principles of International Socialism, and extends hearty greetings to the Socialists of all lands who are working for the realization of the great ideal of a Co-operative Commonwealth, through the social ownership and control of all the means of wealth production, distribution and exchange.

"That we extend to our comrades of the Socialist Party of the United States our very hearty and fraternal greetings and express our desire that the very closest possible relations be maintained between the Socialists of the two main countries of the American continent." The convention also took action towards giving a better support to Citizen and Country, which during the past three years has been published as a Canadian Socialist weekly. The paper has not been very liberally supported by Canadian Socialists, but the convention took aggressive action by arranging for an official department in the paper, and by urging the Socialist leagues and comrades throughout Canada to take shares of stock in the Co-operative Company which publishes the paper with the aim in view of gradually making the paper the national party organ. 1st and 3d Ward Branches.

Our Branch has rented Frederic's Hall, 180 E. 23d Street (near State), the first and third Friday of every month. Comrade F. W. Knox will be the speaker December 25th, 8 p.m.

We respectfully call attention of other branches to the fact that our branch has settled in full for all Fall Festival tickets.

We also constantly keep on hand twenty six month Call cards. These cards, which are paid for when we receive them from the Call, are offered for sale to our members at each business meeting, and others are bought to take their place. We always have twenty on hand.

REICE WABERROUGH, Organizer. A smoker will be given at the Socialist Temple, 130 E. Western Avenue, on Tuesday, 24th inst., at 8 p.m. Jail program—refreshments—all comrades invited. Proceeds go to Temple which is now in process of building.

Through lack of space a large amount of matter for publication is held over until next week.

Guilds-Trades Unions-Socialism.

Extracts from Lectures Delivered Before School of Social Economy by Mrs. May Wood Simons.

The guild played an important part no doubt in the early history of communities. Howell in his Trade Unionism says: "It protected the rights of members, avenging their wrongs, extending their privileges, fostering their interests and otherwise exercising a beneficial and restraining influence when brute force was in the ascendant and law and public institutions were in their infancy."

The guild system has passed through three phases, the religious, governmental and industrial. In some guilds all three of these were combined, other guilds were more distinctively one than the other, while at certain periods nearly all the guilds exist. That time manifested one of these characteristics most prominently. The early guilds were more especially religious and social, later while still having charge of religious ceremonies, etc., the function of the guild became more decidedly governmental, and finally retaining still a social and governmental side the guild was particularly an industrial organization.

It was from these early religious guilds that the town guild developed. As early as 800, records show their existence. These were guilds into which the burghers were united by royal permission for purposes of social regulation. Into the hands of the town guild practically all the government of the town or township was centered. It exercised judicial authority, observed law and order generally and helped to restrain any undue exaction of the barons.

For a rude way these town guilds were representative, the aldermen and wardens being chosen on the elective principle. Membership in the guild required that the person should be a free man and usually a landed proprietor.

W. Y. Ashley in his English Economic History says: "The Merchant Guild was a society formed primarily for the purpose of obtaining and maintaining the privilege of carrying on trade, a privilege which implied the possession of a monopoly of trade in each town by the guild brethren as against its other inhabitants, and also liberty to trade in other towns."

The first mention found of the Merchant Guilds is in 1081. In one point the Merchant and the succeeding craft guilds closely resemble each other. Although each member within certain limits was free to follow his own interest as he thought best, nevertheless the stronger feeling was that the trade or industry was the common interest of all, and that each was therefore bound to submit to such regulations as could be shown were for the good of all.

At this time, the middle of the 12th century, there was no distinction in the guild between the man who traded in cloth and the man who made it. For the most part the members of the Merchant guild were now property owners. As industry advanced and men who were landless began to come into the towns more, they engaged in the crafts. The merchants now traded in materials or the products of manufacture, and they sought to deprive the craftsmen of their share in the regulation of their own trade. The craftsmen drawn together by a common interest began to form craft guilds. Ashley says: "Craft guilds were associations of all the artisans engaged in a particular industry in a particular town for certain common purposes." Their appearance begins the second stage in the history of industry, the transition from the family system to the artisan system.

Before this time there existed no great number of artisans, or that is to say, no body of men whose time was devoted principally to particular manufactures. This was because the home or the monastery were for the most part for the most part self-sufficing, the labor of the group supplying the needs of the group. With the craft guild came the "division of labor" and the growth of a larger circle of exchange.

The modern trade union has few points in common with the ancient guild.

The guild was an organization of producers who possessed the tools and materials with which they worked, and were associating not for the purpose of obtaining a greater share of the things they produced, for they received the full returns of their labor, but to regulate trade and manufacturing, the quality and quantity of goods, and also the number of laborers in a given trade.

The trade union is a combination of men dispossessed of tools and material, who sell their labor power and receive in return but a fraction of what they produce. Hence the aim of the first was to perfect and dispose of their produce, of the second to receive a greater share of their produce. The latter alone is an association against exploitation. "We might say that the first trade union was established in 1786 by the cloth workers of Yorkshire at Leeds under the name of a Friendly Society. But it was only a transitory association, as were all others of this time, called forth by some particular occasion and dissolving as soon as the object was accomplished." "Up to 1830 was in reality merely a tip-off transition. This was necessarily an combination of laborers were well-impoverished. The economists with their view of freedom of contract denounced any such unions of laborers, understanding that they were masters on the one hand and indulging the rights of laborers to sell their labor power as they pleased on the other. The Combination Laws that reflected these ideas and made impossible such combinations were only repealed in 1834. In 1834, then, trade unionism had its birth in England.

Up to 1830 the history of the trade union was quite uniform. It was characterized by the large sums spent in benefits, by a moderate use of the strike and by a lack of interest in politics. It was not believed that any benefit could be secured through working for legislation. The old trade union was organized by separate trades, that is to say, trade autonomy existed.

Since 1830 a new phase has been entered upon by at least a few trade unions. The funds devoted to benefits have been somewhat decreased and the strike fund increased. The strike has come to be used more frequently as a weapon, and in this the union is once more a "fighting machine." Politics are not shut entirely out of the discussions of the unions, and most noticeable of all is the growth slowly but surely of a realization of the class struggle and a gradual to be sure, but perceptible, drawing toward the position of the Socialist.

Again, the trade union with the growth of industry has in a few cases begun to take on a new form. The new organization is industrial in character. Before this each trade was organized separately, for the trade was greater than the industry. Now the industry has absorbed or whipped out the importance of the trade, and unions have become industrial, that is, all working in a certain industry are associated together in one great union. The trade union has been a product of capitalism and was born of necessity. Where labor recognized the helplessness of the individual to meet the strength of capital alone, it sought by combination to cope with this new force. But the difficulties of labor increased when the power of capital to perfect its organization became evident.

In the two great English speaking countries, there has been time for far less sympathy between these two labor organizations than in the United States. No doubt one reason that the unionist has taken but slowly to a political party has been the fact that in England the first trade societies were formed before the workingman had received the franchise, and being organized as pure and simple trade societies they have thought by these means to accomplish their object. When unionism grew up in the United States the same organization was introduced, although the Americans had the ballot.

The Socialist sees clearly that trade unions are helpless to solve the problem of labor today when the interest of labor and capital is international and when cheap unskilled labor can in most industries fill the places of union men. Many a unionist must dispossess himself of the idea that he can still rise into the ranks of the employing class, and that the line of classes drawn by the Socialist is imaginary. Finally the Socialist today must see the trade unions as fertile fields in which to sow their seed. These are the thinkers for the most part of the laboring class and as the unions are forced into politics see that these politics are the politics of the laboring class—Socialist politics.

In Loving Embrace

and militia will protect public and disperse strikers, and the Socialist propaganda will go ahead just as if no such body as the National Civic Federation had ever existed. The chairman of this conference has ventured to prophesy that its outcome will be a permanent body of arbitrators and conciliators with power to bind and limit the many minor disputes that may hereafter arise between the laboring masses, Capital and Labor. We will place our prediction against him, and await the result with confidence.

at 1748 Diversey Blvd., for North Town, at 15 N. Clark street.

All members of the club in the division will please attend the above mentioned Ward and Town conventions for the purpose of electing a ticket.

The meeting at Social Turner Hall was small but successful. Comrades Kees and Sand led a discussion on the subject, "Does the extension of the power of the city, state or national government lead to Socialism, or does industrial evolution?" It was quite an interesting meeting for the Socialists present as well as the strangers.

Literature was sold and a collection taken up.

The next meeting will be at Senfelder Hall, 145 Wells street, on Sunday at 3 p. m. The speaker will be J. B. Smiley.

All comrades should immediately turn in all money for tickets both for the ball and the debate, so all bills can be settled.

SOUTH SIDE.

Town conventions will be held as follows:

Town of Lake, comprising the 29th, 30th, 31st, and 32d wards, at Socialist Hall, 73 W. 63d street, January 7th, 1902. Town of Hyde Park, taking in the 6th, 7th, 8th and part of 33d wards, at 642 E. 4th street, January 13th, South Town, 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th wards, at Luxemburger Hall, 2325 Halsted street. The town of Calumet will be taken care of by the Pullman branch. In each case the representation is five delegates from each ward. Branches are requested to elect delegates and furnish each with credentials signed by secretary and organizer. Aldermanic conventions should be held before date of town conventions a candidate for alderman nominated, and full name and address sent to division organizer. In each ward a campaign committee of three active members should be elected, to act both as local and in conjunction with the other committees in the respective towns, as a town campaign committee. It is the intention to divide the number of signatures required in petitions equally between the wards, and to have a full ticket in the field for the spring campaign, including constables.

A new branch in the north end of the 33d ward (Grand Crossing) is being organized. 23 members are already on the list, and on Monday, December 2nd, a mass meeting will be held at the Grand Crossing Turner Hall, 75th street and Dubois avenue, with Comrades Branch and Berlyn as speakers, when the branch will be formally organized. All Call readers are particularly invited to be present.

The latest from headquarters is a song and music school under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Finsterbach, from the Fifth Ward Branch. The school meets every Saturday afternoon.

A program for the Saturday and Sunday evening meetings for January and February will be announced next week. The Organization Committee has changed its meetings to every second and fourth Sunday morning at 731 W. 63d street. Every branch organizer and assistant organizer should be present next Sunday as very important business is to be transacted.

DISTRICT NO. 4.

Only two branches being represented at our last meeting it was decided to adjourn it for one week. Notices were sent to all the branches to have their delegates present at the meeting next Sunday, 10 a. m., at Oxford Hall, corner California and Elston avenues. Calling of ward conventions and other important matters will be attended to at all comrades of the 26th and 27th wards have a voice and vote on the proceedings and are invited to attend.

SAM ROBBINS, Organizer.

Last week an unfortunate street car conductor was ground to death under the wheels of a south engine on a railway crossing at South Halsted street. He had left the car and run forward so as to signal to the motor-man as to whether the track was clear. While thus engaged in looking after the safety of his passengers, the engine passed over his body, mutilating it beyond recognition, as the newspaper reported stated. His gold watch was flattened out on the rails, his pockets ripped open and the company's money which he had collected as fare scattered along the track. For an hour after the accident, says the news item, a crowd of men and boys searched the vicinity looking for nickels and dimes. It is remarkable the amount of eagerness displayed by the public in seizing every opportunity to defraud a corporation of its earnings, and it is only to this well-known fact of human nature that such an exhibition can be attributed. In these times of unrelenting prosperity nickels and dimes are of course of no great importance in themselves unless procured under peculiar circumstances such as above stated.

Not for Laborers' Eyes

Chicago Real Estate Board Gets Out an Attractive Bait for Capitalist Investors. Continually Refers to the Cheapness of Human Commodities as the Central Inducement. No Cant About Brotherhood or Identical Interests of "Labor and Capital". Facilities for Exploitation the Main Theme. Hypocrisy Laid Aside When There is No Need for It. An Eye Opener for Workingmen Who are Curious to See How Their Masters Regard Them.

Once more the Workers' Call is able to present to its readers some choice selections from a publication that was never intended to reach the working class. The Chicago Real Estate Board recently issued a beautifully illustrated and bound pamphlet on "Chicago as an Industrial Center." As these gentlemen are very much interested in the increase in land values in Chicago, and as it is the coming of new industries more than anything else that contributes to this upward movement, they are very anxious to induce other capitalists to invest their money in the establishment of industries in Chicago. So this book was prepared setting forth the advantages which Chicago offers to capitalists. Now as this is to be a little heart to heart talk from one set of capitalists to another, there was no need of putting on any mask. It is all very well to palaver about the brotherhood of labor and capital when talking to the reporters for the daily papers, or when holding "Arbitration Congresses" with a lot of labor leaders, because this kind of talk is cheap and makes the laborers feel good, and, most important of all, keeps him from doing any such foolish thing as voting for himself instead of for his boss.

But when the Chicago Real Estate Board is speaking to the capitalists of the outside world in a document which no workers will ever see anyhow, why not tell the truth? So, instead of talking about labor as a brother, we find that, as the capitalists have always said, to the capitalist labor is a commodity to be purchased as cheaply as possible. This is the way the capitalists of Chicago advise their brother capitalists concerning the cheapness of human flesh and blood in this city:

"Abundance and variety of any article a purchaser is seeking are most desirable characteristics of any market. This is true of LABOR as of any COMMODITY. It is easier to buy cloth in a big cloth market than an awkward one, easier to buy iron in a broad iron market than a narrow one. A manufacturer desiring operatives for a factory can do better and supply his wants more quickly at one of the great centers of population than in a sparsely settled country. The supply of labor in Chicago is practically unlimited."

Sounds a good deal like an advertisement of an old-time slave auction, does it not? Save this document. The time will come when it will be produced to show the barbarous condition of capitalism.

But let us look further at this beautiful "souvenir" of Chicago:

"As the great railroad center of America, into whose United States 600,000 immigrants poured in 1900, Chicago has another advantage than cheap freight tariffs. These ten of thousands of foreigners landed at eastern ports, for the most part are seeking the opportunities of the great west. Chicago, as the gateway to this, having already a tremendous foreign population of its own, is a counter attraction to this CHEAP labor which would pass through it. According to his race and his tastes, the immigrant may find here the neighborhood provincialism that he left behind him on the other side of the sea, or taking the city broadly he may have that cosmopolitan horizon which he dreamed. Blocked into sections that might have been lifted from continental Europe, the city abounds an almost unassimilated population represented by a score of tongues, and from each of these the mill and factory are drawing that unskilled labor which is so lightly on the tongue, but so deeply at the base of industrial progress."

In this disposition of foreign peoples to colonize, Chicago uses the perennial source of its CHEAP labor. The city is in touch with the country's immigration and as long as Chicago's demands for labor shall hold, the source of supply may be counted upon not to run dry.

"That this item of labor to remain CHEAP and available is capable of proof. All the environments and conditions of Chicago show no more. From more propitiousness these foreign elements will center here, each to itself and refusing to mix. Its scale of living, in great measure, will conform to its former conditions in Europe. This in Chicago, will be found every because of the cheapness of food and the scale of rents. Cheap and rapid transportation have put wide areas within reach of the laboring classes, and the possibility of a cottage home in Chicago is better than it is in many cities of one-fifth the size."

"All these conditions make for a natural laboring class in Chicago—a class that may keep well-fed, and housed and warmed to the point of comfort and at the same time without being under the necessity of greater earning capacity."

"Such a condition in the labor market cannot be misunderstood by the manufacturer. One of the first problems is to meet the needs for rough unskilled labor, and the assurance of a continual supply of this force is vital. This labor, under many circumstances and conditions, is uncertain and migratory. It will not continue in a provincial city. It demands the bustle and whirl of a metropolitan life, with its attendant amusements and distractions. It must have its necessary habitat and an environment to its likes before it settles to the JOG-TROT OF EXISTENCE IN A CONTENTMENT THAT SEEKS NOTHING BETTER."

Then how do the workers of Chicago like this? Have they still manhood enough to kick against it? If not, they still deserve to be ranked with iron and cloth and sheep as "commodities" to be purchased of their masters:

"Looked at from the point of view of the manufacturer, no one feature of Chicago stands out with more convincing force than does the fact that it is the home of CHEAP LABOR, that PATIENT, PLODDING DRUDGERY, which even in this age of automatic machinery is still as vital as the BASIS-WORK of industrial progress. For this class of workers Chicago offers home and environment of such a nature as to make CHEAP, unskilled labor not only possible, but logical and certain."

"There has been a cry against tenement conditions in Chicago, but it has been more against possible future contingencies than against evils that already exist. As compared with other crowded cities, the laboring man of Chicago has more of a home atmosphere in his life than can be found elsewhere. He has more room, more light, and better air. If in some of the slum districts there is over-crowding, it must be taken for granted that as against this possible evil, there are compensations to offset in favor of the congestion."

"With nearly 200 square miles of territory, all within more or less easy reach of transportation, Chicago offers every opportunity against congestion. It compares favorably with cities of 200,000 population in affording cottages and even garden plots for the laborer. With a soil on all sides that will produce vegetables in abundance, the kitchen gardens of some of the poorer sections of the city are a resource in themselves, far out of proportion to their appearance. In some sections where this gardening has been conducted to the best advantage, it has been figured that the returns for square yards of soil through a season run into dollars."

"In the winter season, when the industries of the city are working at greatest capacity, these sources of supply are needed by the sufferer element which comes to Chicago to spend the winter. Not only do these men come from the Great Lakes, but men come from the fields of the North-west. There is a tramp element in this, but thousands of them may be honest workers, filling in the winter season with each employment as they can find. They have GOOD INFLUENCE UPON THE LABOR MARKET FROM THE POINT OF VIEW OF THE MANUFACTURER."

"On this question of labor for the manufacturer, however, there is another element that is of quite as much significance and consequence. It is the metropolitan and cosmopolitan atmosphere of the city."

"It is no new thing for a manufacturer in a small city to discover that while he may be admirably situated with reference to raw materials and markets, he cannot keep his mill men. The provincial life wears on them. It lacks excitement and directions."

"With respect to this want in the hearts of the toilers, Chicago fills every exacting. There is something in the swing of its life and activities that is pleasing to the laborer. If the workman be a foreigner of any nationality, he may find his antileague where, among people of his own nationality, he may make home."

"In general, summing up the advantages of Chicago as the home of the laborer, these advantages apply as specifically and with as much force to all classes of married people. Every city within a thousand miles of it is a country town in comparison. Chicago is a self-sufficient center of every interest which holds a cosmopolitan population. This fact alone is an AVAILABLE ASSET to a MANUFACTURER, simply by its putting a premium upon living in Chicago as more desirable than anywhere else in the great range of North Central States."

"What have you done to help out the poor of London? Have you seen a lot of cash in The Workers' Call? If not, why not?"

Officially Exploded.

The official auditor of the post office department has just closed the books of the postal service for the fiscal year ended June 30 last, something over three months being always required to balance the ledger accounts with 77,000 postmasters and make all the other settlements required with the numerous branches of the system. The results of the year's business are as follows: Receipts, $11,421,122.30; expenditures, $11,444,437.43; net deficit (including losses by fire, etc.), $23,315.13. The deficit for the fiscal year is thus shown to be less than $24,000,000, and about $1,500,000 smaller than for the preceding year. Owing to the extension of rural free delivery and other augmented appropriations in every department, the expenses of the service were $5,300,000 greater than the preceding year, but the continuation of the nation's prosperity raised the receipts more than $3,350,000.

There has been a steady decrease in postal deficits during the past ten years. In round figures they were: $11,500,000 in 1897; $9,000,000 in 1898; $6,500,000 in 1899; $5,500,000 in 1900; and $4,000,000 in 1901. If this percentage of decrease in the deficit should continue it would be entirely wiped out within three years.

So the deficit excuse was all a bluff after all, and would have not been even an excuse in a few years. Wonder what reason they would give then for shutting out Socialist papers?

Nemesis Arrived.

H. Gaylord Wilshire, who is now publishing his Socialist weekly from Toronto, by reason of recent United States postal restrictions, tells of a meeting of orange growers held on one occasion in California. The meeting was called to protest against the freight rates established by the railways in the West. Mr. Wilshire rose after several ineffective remedies had been proposed, and said the only remedy for the entire trouble was that the nation should take over the railways and give to those who patronized the service the advantage to be obtained therefrom.

The chairman ruled him out of order, as no politics were allowed in the discussions of the association.

The sequel was enacted in the following year, when the former chairman was declared a bankrupt, and he toured the State getting signatures to a petition for "Public Ownership of Railways."—Toronto Daily Star.

Is Used as Such.

Evidently the president of the Illinois Manufacturers' Association knows a good thing when he sees it, as may be judged by his "lay editorials" in last Sunday's Chicago Tribune, which begin as follows:

"Considering the Savior as human only and applying a strictly business test to the value of his life, he was the GREATEST COMMERCIAL FACTOR ever produced by the human race."

Here we have the capitalist conception of Christ—the apotheosis of Rent, Interest and Profit—the divinity of the dollar—the highest ideal which the capitalist mind is capable of comprehending. As the bourgeois must create a material world after the image of its own social conditions, so it must also create a Christ which is of necessity a "spiritual" reflection of those conditions. Such a conception is exactly what might be expected from the mouthpiece of a Manufacturer's Association.

Purpose in Loose Definition.

What the near future has in store for the Socialist propaganda may be judged from the "anti-anarchy" bills that are now being framed for the consideration of Congress. One of these makes it felony "to advise or teach the overthrow of the government." It can readily be seen how this elastic clause can be interpreted by a capitalist judge to include the advocacy of Socialism. The "overthrow of government" may easily be twisted into a charge against those who urge the laborers to grasp political power for their class, which of course necessitates the displacement of capitalist rule. Marx declared that the capitalists see in the cessation of their class supremacy, the destruction of all society, and it is quite probable that we shall see this belief acted upon before long under the pretext of "suppressing anarchy."

If you cannot talk your neighbor into socialism, why not get the Workers' Call to help you with the job?

PLAN OF THE PROPOSED NEW SOCIALIST TEMPLE.

The picture on this page will give some idea of the Temple that the Chicago Socialists have decided to build. Of course the exact plans and specifications cannot be worked out until a lot is secured, and that cannot be done until more cash is in sight. But the members of the Building Committee are practically agreed on a three-story building not less than fifty feet wide, and from 100 to 150 feet deep according for offices or could be utilized for committee rooms.

The third floor may be divided into four suites of apartments, which with steam heat should bring a rental of $15 to $20 a month each, that is to say, not less than $720 a year for the floor. This would provide for the interest on $14,000, if it should be necessary to borrow so much, but we propose to come as near as possible to paying cash, so that any income from the building may be available for the assistance of the Socialist Party.

The partitions in the date on the third floor can be built in such a way that they can be removed later at slight expense if the space is needed for the use of the Socialist party or the Co-operative.

An already announced, the Socialist Temple is to be the property of the Socialist Co-operative of Chicago. This is an "association for pecuniary profit," organized under the laws of Illinois. No one but a member of the Socialist Party can become a voting member of the Socialist Co-operative, but if an amendment submitted by the directors is ratified by the members at the meeting December 28th, anyone can become to the depth of the lot secured. They are also agreed on an auditorium to meet with parties, about 1,000 people.

As to further details I cannot speak officially for the committee as a whole, but will venture to explain a number of suggestions that have been considered favorably, but which are still subject to modification.

Starting at the bottom, there will of course be a dry and well ventilated basement which can be utilized for a co-operative bakery, for storing surplus goods, for a shipping room for our country trade, and possibly for a gymnasium, bowling alley, etc.

The auditorium will no doubt occupy the larger portion of the first and second stories. It will be in the rear so as to be removed from the noise of the street, and will be reached by a lift passage, on each side of which will be a store. One of these stores will, of course, be used for the grocery of the Co-operative. The other will be used for a restaurant or for some other department to be established, or if preferred, may be rented for the first year or two.

The front portion of the second floor on the side of the hall way will be available for small meetings such as would not require the auditorium itself. The other side could be rented as an associate member by paying the membership fee of $5.00, and by joining the Party later can be enrolled as a voting member of the Socialist Co-operative.

A list of all the active members of the Co-operative will be published in the Workers' Call next week.

The following list includes all cash contributions to the building fund received up to December 17, 1901. It does not include pledges of cash to the amount of about $200, nor pledges of labor to the amount of several thousand dollars which have been made:

John H. Hanson..... 5.00
A. A. Wiggins..... 5.00
Wm. C. Morgan..... 5.00
J. N. Martin..... 5.00
H. Rand..... 5.00
M. Miller..... 5.00
Geo. D. Herron..... 5.00
Carrie Rand Herron..... 5.00
M. Pederson..... 5.00
C. E. Grellin..... 5.00
A. K. Anderson (additional)..... 5.00
Frank Hoecker..... 5.00
A. Davidson..... 5.00
Paul Kargus..... 5.00
C. J. Peterson..... 5.00
W. E. McDermott..... 5.00
F. Boersma..... 5.00

Total..... $103.00
Is your name in either list? If not why not? You want to see the Socialist Temple a fact. Then join the Socialist Co-operative, buy your supplies there instead of spending your money with the enemies of your class, and give what you can to the building fund.

We have prepared a little booklet entitled THE SOCIALIST TEMPLE OF CHICAGO. It contains a full explanation of the project, with a price list of the groceries to be had at the Socialist Co-operative, and blank application for membership. It will be mailed to any address on application. If you can put several copies where they will be read, say so and they will be sent.

Comrade J. W. Hauserman has been duly authorized to accept for contributions. Don't wait for him to call on you, but if he calls, treat him well.

On Sunday, December 29th, 3 p. m., there will be a special business meeting of the members of the Socialist Co-operative for the purpose of amending the by-laws, as explained on the third page of last week's Call, and of electing a permanent building committee.

Came to this meeting if possible; if not, write to me at 18 Fifth Avenue, and get the booklet explaining the whole plan.

What's in a Name?

Mr Schwab Promotes "Labor" in an Address Before the Bankers' Club. Says It Holds "First Mortgage" on the Bonds of the Steel Trust. Capitalist Press Recognizes the Value of the New Discovery. How Words are Manipulated in the Interests of the Exploiting Classes. Workingmen Should Foreclose on That Mortgage Through the Socialist Battle.

In his great work on 'capitalist production' Marx relates an incident which occurred in England, in which a Commission of Inquiry had been appointed to investigate the workings of nomadic bands of agricultural laborers, mostly women and children, who wandered from place to place selling their services to the capitalist farmers, and who were commonly known as "the gang." Facts tending to show that "the gang" was lowering the moral tone of the community through their peculiar methods of earning a living, were unearthed in such abundance that those who benefited by their exploitation grew alarmed lest the system might be abolished.

"To one of these gentlemen," says Marx, "the taste of his rent was so grateful that he indignantly declared to the Commission of Inquiry that the whole hubbub was only due to the name of the system. If instead of 'gang' it were called the 'Agricultural Juvenile Industrial Self-supporting Association,' everything would be all right."

If Shakespeare could, propound to the modern exploiter his famous query of "What's in a name?" he might be truthfully answered that names are sometimes exceedingly valuable to disguise from the working class the fact that they are being robbed of their labor and product. And in inventing and applying names for this purpose the modern capitalist shows an ingenuity that is little short of marvelous.

Anyone who has ever amused himself by reading reports of the proceedings of such conferences as the one recently held in New York, can hardly have failed to have noticed the way the words "labor" and "capital" are manipulated. Sometimes the former stands for the working class and at other times is used in its literal sense. The word "capital" is also made to denote means of production or those who own them, as circumstances may require. The object of this ambiguity and looseness of definition is obvious. It serves the purpose of confusing and deceiving the working class as to the real relation between exploiter and exploited.

Every Socialist at least knows that such phrases as "the partnership of capital and labor," "capital and labor are mutually dependent," etc., etc., are mainly invented to justify the existence of capital but of the capitalist. But these expressions have been somewhat overworked of late, and are beginning to be regarded with indifference, if not suspicion, by the workers. It is about time to invent a new relation between "capital and labor" in which the latter may be moved up a peg or two. The dignity of "labor" seems to demand even a better position than a mere "partnership" of "capital."

And the hour has brought forth the man. Mr. Charles Schwab, in his address before the Chicago Bankers' Club, paid the following "tribute to labor" as reported in the press:

"Many people imagine that the bonds of the United States Steel Company are a first mortgage on its great properties. They are not. If you give the subject a moment's thought you will see that the first great MORTGAGE is that owed to labor. The Corporation pays labor $10,000,000 per year, equivalent to a mortgage debt of $3,000,000,000 on the property."

Nothing more about that, is there? "Labor" is superior to "capital." It holds first mortgage, the bondholders coming second. How the assembly bankers must have enjoyed Mr. Schwab's concept when they "gave the subject a moment's thought" as the speaker suggested.

It's a new one, certainly, and Mr. Schwab is entitled to full credit for its discovery. Even the capitalist press recognizes this, for one journal commenting editorially on the matter, says: "We doubt if organized labor has ever taken this view of the bonds of the great steel company. It is doubtful also if any other head of an industrial organization ever publicly conceded that labor has the first mortgage on the properties of the corporation."

It is doubtful indeed, if "labor" had only known its superior position at the time of the great steel strike, it might have invoked the law to come to its assistance against the ordinary bondholders of the corporation. It might even now demand against permitting the latter to extract $10,000,000 annually in the shape of profits. Holders of first mortgages don't as a rule allow themselves to be exploited in that fashion.

Nevertheless, though the "tribute" which Mr. Schwab has paid to labor in the avowed, consists merely in a new name, "first mortgage holder" sounds more than "wage earner," and infinitely more than "labor," a companion which represents the "tribute" paid to "labor" by those nasty Socialists whose pernicious activity no doubt to some extent stimulated Mr. Schwab's inventive genius in discovering this new position.

Change the name and everything will be all right," as the British landlord said about the "gang." The taste of profits is quite as sweet to Mr. Schwab as the taste of rent was to the English labor skinner.

"First mortgage holders!" That's what you are, workingmen. Mr. Schwab has "publicly conceded" it. It is doubtful indeed if you have ever taken this view of the matter, but it is not too late to act upon it. Rise up the business situation, and you cannot help concluding that it will be to your interests to foreclose on that mortgage instantly. You can serve the necessary legal documents upon Mr. Schwab and his class with Socialist ballots at the next election. If you are really first mortgage holders you might as well have the game as the name.

Ad. That no Capitalist Paper Would Accept, With Remains Standing Here Until Further Notice.

By request of the Socialist Machinery Club, the following letter is published in our columns, no daily paper in the city being willing to insert the information it contains, at any price: International Association of Machinists. San Francisco Lodge No. 61, San Francisco, Dec. 17th, 1901. To the Order Everywhere—Greeting: San Francisco Lodge, No. 61, International Association of Machinists, earnestly request you to insert the following ad. in your local and labor papers.

"The strike in San Francisco and the Pacific Coast is still on, and 3,350 iron workers are yet fighting for a nine hour day and better conditions."

We request that you insert the foregoing ad. every time you see any statement to the contrary in any of your daily papers. We hope that you will do your best to have the foregoing fact placed before the public in your locality, and when the strike is all you will be officially notified.

The situation as it exists in San Francisco and along the Pacific coast at the present time is that we have nearly two-thirds of the men who went on strike May 26th, 1901, for the shorter work-day, still out, and the employers are doing their utmost to get men to take the places of the men on strike, offering extra inducements and large wages, and we believe that if they can offer these conditions to men whom they desire to take the place of the men on strike, they can certainly grant the terms asked by the strikers.

Trusting you will give this your earliest attention, and endeavor to all means at your command to prevent men workers from coming to this coast until you are officially notified of the settlement of the strike, we remain,

Faithfully,
M. C. CUSHEE,
CHAS. MELROSE,
T. H. VIVIAN,
Committee.

(This black letter ad. will be kept standing in our columns until official notification of the end of the strike is received. Ed.)

Advertise to Fertilize.

In reply to a critic who had taken him to task for his alleged advertising "proclivities," Comrade H. Gaylord Wilshire explains in the characteristic letter below published:

Toronto, Canada, Dec. 28, 1901.

Dear Comrade,—Yours of the 26th at hand, and note that you style my going into the advertising of myself a "proclivity." As a matter of fact, I have no more proclivity for advertising myself than a man would have for the smell of his own armpit. If he is fertile in order to get before the public, to some advertising; and it is not more agreeable for me to do it in this way than it is for me to fertilize an orange orchard. Theoretically, the way to run an orange orchard is to set out an orange tree and reap plenty. Practically, the way to do it is to spread manure, but that is no indication that a man prefers scattering manure to reaping plenty. I suppose, however, it is custom for me to try to explain this thing to you or to any one else, because everyone seems to misunderstand me, although I have been writing from the very first number of the Challenge exactly what I have been trying to do. The proposition is that the end is Socialism, and the means by which we get people into Socialism is inconsequential. If "fertilizing" the public mind with advertising is the way to stimulate it, I propose doing it, notwithstanding the fact that I have particular proclivity or taste for manure. H. GAYLORD WILSHIRE.

Monopolies and Trusts

By E. M. Wheelock.

The worst, most obvious, most hopeless characteristic of the closing days of our cycle is the stupendous accumulation of private fortunes in the hands of a few, and the corresponding growth of pauperism, misery, political and industrial slavery on the part of the many. Chicago holds more notorious and greedy millionaires than the whole country contained forty years ago, and the like is true of every one of our chief cities and congested centers. Beside banquets, Bradley-Martin balls, suicides, infanticides, divorces, murders and despair, increase step by step with the widening of the chasm between the rich and the poor. These great modern fortunes are made—not by honest production, but by bribery, class legislation, and special privilege. They are born of monopoly and the iniquitous robbery of labor. Millions of toiling workers go every winter with scanty food, clothing and fire, that the proceeds of their ill-paid labor may help the coffers of the wealthy, speculative idle.

These struggles, heart-breaking facts, but there is also a mighty undercurrent—growing stronger every day—that is pulling the nation as with the silent force of gravitation, the other way. The power so surely at work to subjugate and crush, can be transformed and made to redeem the evil time. The economic conditions which are now the menace of our civilization, and the forces that are wrecking us, can be made to wait the ship of state safely into port. The day is at hand when a pauper will be as impossible as a millionaire. The very spirit of greed, is teaching us the wastefulness of blind competition. The lesson of our present national misery is being taught so well that it will never be forgotten or need a repetition. The very selfishness in human nature is teaching us the splendid economy of combination, the wise thrift of co-operation, and the financial soundness of the principles which underlie the monopolies and trusts. This lesson is being learned so well that all men will receive it—even the wayward man, though a fool.

The trusts are the sure pathway by which the nation is to go safely through the Red Sea of an outward and ruinous social system. The trusts have come to stay. Be sure of that; they have come to stay. The gigantic combinations of the present and future require them, and the enormous waste of competition is saved, for they mean combination and the union of interests. The movement is the outgrowth of natural conditions and is sure to continue until industrial activities are brought into a system of co-operation by the whole people for the benefit of the people. A trust is an unadvised good—only the whole people must own and operate it.

Any attempt to crush out, control or legislate against this movement by the politicians is hopelessly absurd. If you tax the trusts, they will increase the price of their products and make you pay the tax. If you put in force the Texas law that refuses them the courts to collect their bills, it will not effect them, for they will only sell for cash in advance, and will use this law as their excuse. They will thus get along without the law, the collection of debts and they will be found doing business as usual at the old stand. Why are we afraid to trust ourselves? The only thing we should fear is not the monopolies, but the fool-killer. The answer to the question, "What is to be done with the trusts?" is "RUN THEM." When the millions of workmen get their brains out of their stomachs and think, the question will soon be asked upon trees, the producer is now the industrial slave of the capitalist, but he has worked patiently and long to place himself there. He is a self-chosen and willing serf, for he who wears a fetter needs it, and he who bears a blow or a kick deserves it.

Put not your confidence in the pretended opposition to the trusts by politicians—most of whom hold stocks and bonds in them. The monopolies and trusts are here to stay. The day of small business has passed. There is no indication that it is ever going to be otherwise. Society is not going back to its primitive state. More and more perfect machinery is being developed, requiring capital in greater amounts to operate affairs, and the greater the capital, the fewer the people who will control it. Competition is dying and monopoly is being born, and the body man is highest as to that you have no choice. You have only the choice whether it shall be public or private monopoly. The reaction of the politician is to deceive and betray the people. The Reformer is canonized while living and consigned after death, but the American politician should be canonized all the time, dead or alive.

He who would destroy the trust by legislation must first do away with all the great machinery of civilization, and push human society back into the days of the stock trade, and the dark ages for a new. Trusts are not bad in themselves. They are the natural outgrowth of the industrial system that has been controlling the world since competitive greed became the motive of business life. Trusts help those who are on the inside. When the whole people stand on the inside, the whole people will receive benefit. Machinery has brought misery and starvation to the many because it is owned by the few; but machinery itself is not a curse; the curse is in private property in machinery. The world trembles, and trembles, what a thinker is to be. But these millions of toiling men are beginning to think at last.

and the politicians are greatly troubled. They know, but dare not say, that a delegated government is a failure, so the time has come for an epidemic of common sense.

Trusts are needed for arranging the industries of the world on a democratic basis. They do a work that in no other way could be done. The isolated and his product, is no longer able to exist against the better economies of the factory with machinery and power. The trust is, therefore, the natural growth of industry; it is here to stay and ought to stay, for surely none but the unwise would advocate the going back to the days of the stage and the freight train. The affairs of the earth are not traveling that way at present. Free the industries, make them equally the property of all. When all the people will have the benefit of the trust. This is where they will culminate. They are unconsciously doing the work that must be done before industrial liberty and equality can come to blessed mankind. We have achieved political liberty, through the trusts the people will gain industrial liberty. And then will man be truly free. Tomorrow the sweatshop will be as the old toll gate is now. We stand at the near end of commercial warfare and the beginning of economic peace. The trusts will continue to grow in number and power until the middle class is practically extinguished. In the very nature of things these forces must unite in one heretofore whole, and pass into collective ownership and control. No power on earth can arrest this process of economic transformation. Industrial despotism, with its masters and slaves; its pomp, pride and poverty; its thefts, murders and suicides; its brutal wars and sham-patriotism; its militarism and its common worship will and forever; and wage-slavery with its hell of daily and nightly horror, will take its place in history with the countless crimes of the past centuries.

Industry is in fact being largely socialized. It requires a hundred men to make a pair of shoes, and a thousand men to make a watch. The lonely worker has been displaced by co-operative methods. The machine has taken the place of hand-production, but the worst and wickedest feature is that the profits all go into the hands of the few who own the machine. When the devil sees that those who produce the world's wealth constitute the world's poverty, and describes the result to his wife he says: "The system is perfection; you cannot improve on that." In this contemplating our civilization, the devil is liable at any moment to laugh himself to death—then, perhaps, we shall improve.

With trusts, department stores, pools, syndicates, combines, monopolies, springing up in every branch of trade, with the small dealer pushed to the wall, with the poor getting poorer, the rich richer, with every passing day what are we to do? Economic slavery is a greater evil than chattel slavery, but shall we destroy the trust and take a long step backward in civilization? Shall we destroy the telegraph and have the work done by messengers? Shall we destroy the railroads and have the work done by teamsters? Shall we destroy our manifold machinery, and have the work of the world done by hand? No. Let us retain the trust, the telegraph, the machinery, the railroad, the department store, but let the whole people own, operate and control them. Then there would be no paupers and no millionaires, and all would have opportunity to earn a living. It is coming and those who are wise would have it come through evolution rather than through revolution; thus the steps of today are the accepted utilities of tomorrow. Open your eyes and your nightmares will vanish.

The great inventions, now used to subjugate the masses, bespeak the opening of a new and grand era of progress. Motors of every desirable form, for every conceivable use, will soon be at the command of man, and human drudgery will pass away. The social chaos of today is the earnest before birth, and when the whole people see the advantage of universal co-operation the hell of misery which comprises existence now will be wiped out. Men are haunted by two phantasms—poverty in this world and hell in the next. Justice in industry and truth in religion would send both phantasms back to their graves. Robbery, by class legislation and the cunning brain of the money gamblers, has been established so long, and so completely that many have come to regard it as the natural and inevitable condition of man and they despair of ever seeing it ended. It seems to them that the triumph of the money power was never so absolute and unmovable as it is today, and that the enslavement of the labor was never so complete. And so it appears on the surface, but seen beneath that surface, in the great undercurrent of human destiny, it looks wholly different. There the foundations of the competitive system are now rotting and crumbling away, and its keystone dislodged.

The beginning of the end of competition appeared with the formation of the first trust—which is capital combining to save itself from competition. This means the competitive system is over with and ended. It means that is order to live, universal co-operation must be established. It means that whether we will or no, the old business institutions will no longer serve the purpose of mankind and will no longer pass. The coming results have been planned by none, have not been sought or desired by many; but, just the same, they break every link in the chain of the old political economy that was forever to bind labor in servitude to money. The present short-sighted futile war against the trusts is merely an effort to perpetuate the crumbling system of competition, and will only intensify the poverty and degradation of the people.

I raise no voice against the trusts, but would encourage them to the utmost, until the nation, schooled by experience, forms a trust of the whole people, by the people and for the people, which, once in operation, will endure to the end of time. The worst trust is the best, because in the interest of the common welfare it is guiding the millions to see that if combination can make a few brutal Mark Hannas, it can as easily make seventy millions of producers satisfied, thrifty and comfortable. The prophet of courage reads in clear, unquestioned characters the writing of the economic law upon the wall. He reads the decree that by a combination and co-operation which includes all the race in its sheltering arms is the commonwealth of the world to be formed and realized.

Socialism is treading in the wake of the trusts. Politics with the moral law squeezed out, is what the government is dealing in. The world owes every man a living—if he can get it. It depends largely on the man. If he is an ordinary voting man, he may find suicide easier than competition, and he will be much happier over there on the evergreen shore, unless he bumps up against a trust in bars and haloes. But if he has financial shrewdness, guile, Rockefeller-pleity, and a callous heart, he can keep himself very much alive on this side, driving other men to suicide, and his picture will hang in the chapel of some great university, inspiring the youthful students to emulate his shining example. It is the rich who make the poor poorer, and it is the poor who make the rich richer. The millions who have nothing make the money for the millionaires. The benevolent rich will do anything for the working class, except to get off their backs. How can men think highly, nobly, clearly, when the chief object in life is to acquire the wealth which others have produced? While the Socialists are demanding public ownership, the millionaires have already put it in practice—they own the public. The men who have created the trusts are swiftly bringing in Socialism, for they are making conditions which will force the people into this new phase of life as the only escape from slavery to the restless financial banditti.

"Christian Burial."

Here are two items taken from Chicago papers of the same date which, placed side by side, furnish a comparative estimate of the value placed upon human beings and animals in this opening year of the Twentieth century.

From Sunday morning until Tuesday night the body of Charles Hollatz lay in the front room of his home, 303 North Curtis street, because his widow was too poor to bury the remains. Then the West Chicago coroner removed the remains to the county morgue to be buried at the expense of the county.

Hollatz died without medical attendance, his wife having no money for a physician. Neither was there money for food, fuel or burial. The coroner had been notified, when the police were called by neighbors.

The police went to the house and found Mrs. Hollatz weeping in a rear room, while in an adjoining one lay the dead body. She said her husband had been afflicted the last two years with consumption and had been unable to work as a result of his weak condition. The little money used for the sustenance of the family was earned by Mrs. Hollatz. The deceased was 37 years old.

"The case was called to my attention by the police," said the County Agent. "I have sent a man to investigate the facts and relief will be given the widow."

Cleveland, O., Dec. 22.—A photograph was taken at the funeral of Gertrude, an intelligent girl who died in Johnstown, Pa., last Monday and was brought to this city for burial. The dog was the property of Mrs. W. McCarty, a member of "Eight Heels" theatrical company.

While the company was here the dog was taken sick and removed to St. John's hospital. The owner, after leaving, wired the doctor to send the animal to him. On the trip he caught cold and died.

The body was sent home and buried yesterday. Several people who had taken a liking to him were invited to the service. The owner and members of the company sent flowers, and every thing was done to have a genuine funeral.

A short passage was read from the Bible, a woman offered prayer for the soul of the dog, and the body was taken to the cemetery and committed to the ground amid a bed of flowers.

It would appear that the treacherous nature of the recent "capital and labor" harmony conference is at last dawning on the minds of the rank and file of organized labor. The Central Federated Union of New York after a stormy debate passed a motion that Sammy Gompers be asked to explain how about it. Probably the committee appointed by the conference overstepped the limit of working class credulity by installing Hanna as its chairman.

Chicago now has a municipal lodging house where men out of employment can secure a night's lodging. Should a man fail to obtain work within four successive days he will be delinquent. Thus, as is always the case under capitalism, the greater the need the fewer chances are there of those needs being met.

This is the "joyous Christmas season," but the "joy," however, is largely monopolized by the capitalist class, who alone possess the means to make it "joyous." The "joy" of the workmen is mostly confined to seeing his children laughing for bright and pretty things which he has not the means to provide.

Pictures of Protest

Verschagin's Revolutionary Convoy at the Art Institute Drip War as it Really is and Exposes the Murderous System of Capitalism. Should be Seen by Every Workman.

There are different ways of spreading the doctrine of revolt. Some do it upon the platform, others from the printed book, but Verschagin points his story on canvas. He is telling it now at the Art Institute, and every laborer in Chicago should go and read it on the wonderful canvases that are hanging there. The main point of his sermon is that war is murder and that the patriotism that leads men to take up the weapons of war is a hideous lie.

There is none of the flash and glitter and glory of the panoply of war about his pictures, or if perchance it does appear it is only as a background against which to sketch the thing it is intended to hide. His series on Napoleon's Moscow campaign is the one which first brought him fame and the hatred of the organizers of armies. Here is the world famous picture, "On the Great Road," "The Retreat," with the remnants of the "Grand Army" marching back from Moscow between banks of snow from which human hands and feet project, mingled with the bodies of horses and all the enginery of war in fearful, gruesome, diarray. "Captured," in the same series, shows Napoleon surrounded by officers, gorgeous in gold lace, elaborate uniforms and great bearskin shakos, while before these warmly wrapped yet shivering officers, kneeling, with hands bound behind them, two old gray haired peasants with uncovered heads and ragged clothing. The whole picture cries out that it is against such as these that war is ever made. The same contrast is seen again in "Incendiaries," where the richly uniformed French soldiers are shooting down a handful of ragged peasants in a military execution for supposed complicity in burning Moscow.

But not all the pictures are of the distant past. There is a whole series on the brave butchers who are now at work in the Philippines, and if they were hung in the recruiting offices I venture to say there would be a sudden falling off in enlistments. One series, "An Unfinished Letter," has attracted wide attention. The first picture, "You are hit, Sergeant!" "Yes, sir," shows a young fellow in frayed old faded uniform the sleeves of which are shrunk nearly to the elbows (as they naturally would be after a few months' service, although most pictures of war preserve the dress parade condition of man and uniform). But what strikes you at once is that there is no blood flowing from his chest. It is not the bright scarlet point that in other battle pictures serves only to give a brilliant touch of color, but a dark clammy stream that trickles, and creeps, and flows as it runs, and seeps into you as you look at it. And you start as you note that a few drops of it have fallen and dried upon the khaki trousers. The next picture shows him "In the Hospital," and it is a real hospital with its dreary cleanliness, and the face that looks up from the pillows in the next picture to dictate a letter to "Dear Beloved Mother," is emaciated and drawn with pain and you start as you see by the next in the series that "The Letter is Interrupted," and you feel the deadly choking shock of something lost as the cold dead face of the final picture tells you that the "Letter remains unfinished." Then you turn away with a whispered curse against the legalized murder that sent this boy to an untimely death.

"In the Transvaal To-day," tells you that this man lies at work on the other side of the globe. A red coated English boy is lying dead among the bushes and weeds in a lonely deserted spot, and round him with awkward, lazy movements, hops a great buzzard, while others of the same kind brood lazily overhead. Like a flash my mind went back to the dapper little recruiting agent I had met at work among the London laborers around Trafalgar square, taring them to this fate, and again I felt my anger rise against a society that rested upon such ghastly murderous foundations.

There are many others besides these. Some like the "Shows of the Himmayas," are simply and alone things of wondrous beauty that carry you for a moment out of the industrial hell in which we live, into a grander world than it has served there could ever be. But all of these are such as every Socialist should see, and before they are taken away every laborer in Chicago should have spent at least one Sunday afternoon (which is the only time they can be seen without an admission fee) among these canvas stories of beauty and rebellion.

Mayor Harrison intimates that the Policemen's Protective Organization is collecting money for purposes of corruption, an accusation which is obviously false when it is considered that there is no Mayoral election this year.

The howl in the press is still kept up over the failure of the bridgebuilders to keep their structure clean. Mentioning those much abused individuals are merely continuing to serve out the beer in their respective saloons.

Start the New Year right by getting your neighbors to subscribe for this paper.

SEEN FROM INSIDE.

How the Presentation of Christmas Gifts to Employees Looks to Those Behind the Scenes.

As might have been expected, the Christmas season has been utilized to the utmost by the capitalist press to dwell upon the philanthropic attitude of Chicago employers towards those who make their wealth possible. On the surface these reports apparently substantiate the conclusions intended to be derived from them, but seen from the inside, they present a rather different appearance.

As an illustration of the above the case of the American Express Company may be taken as an example. Every one of its employees according to the press reports received a $10 gold piece as a Christmas present from the firm. This generosity has been lauded in language that would hardly be justified if each applicant had received a hundred gold pieces instead of one.

But the matter wears another complexion altogether to those employees who have enough intelligence to understand the nature of this "Greek gift." During the month preceding Christmas these employees on account of the rush are compelled to work from 12 to 14 hours a day, and during the last week from 11 to 18 hours, for which they get NO OVERTIME whatever, and this condition has prevailed for some years. But thereby hangs a tale which may perhaps make interesting reading.

About three years ago one of the employees with a trifle more gumption and unobtuseness than the average, upon being discharged by the Company, brought suit against them for overtime and presented a bill for $100 or thereabouts. The company rushed the matter up and settled for somewhere between $300 and $400. This action caused several others to follow his example and they succeeded in extracting sums for from $25 to $50 on the same grounds. This alarmed the company, who determined at once to put an end to this seeming extortion. They brought "moral pressure" to bear upon the employees and induced them to accept $1.50 payment in full for all overtime to date. Thus "freedom of contract" was preserved. Since that time the company has been making an annual Christmas present to its employees of $5. This year a large sized kick amongst the latter who asserted that $5 was insufficient to pay for the overtime, induced the company to double the amount in order, of course, to preserve "harmony" between "capital and labor."

Just before this, the company began to show its good will by supplying the employees with supper during the late hours. Tickets, good at a certain restaurant, were distributed amongst them; the company getting a liberal discount on the purchases. The consequence was that when the employees visited this place they were neglected in favor of the cash paying customers and were generally forced to satisfy their hunger with what they could get after the former had been served. This in turn created a dissatisfaction which to some extent no doubt also explains the extra $5 peace offering presented this year.

It is in the highest degree probable that the conditions under which employees of this Express Company work, represent in the main those in other industries, where the gratitude of the wage slaves has been evoked by the presentation of a trifling sum of money at the Christmas season. Out of the swelling volume of unpaid labor which the capitalist extracts from his wage slaves during the festive season, a beggarly pittance is thrown, as one might throw a bone to a dog. In the capitalist press it takes the form of a "generous uncalculated gift, a hearty recognition of merit, for which the recipient should be duly grateful. In reality it merely represents a "sop to Cerberus," a "peace which wrings from unwilling greed, to avert friction which might interfere with a rushing business and thereby decrease profits. Those who are on the inside and have sufficient brains to look this "gift horse in the mouth," will recognize the truth of the sketch given above, though perhaps they may not be in a position to openly admit its correctness, which fortunately is not the case with—A FORMER SLAVE.

Restricting the Output.

In the opinion of Mr. Schwab "restriction of the output" is a fundamental principle of trades unionism which must be given up if harmony between labor and capital is to be restored. He seems to think that the reason for the adoption of this principle by the trades unions is to be found in a desire to provide work for a larger number of men. While this is to a slight extent may have been recognized by the trades unions, we venture to assert that it is by no means the predominant cause. The shortening of the hours of labor and the desire to lessen its intensity for the men actually employed, has far greater influence in restricting the output than any solicitude for the unemployed on the part of the trades unions. When the capitalist press dilates upon the shortcomings of the British trades unions, they bring this point out plainly enough. They don't recognize the altruistic spirit of the British workman in determining to restrict the output. They simply say he wants to loaf.

Neither the capitalist nor the "worker with the capitalist mind" have to analyze the true relation of employer and employee under the present wage system. Consequently we find them constantly wrangling about a "fair day's work" and what constitutes it, when the fact is that under existing conditions the interest of the worker is to give as little as possible in labor and get as much as possible in wages, while the interest of the capitalist is to get as much labor as possible for the least wages, and this completely explains the eternal jangling about the fair day's work, and in consequence the restriction of the output. It may be a disagreeable truth, but all truths are disagreeable which show the capitalist system as it really is.

Scab Poetry.

Ellis Wheeler Wilcox has something of a reputation as a sort of non-partisan Socialist. She is employed by the New York Journal, which talks such mild and harmless Socialism nine months in the year to catch the workmen's attention in order that it may sell them out to capitalist politicians in campaign time. Mrs. Wilcox has had two books of poems published lately. Whom did she select to publish them? No one but Conkey & Co. of Chicago, a scab house, and one of the most vicious enemies of labor in the country. This is just what might have been expected. Why? It is due to Mrs. Wilcox's ignorance of the labor movement or to her contempt for it. It is characteristic of the sort of alleged Socialism that finds its expression in the Journal—New York Worker.

A PARTING SHOT

Final Correspondence Between Assistant Postmaster Madden and E. Gaylord Wilshire.

The following correspondence which passed between Third Assistant Postmaster Madden and Comrade Wilshire, just before the latter removed his paper to Canada, may perhaps furnish some amusement for our readers. It is reprinted from the January number of Wilshire's Magazine:

Washington, D. C., Nov. 9, 1901.
Mr. E. Gaylord Wilshire, publisher of Wilshire's Monthly Magazine:
Sir.—The department has received your letter of the 1st ultimo, with relation to an application for entry to the second-class of mail matter of a new periodical published by you at New York, under the name of Wilshire's Monthly Magazine.

The various features of the case require investigation for the ascertainment of the exact facts. For that reason the department cannot comply with your request for an immediate ruling, but you may be sure that there will be no more delay than is necessary to a full and impartial investigation, for the purpose of giving to your new periodical all the rights to which it is entitled under the Postal Laws and Regulations. In the meantime you will be allowed to mail it as second-class matter, upon conditional deposit of postage at the third-class rate.

Very respectfully,
EDWIN C. MADDEN,
Third Assistant Postmaster-General.
November 10th, 1901.
Edwin C. Madden, Esq., Third Assistant Postmaster-General, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir.—Yours of the 9th inst., acknowledging mine of the 1st ultimo, which you refer to as being "with" relation to an application for second-class entry, at hand. I presume you mean "in" relation, etc. You say also that the various features of the case require investigation for the "ascertainment" of the facts. Again I infer you mean the "securing" of the facts.

I am referring to your unusual style of writing English because I must assume, judging from your previous letter, that your decision is to be based upon whether I conform to your ideas of style in expressing my thoughts in the English language. I wish to say right now that if the above letter from you in any criterion of the model you wish me to follow, I herewith refuse to comply. If I am to make a fool of myself I wish to do it in my own peculiar style, and will model my Englishness after my man's instructions. I cannot see any reason for delay on your part in coming to a decision. You simply have to decide one point. Does my magazine offend you "too much" by "advertising Wilshire too much"? You ought to be able to tell how you feel upon this subject at once.

It's purely a question of personal taste; and time cannot help a man decide whether he likes beer better than whiskey. If he doesn't know at once he never will know. Are you waiting for another number to come out? The trouble with my getting out another number is that I must pay you another thousand dollars or so simply on the chance that you may then decide if I have overstepped the dead-line of "advertising Wilshire too much." When I get out a second number how do I know you will not wait for a third, and so on indefinitely? I can tell you right now that the November number is a fair sample of what will follow. There will be plenty of "Wilshire" in all succeeding numbers to the finish. You may take that for granted, and if you are going to base your decision on that point, there is no need of any delay for "ascertainment" of facts. I want to know at once. I am not desirous of paying the United States post office several thousand dollars while you are calculating the amount of space you will allow me in my own magazine to which to advertise myself. I don't care what you decide, as I feel that no matter what your decision is, I will be the ultimate victor; but what I do wish you to do is to make up your mind and decide at once without any further dilly-dallying.

I have made all arrangements to publish Wilshire's Magazine in Canada in case you refuse me entry in the United States, and it is such as I can send me cent per pound. I will be no lower on postage account. It is unnecessary to state that there is no censorship of "Wilshire's Magazine advertising" in Canada, and that my entry at the Canadian post office is a foregone conclusion. As a matter of fact, I have already settled that point with the Canadian postal authorities. Canada being under a monarchy, you have to remember, has still some rights preserved for her citizens. Banishing me to Canada will not only fail to suppress my paper, but will also deprive the United States post office of any revenue at all for carrying it in this country. Your endeavor to get eight cents a pound out of me for circulating my paper, may result in your having to carry it absolutely free. However, your salary will go on undiminished all the same, so do not think I am trying to intimidate you.

Please don't take another ten days to tell me that you cannot decide upon my entry. Give me sudden death or liberty!

Faithfully,
E. GAYLORD WILSHIRE

Special Notice.

Don't forget the entertainment given by the Soc. Dramatic Club at the Temple Saturday Dec. 28th, 8 o'clock. Admission 10 cents, children 5 cents. Reproduced from 2 weeks ago with alterations and additions.

"The Schley case," says the Chicago Tribune, "is troubling the farmer, the mechanic, the laborer, and almost every man, woman and child in the United States." Wonder if the hundred thousand old people who were indebted to capitalist charity for a free Christmas dinner are included in this category?

LOCAL PARTY NOTES

NORTH SIDE.

The address of Comrade J. E. Smiley at the meeting held at Benefield Hall, 563 Wells street, was a treat. "The Trusts" were ably handled by the comrade, and those present enjoyed the lecture immensely. A collection was taken up and some literature sold.

The 23d ward Aldermanic convention was held last Monday at 18 Clybourn avenue, and Robert Bauer, carpenter, 363 Blackhawk street, was nominated.

Courtesy still having in their possession money for the Winter Festival or for the debate are requested to turn in money or tickets AT ONCE. All accounts must be closed.

All comrades in the North Division should attend the discussion meetings at 133 N. Clark street on Tuesday evening, also following each public meeting.

All comrades on the North Side are requested to attend these meetings as a discussion for all party members takes place.

SOUTH SIDE.

The literary and social entertainment held at the hall, 708 W. 63d street, last Friday evening, was fairly well attended. The literary and musical features were well enjoyed. The sale of baskets for the lunch was spirited, the net proceeds amounting to about $1.25. The total net proceeds of the entertainment will reach about $11.00.

Comrade Deryn spoke at the Sunday evening mass meeting; a fair-sized audience.

The organization of a branch of the Socialist Party was completed last Monday evening at the Turner Hall, on Dodson avenue and 33d street. Twenty-nine members have signed applications, and the branch has elected a full list of officers. Comrades Deryn and Brockton addressed the members of the branch, and were much honored to with close attention. The new branch has much good material and promises large results in the propaganda of Socialism.

The headquarters of the South Division of the Socialist Party, at 161 W. 63d street, is now being more thoroughly advertised than ever before, and the public meetings on Saturday and Sunday evenings are growing in interest. The plan now is to make a house to house canvass for the following nine weeks: Course of lectures on Socialism: December 13th.....Mrs. L. M. Forberg
"Does Socialism Concern Women?" December 13th.....Paul Shrover
"Socialism, the Courts and the Capitalists".....H. F. Knutson
"The ABC of Socialism".....M. Kaplan
"Society of the Impoverished".....January 11th.....B. Berber
"The Recurrence of Oppression".....January 11th.....J. H. Smiley
"The Trusts, their Origin, and End".....January 11th.....Chas. L. Brockton
"Homes vs. Tenement Houses".....January 18th.....E. W. Knox
"The Class Struggle".....January 18th.....Chas. Sand
"The Historical Phase of Socialism".....January 18th.....John Collins
"Socialism and Trades Unions".....February 1st.....A. Hame
"First Steps Towards Socialism".....February 1st.....N. A. Morris
"Non-Party vs. Party Organization".....February 1st.....J. C. Cullum
"The World Ready for Socialism".....February 1st.....Mary E. Cohen
"Public Schools".....February 1st.....W. E. McDermott
"Competition vs. Co-operation".....February 1st.....Geo. D. Evans
"Labor Politics vs. Capitalist Politics".....February 1st.....E. E. Sims
"The Advancement of Women".....February 1st.....Mrs. C. P. Reed

DISTRICT NO. 4.

At the special meeting of the Fourth District Division, five branches were represented, Nov. 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the 6th ward, and the 15th ward. It was decided to keep the argument in the gold, his expenses to be defrayed by voluntary contributions.

The organizers reported the following

In good standing in the 25th ward branches, and 15 in the 26th.

The 25th ward Aldermanic convention was called for January 12th, at 2 p. m. (Sunday), at Croft's Hall, Boston and California avenues. Town of Jefferson same time and place.

It is earnestly requested that all branches make an extraordinary effort to make this convention a success, and send a special request to each member to attend.

The 26th ward branch will hold a special meeting on Saturday, January 4, at 8 p. m., in its regular meeting place, Social Turner Hall, corner Paulina and Belmont avenues.

SAM ROBBINS,
Organizer.

TEMPLE NOTES.

On Wednesday, December 18th, Comrade Berlyn gave one of his grand talks, but his week-day lectures are not half so well-attended as they should be, and the comrades are missing a great deal.

On Thursday, December 18th, Comrade Mrs. Finsterbach talked at the ladies' regular auxiliary meeting, and was greatly appreciated.

Sunday, December 22nd, Comrade Mrs. Wentworth delivered a very interesting lecture on what Art has done for the world. We want Mrs. Wentworth again at an early date as possible, and when advertised come early to get a seat.

At the close of the Sunday evening lecture the new stage curtains which Comrade Untermyann has kindly painted for us at regular Socialist rates—two for nothing—was shown to the audience. After the handkerchiefs had been waved and the hats had safely gotten down from the ceiling, the comrades went home to get ready for another surprise.

On Saturday, December 28th, the Dramatic club gives an entertainment which promises to be very amusing. Adults 10 cents, children under 15 years 5 cents.

On Sunday, December 29th, 8 p. m., Comrade Berlyn will speak.

On Thursday, January 2d, Mrs. Woodman will speak at the ladies' meeting.

Special—On Saturday, January 4th, we will have a children's night. We want all Socialist children from all parts of the city to be present. Special entertainment, including Santa and his trophies, Punch and Judy, magic lantern, shadow works. Every child will be given a present. All under 15 years free; adults 10 cents.

25th Ward Branch.

A spirited discussion took place last Sunday evening at Socialist Educational Hall, in which comrades of widely different construction of brain aired their pet views. The trades unions were attacked and defended, the church and bible were given more than usual attention. One lovely subject of Pope Daniel De Leon created a comedy with his ridiculous remarks.

Comrade Collins, the speaker, seemed to enjoy the discussion immensely, and closed the meeting amidst cheers.

Wednesday evening meetings will begin January 3th, with Comrade Chapman as speaker. Vocal and instrumental music will be rendered at all these meetings.

Sunday afternoon, January 29th, a Sunday school festival will be held. Barney Berlyn speaks in the evening on the "Class Struggle."

Hall Meetings.

Friday, 6 p. m. Pore's Hall, corner Maxwell and Jefferson. Speaker, John Collins.

Sunday, 3 p. m. Socialist Hall, corner Milwaukee and Armitage avenues. Speaker, E. M. Stangland.

Klenke's Lecture Tour.

Jacksonville, Dec. 26th and 27th. Quincy, December 28th and 29th. Sherrard, January 2d. Cable, January 3d. Coal Valley, January 4th. Gilchrist, January 5th.

Free Speech in England.

The recent pro-Bow meeting to Birmingham, England, which was broken up by toughs, gives the capitalist press of this country an opportunity to assume a "holier than thou" attitude towards free speech in England, which to say the least is an amusing illustration of nerve and assurance. Socialists who remember the concerted attacks made by the refuse of the levee upon Socialist meetings during the presidential election, and the attitude of the capitalist press towards these outrages, will be fully able to estimate the sincerity of the strictures upon British rudeness at these pro-Bow assemblies. It would not, however, be quite exact to remind these capitalist critics that people who live in glass houses should not throw stones, for the cold fact is that in this country the ruling classes no longer depend upon mob violence for the suppression of movements that are objectionable to the powers that be.

A carefully and secretly organized press censorship is found more effective in this respect. A few stupid or pliable tools in the post office, to act as censors of revolutionary literature, a well-trained staff of editorial writers and journalists who hold their jobs through their ability to distort, falsify or suppress matter which the exploiting classes disapprove of, a press bureau committed wholly to the interests of capitalism, these weapons have been found far more serviceable in the suppression of free speech than any irresponsible mob could possibly become. The only justification for the actions of the capitalist press in the fact that their methods of suppressing it are out of date and antiquated, when compared with the improved machinery used here for the same purposes.
